

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

P A R T I.

It is a well-known, and yet remarkable fact, that from the higher description of schools in this country, both public and private, an ENGLISH DICTIONARY, and, from the former also, an English Grammar, are books that have hitherto been excluded. The Grammars of the learned languages have been the only introductions to a grammatical knowledge of our own speech, and the practice of rendering from a dead to a living tongue, and back from the living to the dead, has been the sole scholastic introduction to an acquaintance with the significations (as they are called) of English words.

The reason for the non-admission of a Dictionary may have been, that our literature has not yet produced a work that could, in any material degree, contribute to the improvement of a student, who had made any progress in his course of classical learning; much less to the discipline and exercise of his mind in the completion of a liberal education.

The only work, that even professes to comprise within its plan that degree and that kind of knowledge, which are demanded for youth of riper years, is the Abridgment of the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson. Why, it may be asked, is not this Abridgment a common manual in our schools and colleges? One reason unquestionably is, that it has not the slightest pretension to the character of a book in which the words are deduced from their originals, and their different meanings explained; and another, that it is burthened with an accumulation of matter which can serve for no other purpose than to perplex and mislead.

Though its pages may be said to contain explanations of a copious assemblage of popular usages, yet it is manifest that these are not only without dependence upon an etymological or intrinsic meaning, but even without reference or allusion to its existence. In the succession of these explanations, no attempt is observable at order or connexion: they are not explanations of the word solely; they ever include the meaning of some other word or words in the sentence, or, indeed, of the whole context.

This mode of interpretation might convey some degree of information in the larger volumes, to those who would take the trouble to peruse the quotations; but it totally disqualifies the work from an Abridgment, containing the interpretations only: for—unaccompanied by these quotations, there is a collection of significations, falsely so called, of which it is a perfect impossibility even to conjecture, much less to comprehend, the intendment. Thus, when, for instance, we are told that the word, to Fall, means, “to die by violence—to be born—to be determined to some particular direction—to enter into any new state of body or mind:”—or that Absolution is, 1. Acquittal; 2. Remission of sins, and 3. Delivery, Pronunciation, it will require an intellect most abundantly stored, and practically familiar, with all the varieties of the use and abuse of speech to discern in what connexion these words can be so applied.

Another evil, inseparable from Johnson’s mode of specific interpretation, is this, that instances of usage may be produced to which not one of his interpretations can apply. Thus, in the verb Absolve: when the old reformer, Joy, proceeds to “absolve a chapter of Daniel,” or even when Sir Thomas Brown, of whose writings Johnson has made so large and constant use, tells us that “he shall not absolve the doubt,” there is no specific interpretation that will apply to this usage—and it need scarcely be added, for this is a common case, there is no comprehensive explanation that will include it.

At this moment the English public appear to feel themselves awakened from a long dream of heedlessness, to the proper cultivation of the youthful mind. Whether they are enlightened to a just perception of the method, which they ought in every respect to pursue in future; of the extent, to which their plan of change should be carried, and of the degree of importance, which should be attached to each department of literature and science in a course of systematic education, is far more than the most sanguine expectant will yet venture to decide.

The two colleges, which within these few years have been established in this metropolis, have made the English language and English literature a formal and distinct branch of instruction. It is to be hoped that so praiseworthy an example will be promptly followed, and that every school or college, aiming either wholly or partially at similar objects, will, each suitably to its means and station, adopt an innovation, which has already been deferred too long.

In preparing this Dictionary, I have not confined its utility to that of a manual for immediate reference, under the pressure of a slight occasional difficulty. This, I acknowledge to be an object, which ought to be, and which, I will venture to say, has very carefully been kept in view: but it is not, I repeat, the object to which it is restricted. I have endeavoured to construct a book that may enable and invite a young scholar to research, compare, and discriminate.

As prominent characteristic features of this book, then, it may be proper to remark—That the Explanations are founded upon the Etymologies: that the intrinsic meaning is thus explained: and that the various usages or applications are then deduced.

In the next place:—between the mode adopted in this Dictionary, and that which has been adhered to by the composers of Dictionaries in all languages, dead or living, there is this striking and important difference. In the latter, the practice has ever been to arrange all the words in strict alphabetical order, and to explain each word of each family of words in the place in which it may thus chance to stand. Thus, in Dr. Johnson, e. g. To abstract, the v. is first interpreted: then abstract, the adj., and abstract, the n., followed by nine subderivatives, in unbroken succession,* terminating in ed, edly, edness, er, ion, ive, ively, ly, ness: all in variety of phrase to conform each to its grammatical name of substantive, or adjective, or adverb. And here again, even upon this procedure, the mode of specific interpretation pursued by Johnson, entails peculiar imperfections and inconsistencies upon his Abridgment.

* In Abstain, abstinent, &c. the succession is broken by the intervention of other words, to preserve alphabetical order.

Of the verb abstract, for instance, there are four interpretations; of the other parts of speech, two have also four, two have three, and five have one interpretation only: an inequality for which, without the quotations, we cannot even venture the hazard of a guess.

In the present Dictionary, all this repetition of partial explanation is rejected, as needless and burdensome: the word and its subderivatives, or rather the terminations of these subderivatives, are classed and braced together, and one full and careful explanation is given of the verb To abstract, with an especial denotation of a consequential usage, to which the adjective and noun have been applied. And this is the method throughout.*

The reader can have had no difficulty in comprehending that the terminations, ed, edly, edness, &c., enumerated in a preceding paragraph, are to be supposed, affixed, and read as if affixed, to the word Abstract: thus, abstract-ed, abstract-edly, abstract-edness: and in full reliance upon the palpable intelligibility of this severance of the terminating syllables from their chief, I have adopted it in manner and form so conspicuous to the eye, throughout this Dictionary. And I have done so, because, in the first place,—thereby is obtained a considerable saving of valuable room; and, in the second, because it is of great advantage in displaying the regular or irregular formation of the words, which these terminations are so uniformly employed to construct. Their course will not always run so even as in the above example; but, by the aid of a few general directions, and of a little typographical dexterity, there is no reason to apprehend the occurrence of embarrassment for a single moment.

An explanation of each of the terminations will be found in its proper place; which I must earnestly commend to the serious attention of the youthful scholar, who may be urged by any laudable desire to dip below the surface. He will there find relief from any perplexity, which the non-observance of the ordinary plan of individual interpretation may seem to threaten, and a steady light will be thrown upon his efforts to improve himself in the acquisition of just principles of language. The prefixes, and that species of composition effected by the hyphen, "in which our language is most hardy and happy," will require and reward his considerate attention.

* Sometimes, at the occasional expense of strict alphabetical order; e.g. Abstinent will be found with abstain. See Note, p. v.; and see a List of such words, pp. xxi—xxiii.

The space occupied by the plan, thus rejected, has been appropriated to etymology, of which all other English Dictionaries may be pronounced to be entirely destitute. The etymological researches are not so intermixed as to obtrude impediments to a facility of reference with an instant view to explanation of meaning. Each department is so printed and placed as to catch the notice of the enquirer; who may thus seize, I will not say what he wholly needs, but what he partially wishes, to the neglect of that, which at the moment he may not feel disposed to include in his research. I have thought it might be of advantage in scholastic exercises to render into Latin, as well as into English, those Anglo-Saxon words, which are necessarily introduced in the etymological division.

As a further assistance to the student of his native tongue, I have endeavoured by reference to show the etymological connexion of words with each other. It may be matter of surprise to find, under the common English word hand, a reference to prize: but, if that reference be pursued, the history of a numerous family of words, received by us from the French, will be traced to a northern root implanted upon the shores of Italy;—a genealogy, I believe, which has never been before explained.

There will be found subjoined to the Etymology of each simple term, those prefixes or prepositions with which it is used in composition: take as an instance—Able: after the Etymology;—Dis, en, in, un, denote that certain compounds, formed by these prefixes, are in use, and that they will be found in their proper places in the body of the Dictionary. Again, from the Latin fact-um, we have fact; and we have also the compounds—af-fect, con-fect, counter-feit, and others; and of this the reader is apprized, by the prefixes—ad, con, counter, &c. subjoined to the Etymology of the word fact. This, I think, will be serviceable in itself; and to those who desire to prosecute their enquiries, and compare the number of subderivatives which we have in current speech, from each compound, it presents an encouragement in the ease and despatch with which a pursuit so commendable may be continued. From the compounds effect, and infect,—to illustrate my meaning once more by an example, he will find that we have a most unequal portion of these subderivatives.* Why, it may be asked, is this? Are these terms necessary to us in the one case and not so in the other; or, are we labouring under a deficiency with the means before us to supply it? These and other questions may suggest themselves, and various reflections occur of an improving tendency.

As an Etymological Dictionary, I may affirm, that my own is the first that has been attempted in the English language, since the publication of the works of Skinner and Junius; and that it is the only one which professes to combine with etymology an exact explanation of meaning, and a copious deduction of usages. In preparing the etymological division, it may be proper to remark,—all the learned labours of preceding etymologers have been laid most carefully under contribution, for the purpose of presenting to my more lettered readers the substance of those pages through which I had been myself compelled to toil, in such a light as to enable them to form opinions for themselves. I have, indeed, put within their reach—A COMPENDIOUS MANUAL to many ponderous folios. Of the instances in which I have ventured to propose original etymologies, either in opposition to preceding authority, or where preceding authors were avowedly at fault, it does not become me to say more, than that in proposing them I hope to escape the charge of temerity.

As an Explanatory Dictionary, I have only further to remark, that the collection of usages is, I believe, as full and accurate as any other Dictionary of the English language can pretend to supply.

In orthography, as we ridiculously name our modes of spelling, whether right or wrong, I make no pretensions to original projects of reform. Much, I am aware, might indeed be done with no great violence of innovation: and in their proper order will be found suggestions for some changes, which I think would be changes for the better.

The composer of a Greek or Latin Dictionary may have before him all the writings of all the Greek and Roman writers which have escaped the ravages of time. He knows the era at which they lived, the state of their language at the respective eras; he knows their character, and, consequently, their authority for the words, and the usages, to which he may wish to give the sanction of their name. He can distinctively mark the poetic from the prosaic; the pure and genuine from the impure and corrupt.

The compiler of a Dictionary of a modern tongue, must commence his labours with the oppressing consciousness that completeness to this extent is by him unattainable. No protraction of one man's life, no diligence of one man's learning, could read and select from the books that have been written;—no living authority can control the wilfulness of change; no living sagacity can provide for the advancement of literature and science. A sound and perspicuous scheme of etymology and interpretation, may supply a guide for the addition of new terms; but it cannot prescribe a limit. Our greatest and most manifest existing abuses pervade the terminations: to correct old errors is perhaps beyond our power; to avoid an increase of the new may be within it. Again, then, I request attention to the remarks on our terminations; and on the means which they present for an augmentation of the vocabulary.

There have been admitted into this Dictionary—1st. Certain words now antiquated, and considered to be obsolete; and these have been introduced, because they were useful for etymological research.

2d. Some pedantic Latinisms, scholastic and other exotic terms; and to these a place has been given, not only that they may exhibit the practical usages of our ancestors, but that they may operate as warnings to the bad taste and indiscriminating zeal for verbal novelties, so lamentably conspicuous at the present day.

Such words, and others, that seemed to deserve notice for any rarity or peculiarity of usage, are distinguished by a reference to the name of the author, in whose writings they have been found, and from which, in the "NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY,"* quotations have been made. It will thus appear, upon what authority they rest.

It is incumbent upon me to add, that with respect to terms in art and science, I can lay no claims to distinction. My opinion ever has been, and still is, that a Dictionary of such terms ought to form an entirely separate work; that it is the appropriate task of men who are theoretically and practically experienced in the usages of words peculiar to each branch of art and science. Glossaries of such terms, in some single departments, have been long before the public, and in late years their number has been considerably increased. The period is probably not very remote, at which a well-arranged and digested volume of scientific and technical terms will lay just claim to the character of a work of general utility.

The range that has been taken in the collection of the materials, from which this volume has been composed, I have no wish to bring into invidious comparison with that which has been attempted by any predecessor, either at home or abroad. Some, and those not the least important portions, remained if not unentered, yet certainly unexplored, until I proceeded upon an enterprize of discovery;—in which I have been successful very far beyond my anticipations of success.

If I may not rely with assured trust, still I may be suffered to encourage a fervent and unpresumptuous hope, that this book will not be adjudged unworthy of the character to which it aspires: that it will be received as a volume carefully, and not unsuccessfully, adapted to the use of all those who consult a Dictionary with no other view than hastily to remove the difficulty of the moment: that it will be welcomed as a convenient manual for the more advanced scholar, and as a sufficient one for the general purposes of the youthful student: and that not only by the English, but by the foreign scholar, and foreign student, whether a native of northern or of southern climes, the etymological portion of the book, subjoined in each instance to the explanatory, will be fairly estimated as at least a laudable attempt to supply a deficiency in the lexicography of Europe.

PART II.

It is by the just and skilful application of old rules to new cases, that we make advances in knowledge. Such rules are for the most part distinguished both for comprehension and simplicity. What can be more pre-eminently so, for both these characteristic qualities, than the famed one of Newton—"That no more causes of phenomena are to be admitted than are necessary to explain them?"

It was by employing this rule in his reasoning against the doctrine of innate ideas, that Locke established, by "unanswerable argument," a truth, which had before subsisted only in the form of an assertion.

If, however, we make advances by the use of these rules, we as certainly terminate our progress when we cease to apply them. Locke ceased to apply that very rule by which he had been enabled to triumph over a long-cherished error—1st, When he proposed his doctrine of abstract and complex ideas; and 2dly, when he adopted the scholastic dogma, that "Is, and Is NOT, are the general marks of the mind, affirming and denying."*

Upon the former topic enough has been said by other writers: upon the latter my earnestness in behalf of Philology compels me to hazard a brief comment. We never think of describing the dissection of a human body to be an act, an operation, of the human mind. We call it, and properly call it, Chir-urgery, or Surgery—a manual operation; an operation of the hand: the hand and the knife, (that complex apprehension, as the Logical Professors of Oxford would still teach us to call it,) are the instruments; they move, they act, they operate. The mind undoubtedly perceives, superintends, and directs, every movement, act, and operation: equally so is it the ruler of every voluntary motion—of mastication, of deglutition;—these however we assign to their appropriate organs. Apply this to the mind, and its instrument—language. Could the mind, “languageless,” affirm or deny? Is not language the indispensable instrument; the moving, acting, operating instrument? If it be—affirmation and negation are operations of language.

If these observations be just, Logic itself requires a foundation far different from that upon which it so mainly rests—as in the Oxford “COMPENDIUM,” so in the “ELEMENTS” prescribed by the University of London to Candidates for honours in the Faculty of Arts. That foundation Philology must lay. And the University will soon be convinced that the study of Grammar or Philology is an indispensable preliminary to Logic. They will, I think, act wisely if they return to the Trivium of the Schools;* not, indeed, to treat the different branches after the manner of the Schools, but in such a manner as to ensure the attainment of “another sort of logic and critic, than what we have been hitherto acquainted with.”†

To proceed to my more immediate purpose. No rule is more plain or more generally admitted, than that all causes are adapted and commensurate to their effects. And, as speech is the immediate effect of organic powers, common to all men of all ages and all countries of the world, it does not seem to have required any very extraordinary stretch of philosophical curiosity to institute an inquiry into the connexion of the one with the other, as into the connexion of cause and effect. Skinner and Wachter have both recognised some words, and those the parents of a numerous and powerful progeny, as sprung from this physical origin: and the President de Brosses, nearly three-quarters of a century ago, presented to the world an entire work on the Mechanical Formation of Speech.‡

De Brosses lays down the principles upon which he proposes to construct his theory with great formality, and with much perspicuity and precision. He may be said to have proved, what Skinner and Wachter had before affirmed as their belief; * but, as far as the theory is concerned, he does not appear to have made any advance. The reason of his failure seems to be this: he ceased to apply his own principles; he deserted them when the first difficulty presented itself. If those principles were correctly urged to establish the origin of the names appropriated in so many languages to the male and female parent, he ought to have continued to urge them, for the purpose of showing that every distinct organic utterance must have been a name, a word; must have had a meaning; and he ought to have prosecuted his inquiry, in search at least, if not to the discovery, of those words.

If the organic utterances represented by the characters 'B' and 'M' had a distinct meaning, so had each organic utterance represented by each other character or letter of the alphabet.

If the organic utterances 'B' and 'M' still subsist as words having a distinct meaning, so in all probability does every other organic utterance, represented by its respective character, 'C,' 'G,' 'D,' 'T,' &c. throughout the alphabet; and, to the discovery of these words, the researches of this very learned and ingenious writer ought to have been invariably directed.

It is to this object, that in a Preliminary Essay, accompanying the NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY, in two quarto volumes, I think I may venture to say, I have steadily adhered.

It is not necessary for me to repeat here, what I have argued there. In speaking of each (consonantal) letter as it occurred, (in this book,) I have suggested certain results of my researches; and, under certain words in the Dictionary, references will occur to awaken the attention of the reader to the subject, to admonish him that it may be worthy of his serious pursuit, and to stimulate his zeal by producing some slight evidence that success may be within his attainment.

With respect to the names of these consonantal letters, I must observe, that we pronounce some,—those commonly called Mutes, with the vocal breathing audible before the action of those organs which are necessary to the pronunciation of the letter, as ef, el, &c.; and others—with the vocal breathing audible after the organic action, as be, ce, (ke), &c.* Each and every of them requires, however, for its complete utterance, a breathing (precedent), a closure or collision of some of the organs of speech, and an apertion or separation of them, with a breathing (subsequent). Thus, each and every of those breathings may correspond with each and every of the sounds represented by the letters, a, e, o, u. Let this mode of pronunciation be applied in reading the following table, in which the cognate letters are arranged together:—

* See Ch. vi. § 11, et seq.

---	--	---

We thus become acquainted with a class of words, upon which I would impose the name of Convertible Radicals: occurring in the same, and also in different languages; e. g. L. Ab; Eng. Be or bi; Gr. Ik-εiv, ki-εiv, to co-me, to go. L. Am-are, Gr. Ma-εiv. I must refer for a fuller exposition to the Essay; and also to the different Letters in the Dictionary, for further instances of Literal Radicals.

The sum of my conclusions is this:—

B 1. There are the Labials B and M, with the Cognates of the P former, P, F, V,—in all, five of our acknowledged consonants, F accounted for;—as the first articulate audible indications of V the existence of a sentient being;—as giving names correlatively to sentient beings;—as denoting their primary sensations, and motions or actions.

C 2. There are the cognate pairs C (K), G (Γ), and D, T, with G the nasal N, denoting the three distinct modes of action, D effecting increase;—solid, superficial and numerical; with T primary sensations, and motions or actions, immediately N deduced from them.

L 3. There is then the Liquid, as it is called, L, which denotes position,—relative to the erect position of the human body.

R 4. There is next, R, which denotes position,—relative to the structure and form of the human body. And lastly,

S 5. S and Z; to seize, to cheese; to see, to say:—to take Z or perceive; to take, to teach (to another).†

* It is worthy of remark, that our terminations ed, en, er, eth, &c. were not only written with the different vowels, thus, ad, id, od, an, in, &c.; but were also written de, ne, the.

† See each of the Letters in the Dictionary.

It may lessen our reluctance to believe that means apparently so scanty should be adequate to the production of a structure so complex and multiform as human language, if we reflect, that all the operations of numerical, algebraical, and geometrical calculation or computation may be performed by the instrumentality of two simple signs: and that, by the instrumentality of two simple and of two complex signs, aided by a few collective formulæ, they are actually performed; and that thus discoveries so stupendous in the natural or physical sciences have been accomplished.*

More than this concise exposition I do not imagine to be here required of me;—for more than this is not necessary, either to the use of the Dictionary, or to understand my meaning, when I speak of the Letters as Literal Roots.

The discussion falls peculiarly within the province of writers upon "Comparative Philology;" it involves questions which demand a solution, previous to, or at least in inseparable alliance with, the prosecution of their speculations into the affinities of language. To their considerate investigation I fervently recommend it; begging them to bear in mind,—a fact that seems too generally to be disregarded,—that radical affinities, or even radical identities, are not alone sufficient to prove an immediate derivation. I must also beg of them to keep carefully in view, in all their reasonings,—1. That these primary organic or elemental sounds would form the monosyllabic words of ancient tongues: 2. That these sounds or words, though of themselves few in number, become, by the operations of combination and permutation, sufficiently numerous to supply the infinitesimal diversities of all the languages of the earth: 3. That with respect to the Prefixes and Suffixes, more especially, their fewness renders it matter rather of reasonable expectation than of surprise, that they should present themselves conspicuously in distant languages:

* Hobbes (and his words deserve to be well weighed by modern Professors of Logic) writes thus:—"Per ratiocinationem autem intelligo computationem. Computatio vero est plurium rerum simul additarum summam colligere; vel una re ab alia detracta, cognoscere residuum. Ratiocinari igitur idem est, quod addere et subtrahere, vel si quis adjungat his multiplicare, et dividere, non abnuam: cum multiplicatio idem sit quod æqualium additio; divisio quod æqualium quoties fieri subtractio. Recidit itaque ratiocinatio omnis ad duas operationes animi—additionem et subtractionem."—Computatio sive Logica, pt. i. c. 1.

4. That the simple personal pronouns (so called) are the same organic or elemental sounds or words—so, few in number; and that they in different languages being required and employed for the same necessary purposes—both in their individuate character—distinguishing persons,—and in their incorporate capacity—forming the personal terminations of verbs—may reasonably be expected to retain, under every variety of change, distinguishable features of a common origin.

It is proper for me still to mention, that in proposing my Etymologies I have been somewhat bolder in this Volume than I had dared to be in my larger Work. Exercise having given me, as I presume, a greater portion of dexterity in the management of my weapons, I have felt less deficient in courage to use them.

I have in a variety of instances referred with greater confidence to Gothic roots for Latin words: and I have felt myself the more satisfied in so doing, because I have almost uniformly found that where I have so done, the etymologists, if not admitting themselves to be wholly dissatisfied with their own conclusions, had abundant reason to do so.

I have been bolder in my references to primal radicals, in cases where it would be rash to contend for an immediate etymological descent; and have thus been enabled to put more frequently to the test the result of a change of the cognate letters in different tongues. I have pursued the same course in applying to the decomposition of compound words the fact of which I have spoken under certain letters, (B and C, for instance,) namely, that those letters are significant prefixes; and that when prefixed they readily unite in pronunciation with certain succeeding consonants.

For all my offences in so doing, and for many too serious offences of omission and commission, both in this and in my former Work, I must be content to throw myself upon the equitable censure of the Public.

END OF PREFACE.

PAST TENSES:

FORMED BY CHANGE OF THE CHARACTERISTIC VOWEL OR DIPHTHONG.

In English (or Anglo-Saxon) the past tense is formed by changing the characteristic vowel or diphthong; and this past tense was also commonly used as a past participle: * it was also participialized by the addition of ed or en indifferently: and besides these, they formed this past participle by adding these terminations ed, en, to the verb itself; and these past participles they again used as a past tense.

B. Jonson distributed our verbs into two conjugations: "the first fetching the time past from the present, by adding ed:" and this he said was "the most usual forming of the word."

The second,† turning the present into time past by the change of the letters, namely of vowels only—that is, either of simple vowels or diphthongs,—or of consonants also.

Professor Grimm has distributed the Teutonic verbs into two classes, mainly corresponding with the conjugations of B. Jonson. Those of the first conjugation (to which our grammarians give the name of regular) constitute Grimm's weak class; and those of the second (to which our grammarians give the name of irregular,—with how little propriety will appear from what is above stated) constitute Grimm's strong class: and he considers this mode of inflexion the more ancient of the two.

But—1. How is it that time past can (to use the expression of B. Jonson) be fetched from the present by adding ed? (Is there a present time in the verb from which it can be fetched?) 2. How can the mere change of one vowel into another effect a change of time present into past; or by any means effect a denotation of time? That earnestness in behalf of Philology which I have already professed, impels me to hope that these questions will hereafter be brought within the studies of candidates for Matriculation at the University of London.

It is not usual to introduce into Dictionaries the past tenses or participles which appertain to B. Jonson's first conjugation: but those of the second usually are inserted; and as such is not the case in the present work, a list of them is here given. Some contracted forms are intermixed, marked *.

Abode,	abide.	Crew,	crow.
Bore, born,	bear.	*Crept,	creep.

Came,	come.	(Glode,)	glide.

* Dr. Lowth, not being aware of this, condemns such expressions as I had wrote, it was wrote, in Addison and writers of his time, as encroachments: they were assuredly not so then; that is, not encroachments upon usage, whatever they might be now:—a contrary usage having long prevailed.

† He arranges words of this second conjugation under three divisions, by his editors improperly called—conjugations.

A SYNOPTICAL TABLE OF ENGLISH ELEMENTARY SOUNDS.*

"This may be the place to remark the extreme imperfection of our language in its representation of vowels and consonants. We have six letters which we call vowels, each of which, however, represents a variety of Sounds quite distinct from each other; and while each encroaches on the functions of the rest, a great many very good simple vowels are represented by binary or even ternary combinations. On the other hand, some single vowel letters represent true diphthongs, (as the long sound of i in alike, and that of u in rebutts;) consisting of two distinct simple vowels pronounced in rapid succession; while, again, most of what we call diphthongs are simple vowels, as bleat, thief, lead, &c. This will render an enumeration of our English elementary Sounds, as they really exist in our language, no matter how written, not irrelevant. We have therefore assembled, in the following synoptical table, sufficient examples of each to render evident their nature; accompanied with occasional instances of the corresponding Sounds in other languages. The syllables which contain the Sounds intended to be instanced are printed in italics, where words of more than one syllable are instanced.

1. { — Rook; Julius; Rude; Poor; Tomb; Wound; Wig; Fruit; Ouvrir (Fr.)
    { — Good; Cushion; Cuckoo; Rund (Ger.); Gusto (It.)
2. Spurt; Assert; Dirt; Virtue, Dove; Double; Blood; Learn.
3. Hole; Toad.
4. { — All; Caught; Sought; Broth; Broad.
    { — Hot; Comical; Kommen (Ger.)
5. Hard; Braten (Ger.); Charlatan (Fr.)
6. Laugh; Task.
7. Lamb; Fan; That.
8. Hang; Bang; Twang.
9. Hare; Hair; Heir; Were; Pear; Hier (Fr.); Lehren (Ger.)
10. Lame; Tame; Crane; Faint; Layman; Même (Fr.); Städchen (Ger.)
11. Lemon; Dead; Said; Any; Every; Friend; Beaser (Ger.); Eloigner (Fr.)
12. Liver; Diminish; Persevere; Believe; Sturgeon.
13. Peep; Leave; Believe; Yoke; Cycloped; Sieben (Ger.); Coguille (Fr.)
14. S; Sibylus; Cipher; the last vowel and the first consonant.

TRUE DIPHTHONGS.

1. Life. The Sounds No. 5 and 13, or No. 2 and 13, alurred as rapidly as possible, produce our English i, which is a real diphthong.
2. Brow; Plough; Laufen (Ger.) The vowel sound No. 5 quickly followed by No. 1.
3. Oil. Käsen (Ger.); No. 4 succeeded by No. 13.
4. Rebuke; Yew; You. No. 13 succeeded by No. 1.
5. Yoke. No. 13 succeeded by No. 3.
6. Yeang; Yearn; Heat; Hera. No. 13 succeeded by No. 2, more or less rapidly.

* The consonants present equal confusion. They may be generally arranged in three classes—sharp Sounds, flat ones, and indifferent or neutral; the former two having a constant relationship or parallelism to each other; thus:—

SHARP CONSONANTS.—S. sell, cell; σ (as we will here denote it), shame, sure, schirm (Ger.); θ. thing; F. fright, enough, phantom; K. king, coin, quiver; T. talk; P. papa.

FLAT CONSONANTS.—Z. zenith; casement; ç. pleasure; jardin (Fr.); ð the th in the words the, that, thou; V. vile; G. good; D. duke; B. dabe.

NEUTRAL CONSONANTS.—L. lily; M. manana; N. nanny; ŋ. hang; to which we may add the nasal N in gas, Ætina, Dnieper, (which, however, is not properly an English Sound); R. rattle; H. hard.

COMPOUND CONSONANTS.—C, or Tc. church, cicerone (It.), and its corresponding flat sound J. or Dç. jeet, gender; X. extreme, Xerxes; ç. exasperate, exalt, Xerxes; &c. &c.

"We have here a scale of 13 simple vowels and 21 simple consonants, 34 in all; which are the fewest letters with which it is possible to write English. But on the other hand, with the addition of two or three more vowels, and as many consonants, making about 40 characters in all, every known language might probably be effectually reduced to writing, so as to preserve an exact correspondence between the writing and pronunciation; which would be one of the most valuable acquisitions, not only to philologists but to mankind; facilitating the intercourse between nations, and laying the foundation of the first step towards a universal language, one of the great desiderata at which mankind ought to aim by common consent."

Obs.—The gross redundancies and deficiencies of our Alphabet are notorious; and the omnifarious irregularities of our pronunciation—national and provincial—are equally so. And yet it is through the medium of this Alphabet, and under the influence of this pronunciation—that we are introduced to an acquaintance with languages never before reduced to writing. And this by men, acting upon no preconceived uniformity of system, but each guided by his own ear, and pursuing his own method of presenting to the eye, what his ear has heard. Much mischief, totally unforeseen by the authors of it, and for which it will be difficult to find a remedy, has already been done, and will still be done. Some good may perhaps be effected by calling attention to the subject. And this call will be more likely to be listened to, when I add that the Author of the preceding Synopsis very zealously unites in my desire to raise it.

TERMINATIONS.

I. Those employed in inflecting different parts of Speech.

1. Substantive.—We form a genitive or possessive case by adding s to the substantive; formerly written es,* and more anciently is and ys.
Wallis calls this a possessive adjective, denying to our substantive any difference of cases.
The same es forms the plural of substantives. We have a few also in en,* (more anciently written in, yn, and un;) we had more, and in some cases both es and en were used.
B. Jonson calls those in es, substantives of the first declension; and those in en, of the second.
2. Adjective.—For comparison of adjectives we use er* and est.*
3. Pronouns.—Besides the above genitive termination es (or se), we have in the oblique case em or im.
4. Verbs.—We form the second person singular by adding est; the third, by es or eth, also formerly written the: the persons of the plural in former times, till about the time of Hen. VIII., by en (or ne).

II. Those employed in forming Words.

1. Of English Origin.—Ed, en, and ig, are our peculiar adjective terminations; the two former are also participial terminations.
Other adjectives are compound words; e. g. those ending in full, less, ly, (contracted from like), ish, some, wise, ward.
2. Adverbs.—These we form by the terminations ly and wise.
3. Substantives of English Origin.—Our common terminations for the agent are er, ster (ester, or yster); and for the action, ing† (the A. S. ung).
The Diminutives:—let, et; dle, tle, le; kin, ling.
The Compounds:—dom, hood, or head, ness, ship, (also monger, rick, wick.)
Add to these—substantive nouns—formed upon our past participles;—and upon the third person singular of the pres. indicative—ending in th.
4. Adjectives, from the Greek.—ac, ic.
5. Adjectives, from the Latin.—ble, (able, eble, ible, contr. ile), ac-ious, ac-ious, ic-ious, oc-ious; al; an, ane, any; en, ene, ine; and, end; ant, ent; ar, art, arious, ory, orious; ate, ete, ite; ous, ouser, ose; ure, and ive.‡

* This mark denotes that the termination is applied to other purposes.

† Dr. Whately is aware, that we have two terminations in ing, which ought to be carefully distinguished; but not adverting to the origin of this, from the A. S. forming substantives, and consequently general terms, he gives to this class of words the title of IMPERATIVE.

‡ It may be proper to remark here, that we have only FUTURE and VENTURE, from the Latin in urus; and a very scanty supply of the Latin in dus.—Legend, Reverend, Dividend, Præbend, Memorandum; and a few of our own coinage,—Deodand, Multiplicand, Sutrahend, and Creðenda.

6. Substantives, from the Latin.—ACY, AGE, AL; ANCE, ANCY; AR, ARY, ER, ERY; OR, OUR, ORY; BLE; IVE; MEN, MENT, MONY; ION, TY, IX, ESS.

7. Substantives, from the Greek.—IC, ISM, IST.

8. Verb, from the Latin.—FY. And

9. Verb, from the Greek.—IZE.

It is not necessary to enumerate the Prefixes, which we have adopted from the Latin and Greek. Our own are, A, BE, EN, FORE, MIS, NON, OUT, OVER, UN, UP, WITH.

The Etymology and Explanation of both prefixes and terminations will be found in the Dictionary.

The terminations are the materials for the formation of that class of words, which, in the Preface, are distinguished by the name of Sub-derivative. It is by their aid that great addition has been continually made, is still making, and will hereafter be made, to the copiousness of our vocabulary.

It may be remarked, that to our own adjective terminations FULL, LESS—to those from the Latin, ous, ive—it is the habit of our language to add our adverbial and substantive terminations ly and ness; and it may fairly be concluded, that to do this is allowable in all cases, unless an especial reason should appear to the contrary. Our vocabulary, authenticated by the usage of approved writers, though very copious, seems still to be deficient in this respect; but no sensible writer will hesitate to use his own understanding, and let his own discretion guide him. His ear must not be disregarded. It will direct him in the choice of terminations, when two of equal force present themselves. I may add, that no writer of the present era has hesitated; and that numerous words, which will stand the test of time, may be found in the pages of our cotemporaries, which ought hereafter to be collected and preserved for the columns of our dictionaries.* This observation applies to other terminations, and also to our prefixes.

N.B.—In general these terminations are added to the entire word; except—

1.—Silent e final is omitted before terminations beginning with a vowel; e.g. Abate, abat-er; compile, compil-er: so also Blam-able, &c. &c. but not peac-able, courag-ous, &c.; c and g would change their sound.

2.—An accentuated consonant final is repeated, if the accent be retained; so also sometimes an unaccented, i.e. when it is pronounced; e.g. Abêt, abêt-tor; abhor, abhor-rer; and Travel, travel-ler; libel, libel-lous.

3.—The final y is changed into i, before every other vowel than i, except when the y itself is preceded by a vowel; e.g. Carry, carr-i-eth; play, play-eth; but not carr-i-ing: and, to avoid the same repetition of i, we write Tie, ty-ing, &c. &c. Before terminations beginning with a consonant, y is changed into i; as, Happy, happ-ily.

In Judg-ment, abridg-ment, acknowledg-ment, (lodg-ment?) it is not unusual to omit the final e, the d being allowed to soften the succeeding g. The Fr. in their corruption, Juger, jugement, drop the d of the It. Giudicare, giudicamento, (from the L. Judicare,) and our ancestors followed their example, (see Judge); but the d soon gained its present place. In the other words it is altogether an intruder, admitted, perhaps, for the sake of uniformity.

A

A, æ. The vowel a is framed by an emission of the breath betwixt the tongue and the concave of the palate, the tongue itself being put in a concave posture and removed from the palate. It is the first vocal sound uttered by infants, and is thus the first audible sign of life, (Gr. A-ειν, ha-lare, to breathe.)—Ab, the Lat. pr. is written, in other languages, with the cognate letters, p, f, v. Thus, in Go. Af; A. S. Of; D. Dan. and Sw. Af; Ger. Ab. The Gr. Απο is also written αφ;—in the twelve tables ab is written af. Ab, and these cognates, are the written sign of the sound organically produced when the breathing (a) is intercepted by the closure of the lips. Correspondent to the L. Ab is the Eng. By, anciently written be, bi; and these are the written sign of the sound organically produced by prolonging the breathing after the aperture of the lips. These words, then, ab, by, as first organic sounds of living beings, are extended to denote be-ing generally; that be-ing or bi-ding, which any thing has, being; the beginning, source, origin, cause of being; that be-ing or bi-ding which, whence or from which, where or when, motion or action begins or commences. And thus we find Ab, ab-a, ab-ba, ba, ba-da, pa, papa, fa, va, are applied to the fa-ther or pa-rent, the source of life, and that some are reciprocated to the child (the babe, the boy), from whom they are heard.

In Pers. Ab is source, generally. A, aa, aa, ea, ey, has, in various languages, the same meaning. See AQUATIC.

A, says Wallis, is often put in composition for at, denoting existence in place; as, a-bed. But Tooke, and he confirms his opinion by sufficient authorities, thinks that a is, in such cases, a corruption of the A. S. On, meaning in; and thus, that on dæg has become a day; on niht, a night, &c. And hence, a-dying, a-begging, a-hunting, will be on or in dying; or on or in the act or state of dying, begging, or hunting.

In A. S. a, called by Lye, an initial augment, is prefixed to numerous words in use without it. Some have descended to us both with and without the prefix, as, abide, bide, from A. S. Abid-an, bid-an; and others only without, as bid, bite, A. S. Abidd-an, bidd-an, abit-an, bit-an.

A or an, the English article, means one (less emphatically); also written in old English o, as, o man, a man.

A. S. An, one; Sw. & Dan. En; D. En; Ger. Ein.

A-per se, denoting preference or pre-eminence, is not unusual in our old poets.

A, B, C, the old English denomination of the Gr. A, B, (alpha, beta,) or the alphabet.

A-BACK, av. On back, backwards.

ABACK, s. or ABACUS. A square table, tablet, or trencher, app. to various purposes; (so called, because not originally standing on feet, but affixed to a wall.)

Fr. Abacus; It. & Sp. eo; L. Abacus; Gr. Abax; a (priv.), not, without, and basis, a base or basis.

ABACOT. A cap of state, worn by the kings of England, adorned with two crowns. —Spel.

AB-AFT. On the aft, or hind part, (sc. of a ship.)

AB-ALIENATE, v. To alienate from: used by Abp. Sandys; but most common in civil law. Law L. Ab-alienare.

A-BANDON, v. s. Spenser and Mir. for —ER. Mag. wrote, Aband.

—ING. To band or bind, or put in bond-

—MENT. age, (or in bandon, qv.); to stay or cause to stay or remain in—to leave in, to yield or give up to—a state of bondage, or entire subjection or subserviency: gen. —To give up to: and then, simply—To resign, to relinquish; to quit, to desert, to forsake, to renounce, to reject: and, thus, equivalent to—To banish.

Some ancient usages are obsolete. Thus —“He will abandon himself with all his might well for to do.”—Chaucer. “He was abandoned to Christ's faith."—Gower. "That he might abandon (i.e. reject, drive away) them from him."—Udall. "You form reasons for your abandoning (i.e. quitting) the storms which threaten your own ruin."—Ford. "And Vortiger enforce't the kingdom to aband'" (i.e. quit).—Spenser. "'Tis better for the enemies t'aband (i.e. drive away) quite from thy borders."—Mir. for Mag. "All pleasures quite and joyes he did aband'" (i.e. quit).—Id.—This latter usage of aband is a common modern usage of abandon.

Etymologies various. A. S. Abannan, to denounce; Ban, to curse; A'ban donner, to give up to a proclamation; Fr. Bandown, liberty; with others. —Men. and Wach. The Editor of Du Cange seems to guide to the true origin. The Low L. Abandum or Abandonum (he says), was understood of goods movable or immovable, in pignus seu cautionem assignatis pro pecunia debita. —Gal. Garantie. And further, that, dare in abandonum; ponere in abandonum; are expressions equivalent to, opignarare, obligare, to put in pawn or pledge, or under bond. Again; Abandonum, i.e. sponsio seu obligatio. Hence it may be inferred, that the A. S. Bind-as, vincire, obligare, to bind or oblige, is the root.

A-BASE, v. To put or bring low, to lower, -ING. to depress; to degrade, to humble, -MENT. to disgrace. (See ABASH.) Gower writes Abesse.

Fr. Ab-baiser; It. -basare; Sp. Abazar, deprimere, deificare, de- or sub-mittere.

A-BASH, v. To abase; (met.) to depress, -MENT. to disgrace, to humble, to humili-
-ING.* liate; to appal. "Thei weren abayashed with a great stoneying."—Wiclif.
See ABAWED. Abashe, s. is found in Gower.
*Chaucer.

The p. t. and p. p. of Abase was anciently written Abaisit, abayashid; whence the word Abash appears to be formed. Un-

A-BATE, v. s. To beat or press down; to
-MENT. cast down; to lower, to depress;
-ER. to suppress; to degrade, to lessen;
-IS. to diminish; to reduce.

Abatis—trees felled, and thrown in the way—is an old word.

Fr. Abbat-re; It. -ere; Sp. Abatir; A. S. Beatan, to beat. From Fr. Abbatre, to beat, has been recently introduced the s. Abattoir, a slaughterhouse. Un-

ABAWED,* i.e. Abashed.—*Chaucer. Fr.
Esbahi. See To ESBAY.

ABBA, s. Father. Abbot, the male, abbess,
-ACY. the female—chief or head of a reli-
-ESS. gious order, house, monastery.
-EY. Go. Abba; vir, maritus, man, husband;
-OT. Heb. and other eastern tongues, Abba, father, (sc. the source of life. See A. A.) And Abbas was introduced (Sk.) into Europe from Syria with the Christian religion, whence Abbot, &c.

AB-BREVIATE, v. s. Orig. A-b-, as in Sp.
-ION. To break or make short, concise; to -OR. shorten, to abridge; to bring or re-
-URE. duce to a smaller space or compass, by breaking off or removing parts. See
ABRIDGE.

It. Abbreviare; Sp. Abreciar; from L. Brevis, breuiare; Gr. Bpaxiv; A. S. Bræcan, abræcan, to break.

ABDICATE, v. To go from, quit or
-ATION. leave, put away from, or deprive -ANT.* of—that which has been possessed by law or right.

To resign (unconditionally, absolutely),
to disclaim, to renounce, to dispossess.

*Whitelock.

Fr. Abdi-guer; Sp. -car; It. & L. Ab-dicare, to go from a right. De-In-Pre-dicate.

ABDOMINOUS, -AL. ad. Pertaining to the belly, (abdomen.)

L. Abdomen, the part of the body covered (Abditum, Voss.), the inner part of the belly.

AB-DUCE, v. -TION. To draw, bring, or take away from; to withdraw—(the eye,
Brown.)

Abduction is app. to—the forcible taking away of a wife or child; and to common kidnapping. L. Ab-ducere, to lead from.

A-BEAR,* v. App. to—the bearing or car--ANCE. riage, deportment, conduct, or be--ING.† haviour.—*Spenser. †Fabyan.

ABECEDARY, ABECE-DARIAN. A term applied to those compositions whose parts are disposed in alphabetical order; also to a teacher of the rudiments of learning.
Fr. Abecedaire; It. & Sp. -ario.

ABECHED,* "Abbecher,—to feed as birds do their young; to put into the mouth of."—Cot. *Gower.

Abeched (Sk.), seems (from the context in Gower) to be—satisfied: from the Fr. Abbecher, to feed (from Bec, the beak), as birds feed their young by inserting their beaks.

ABED, av. On bed.

AB-ERRANCE,* s. A wandering from.
-ATION. Ab-erration is app. to a change in
-ING.* the place of stars and planets.
Also, (met.) to the errors or mistakes of the mind.—*Brown.

L. Ab-errare, to stray or wander from.

A-BET, v. s. To better, to make better.
-MENT. App. to the encouraging, inciting,
-T-ER. assisting, supporting, aiding, causing to beat, or become better. And thus—To better, to aid, assist, support—the designs of.

D. Beten, betteren; Ger. Besseren; A. S. Beatan, mellorare, melius reddere.—Sk.

ABEYANCE, s. An inheritance hoped for, or expected; or rather expecting a new master or possessor.—Sk.

Probably from Fr. Abbaye, to hold or keep at bay or in expectation.

AB-HOR, v. (Met.) To dislike or detest,
-R-ENT. to loath, to disdain, to abominate;
-ENCE. to be averse from, opposed or con-
-ER. trary to, inconsistent with.

Fr. Ab-horror; It. -horrire; Sp. -horrecer; L. Ab-horrescere.

A-BIDE, v. To stay, or remain; to delay,
-ANCE. to tarry, to dwell, to continue, to -ER. wait, to expect. To stay under, or
-ING. support; to bear up against, or en-
-ABODE. dure,—with fortitude, good temper, kindness, hope, or the reverse.

A. S. Abiden, bidan; D. Beyden, to bide.
Abode, s. formed upon abode, the p. p. of abide.

ABIE, s. is very variously written. By Chaucer, Abegge, abeye, abie; which Tyrwhitt says is Saxon, and means "To suffer for." In P. Ploughman, Abegge. In Gower, Abete, abedge, abidge. In Chaucer, are found the part. Abying, abien, abought. And in Gower, also, Abought. Skinner adopts the verb, To buy (in preference to the A. S. Abid-an, to abide), as the more simple etymology. In Shakespeare, (Mida N. D.) Abide, thus, should be Aby.

In all the examples that have occurred, "buy or pay for, dearly, cruelly, sorely," appears to be the meaning.

ABJECT, ad. s. v. The v.—To cast away, to cast off or out, to cast down.
-ION. "Repudiate and abjected oute of the Frenche courte."—E. Hall.
-LY. "God abjected Saul."—Sir T. Elyot.

The ad. ss. and av. have a consequent application to that which is—

Base, lowly, servile, worthless, despicable, mean, contemptible.

Fr. Ab-ject; It. jetto; L. Ab-ject-um, p. p. of ab-icere, to cast, or throw away from, to cast down.
Ad-Com-De-Dis-E-In-Inter-Ob-Pro-Re-Sub-Tra-ject.

AB-JURE, s. To swear—(sc.) to go away
-ATION. from, or leave; to disown, to dis-
-MENT. claim, to renounce (upon oath).

AB-ORT, v. s. To rise or spring from,

-ORTION. unseasonably, untimely:—
-ORTIVE, ad. s. to produce or bear prema--ORTIVELY. turely or unnaturally; to
-ORTMENT.* miscarry, or fail in bear-
-ORSEMENT.† ing the full time.

**Bacon*. †Bp. Hall.

It. Abort-ire, -ire; S. -ire; F. -ir; from L. Ab-ortus, p. p. of Ab-ori, to rise from; app. to that—quod non sit tempestive ortum—which has arisen out of season.

A-BOVE. It is usual to consider above as a pr. and an av.: but the meaning remains the same. See OVER, UP.

It is much used in composition. *Above-*board has a metaphorical application to—

That which is—uncovered, unconcealed, undisguised.

A. S. Buƿan, be-uƿan, super;—Bove, top or head. R. Brunne, and the elder English authors write it, Abouen, abouen. In R. Gloucester and R. Brunne, it is app. as uppermost or superior in rank and power, &c.; and beneath (qv.) is opposed to it.

AB-OUND, v. To come or be, to flow, to

-OUNDING. overflow—in great quantity or -UND-ANT. number; as waves from the -ANCE. sea: to be rich, copious or
-ANTLY. plentiful.

Fr. Abond-er; It. -are; Sp. Abundar; L. Ab-und-are, (Ab-unda, from a wave.) Super-

ABOUT, pr. av. It is variously written—Abouten, aboutte, about. See ABUT.

About is app. to—the edge or border approached, or first come to; the circuit, the circumference; time approaching, any act or event approaching, or upon the point of being done or coming to pass; to nearness, proximity, relation. It is classed by Wilkins among those local preps. which respect space in general, and which relate both to motion and rest, with respect to the intermediate space betwixt those terms, either direct or indirect.

A.S. Abutan, abuta. On buta. On boda, circum. Boda, the first outward extremity or boundary of any thing.

AB-RADE, * v. To rub or scrape off.—* Sir-RATION. M. Hale. Shenstone. †B. Jonson.

-RASE, † ad. Fr. Ab radant; L. Ab-raders, -ras-um.

A-BRAIDE, * v. To break, pull, or tear; to start, leap, or spring. To make an eruption, assault, sally, onset, insurrection, revolt. In Wiclif we find Debreyd. And Upbraid is in common use. See BRAID.

* Chaucer. Spenser.

A. S. Abred-ian, arripere, diripere, to snatch or tear away; Sc. Abrede.

A-BREAST, av. With breast or breasts in a straight or parallel line.

AB-RE-NOUNCE, * -NUNCIATION. † To deny, to disclaim, to refuse, to reject.

* Fox. †Bp. Taylor. Wood.

Ab is prefixed perhaps to give emphasis to Renounce; itself a compound. Law L. Ab-renunciatio.

ABRIDGE, v. Orig. no d, as in Fr.

-ER. To break off (a part), to take away
-MENT. from the whole; to lessen, to curtail, to diminish; to bring into less space; to contract; to compress.

An abridgment or abstract of any thing, is the whole in little; and if it be of a science or doctrine, the abridgment consists in the essential or necessary parts of it contracted into a narrower compass than where it lies diffused in the ordinary way of delivery.—Locke.

Fr. Abriger, from Ger. Abbrechen, frangere, ab-rumpere, to break; A. S. Abraean. Un-

A-BROACH, *v.* av.* To broach a vessel is to break, to bore, into it: to abroach, to be abroach, or to set abroach, is to be or cause to be in that state in which the contents of a vessel broached or broken into are: i. e. that they may be drawn; caused to flow, or pour forth, spread; set afloat.

* Chaucer. A. S. Abraean, to break.

A-BROAD, av. Free from, gone out of narrow bounds; at large, away, from home; in or to another place or country. Various written—Abrod, o brade, abrood, on brede, late, foris. A. S. Abraedan, to broaden.

AB-ROGATE, v. ad. -ION. Gen.—To repeal, to annul, to abolish, to avoid, or make void.

Fr. Abrog-er; Sp. -or; It. & L. Ab-rogare. Ro-gare legem, is to ask the people for their votes upon a law proposed, to propose a law; and subsequently, to pass a law: and abrogare legem, to repeal a law: and in this application the word is usually found in English.

AB-RUPT, *ad. s.* v.* Broken off from.
-ION. Gen. used where the breach and
-LY. separation is sudden or violent, or
-NESS. hasty, or unexpected.

-INGLY. Fr. Accord-er; It. -are; Sp. Accordar; Low L. Ac-cord-are. Varro, and after him Junius, and others, from ad and cor, the heart. Skinner and Julius Scaliger, from ad and chords, a string: Vox ab arte musica deprompta. Each etymology will account for accord, concurs, and discors; but not for es-, se- or so-, se-cors; or for re-cord-eri, or miseri-cors. And as cors seems to be the same radical word in all these, the etymology of Varro seems to demand a preference; the Gr. Συγχορδο, concurs, notwithstanding. In Wicliif, where the common version has "with one accord," we find "with oo will, with oo herte:" and "reconcillare"—"to accord." Dis- Un-

A-VAUNT, v. s. av. In R. of Gloucester, the

A-VAUNTANCE. van guard is called the vaunt
-VAUNT-OUR. wardes, and in more modern
-RY. authors, the vaunt gard.

To forward, or bring, to put forward, into the front or fore-ground, the van or vantage ground. To propose, or offer to notice or attention; to promote, to prefer, to profit.

Chancer uses the av. Avaunt, forward; and also the s. Avant, and the v. Avante, which, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, are French, and mean boast, to boast. But this is a consequential application. An Avaunter or advanster, or, he who avaunteth, vaunteth, cometh avaunt, puts himself or his deeds forward, obtrudes them, is a boaster. And this application is common in the elder writers. Another application of Avaunt is, to go forward, to pass on, to go on, to begone. Dis-

A-FRONT. * In front.—*Phaer.

AFT, -ER, pr. as. Aft, Hind, and Back, have the same meaning.

After is app. to—

Succession, or subsequence, or consequence, in order of time; in order of place: and, met., to the desires and pursuits of the mind.

After is much used prefixed.

After-ages,—ages coming after, subsequent to the present.

After-eye, v.—To eye or look after.—Shakespeare.

Go. Afiaro; A. S. Æfter, supposed by Tooke to be the comparative of the s. Afi (A. S. Æft); Dan. Æfter, post, postea.

AGAIN, ad. Various written Agan, -st, pr. agens, ayen, ayenst, agane, &c.

-WARD. Again; turn again, i. e. turn to meet, to oppose, to withstand, to return. Do this again; i. e. to meet, a new demand, a new emergency; to act, and continue to act in return; to persist in meeting, or opposing; and hence the application to frequent repetitions.

Wiclif uses, Aghen-buying, i. e. redemption; Aghen-rising, i. e. resurrection; Aghen-stand, i. e. resist; Aghen-say, i. e. contra-dict.

Dryden writes Agan, or Again, to suit his rhyme.

Dan. Igiem. In Dutch the v. Jegenen, means to meet, to oppose, to rencontre. The collateral A. S. e. from which the av. Agastan, in A. S. On-genen, appears to be lost. See Tooke.

A-GAME. * In game.—*Chaucer.

A-GAMIST, * s. One who does not marry, who refuses or rejects marriage.—*Fox.

Gr. Agamos, not married (a, priv. gami-ein, to marry.)

A-GAPE. On the gape. See GAFK.

A-GAST, ad. Astonished, amazed, ter-

-GAZE. rified (ac. in a speechless gaze). -GAZED. "The whole army stood agas'd on him."—Shak. "With shuddering horror pale, and eyes aghas't."—Milton.

"Most men's minds stood at a gaze," Fuller.

A. S. Gessen, to see, to look at. Tocke inclines to the G. Aggess, timere; past p. Agidet, territus, terridus; which might become Agidet or agides, agide, agide. But the constant application of the word to that, which is gazed, gazed, agere (id agere) upon with terror or consternation, seems sufficiently to account for the restriction of g to denote a degree of terror.

AGATE, -ty, s. "The [precious stone] agate (or agath) was found first in Sicilie neare unto a river called likewise Achates."
—Holland. Plinius.

Fr. Agathe, -te; It. -ta; L. Achates.

AGE, s. A prolonged or lengthened course
-ED. or extent of time; a long period
-EDNESS. of time; an advanced progress, of time, of man's life, of years; and thence gen.—time, course of years.

A. S. Ece, from Ece-an, ecce-an, to ake, to prolong, to augment. (See ACHIE.) is applied to a lasting, an everlasting continuance of time; see, may have become age or eage by the mere change of c hard into g hard, and in course of time softened.

AGE, term., denotes something added, put to, or upon, imposed or charged;—an impost, a charge, a duty. Beaconage, pontage,—toll charged upon beacon, or bridge (pons). Also app. more gen. to—agency, to action, to the state caused or produced by the act; still denoting an addition: and parentage, peerage, the state added (to the person) of being or becoming a parent or peer. See APPANAGE.

The L. Agium, Spel. suggests, is from agere, signifying in composition, actus, exhibitio, ministerium rei:—Aquarium, he adds, from Festus, quasi aquam agium; i. e. aquam ductus. In like manner, Homagium, actus vel ministerium hominis. Terragium, tributum, quod terra agit, hoc est, exhibet. Wallis thinks we have it from the L. Atto. Our old Law L. abounds in the term. agium. (See ACT & IC.) The mercantile term Agio (qv.) is from the same source, with the same meaning.

AGENT, ad. s. Agent, one who, that -CY, s. which, acts, orders, operates, per--T-SHIP. forms, manages, conducts; one who acts (for another, as substitute, or deputy);

-NESS.* —Gower. "Out take riches all onely."—Chaucer. *R. Montagu.

A-LONG, v. av. pr. -st. Along, v. (Chaucer,) from A. S. Lengian, to long, to make long, to lengthen, to stretch out (sc. ourselves after, or for what we eagerly desire.) See To Long.

Along, the av. in one usage, is merely on long, or on length, as Chaucer writes. In other usage it is the past p. and means produced. "It was along of you,"—all produced, caused, effected of or by you.

The A. S. used two words for these two purposes, Andlang, andlong, ondlong, for the first; and Gelang for the second: and our most ancient English writers observed the same distinction, using endlong for the one, and along for the other.—Tooke.

A-LOOF, ad. All-off, entirely separate, (Sk.) Junius suggests that it may be of the same origin with aloft.

Separate, apart, distant, or at a distance, remote.

AMEL, s. v. "Amyled, I believe, for enamelled," (qv.) says Sk.

To enamel, is to fix colours by melting. Lupset uses Amiled, met. i. e. melted.

A-MELIORATE, v. -ION. To make more desirable, to better, to mend, to improve.

This word, though frequent in speech, is not of common occurrence in good writers.

Fr. Améliorer; Low L. Amellorari, melius valere, says Du Cange. L. Mellor, melius, that which is more willed, more wished for, more desired.

AMEN, int. ION, Heb. and thence the Gr. Ἀμήν, used in Scripture, and still preserved in our different Christian churches at the conclusion of prayer: it signifies assent and desire, as, verily; so be it; or so it ought to be. In this sense it exists, with little alteration as to sound, in the languages of most countries where Christianity has been known.

A-MENABLE, ad. Amenable may mean,—that may be moved, brought—sc. to answer inquiries, to account for actions: or may it not rather be—subject to the jurisdiction of a Mesne Lord: to be summoned before him, adjudged by him; and then, gen.—subject to trial or examination.

The It. Menare and Fr. Mener, are derived, by Men, from the L. Minare, pellere, to drive. Voss writes largely upon the etymology of Minare, but unsatisfactorily. Wach. (in s. Mine) is persuaded that it is of Celtic origin, sc. from Mina, a place; and that Minare is nothing else than to move from place to place. Fr. Amenar, is to bring or lead unto, to fetch in or to.—Cot.

A-MEN-AGE, v. -ANCE. * To menage, or manage; to handle; or use, guide, rule by the hand (manus).

Amenance,—management, conduct, carriage.—* Spenser.

AMEND, v. To free from deficiency,

-ER, s. fault, or blemish; to repair, to

-MENT. correct, to improve, to reform,

ANCIENT, s. App. both to—The sign or ensign, and to the bearer of it; also, to—

The bearer of the military (insignia) decorations, or distinguishing ornaments of his commander.

Corrupted from Ensign, (Sk.) Ancient, in war, Ensign-bearer. (Jun.) L. In-signis; It. -signa; Fr. Enseigne, ensign.

AND, co. Sk. knows not whether from L. Addere (qd.) Add, by the insertion of n, as in render. Lye supposes it to be the Gr. En: Tooke, that it is the imperative An-ad of the v. Anan-ad, dare congeriem. It would be more correct to say that And is composed of An, the imperative of An-an, to give or grant; and the s. ad, congeries, a heap: thus An-ad, an'd, and.

Add, or grant, give this to that, &c.

An is used by R. Gloucester, and other writers, exactly as they use And. And is also not unfrequently used as An.

AND, END, UND, term. From the L. Andus: and of these we have few: Multiplacand, that ought to be multiplied: Subtrahend, that ought to be subtracted.

From the Gr. Δεον, that which ought to be.

ANDABATISM, s. A combat blindfold: because "the Andabates fought on horse-back, with a sort of helmet that covered all the face and eyes."—Kennet.

Gr. Ἀνδαβάτης; L. Andabata, ascensor, from ἀναβαίνε-ιν, to ascend. Used met.

ANDIRON, s. An instrument usually of iron, on which a spit turns, or on which wood is laid to burn.

It is unsettled whether Hand or End-iron, or a corruption of Brand-iron. In A.S. there is Brand-isen, and in Dutch Brandysen (isen in the former, and Ysen in the latter, meaning iron); whence Du Cange derives the Fr. Landier, formerly Andeir, and Bar. L. Andela.

ANDROGYNAL, s. —ly. Fr. Androgine; Gr. Ἀνδρόγυνος, (ανρ, male, and γυνή, female.) See HERMAPHRODITE.

ANDRO-TOMY, s. "Some of the moderns call the dissection of man's body Androtomy, to distinguish it from zootomy, as they name the dissection of the bodies of other animals."—Boyle.

From the Gr. Ανρ, a man, and τεμν-ειν, to cut.

A-NEAR. On near.

ANECDOTE, s. —ical.* Not yet given out, published, made known, divulged. Now usually—

Any little story, or incident of private life, told or narrated.—**Bolingbroke*.

ANELE, ANEILE, or ANOYL, v. To oil, to rub, or anoint with oil. Om. -ing.

App. by old theological writers part. to the extreme unction.

A. S. On-clan, oleo inungere.

ANEMONY, s. A flower, so called, "because when the winde bloweth, it openeth."

Fr. An-émone; It. -émone; Sp. & L. Anemone; Gr. Ἀνεμων, from ανεμος, i. e. ventus, the wind; sic diot. quod vento flante aperitur.—Mis.

ANEN, pr. The L. Apud (the Gr. Παπα)

—ent. is rendered by Wiclif, Anentis.

—ent. A tergo, by Phaer, "Anenst our —entis backs." Anenst, in the Pardonere

—entis. and Tapetere, seems to signify, concerning. Anen, aneyntes, in Maunde- ville, Against, opposite to. A. S. Nean, near, is the etymology proposed by Sk;

and A. S. Onges, ex adverso, is preferred by Dr. Jamieson, who, under Fore-anent, cites from Luke viii. 26. Foran onges, over against Galilee. But an etymology, which will satisfactorily account for the various applications of these words, is still to be sought. Stowe writes foreaneust.

A-NEW. On new.

AN-FRACTUOUS,* ad. Broken round, -OSE† so as to destroy the regular arch -OSITY, s. or circuit; turning or winding about.—Taylor. Ray.

Fr. Anfrac-tueus, (Anfrac-tuosité, -tuosité, Cot.); L. Anfractus, (am, around, and fractus, broken.)

ANGARIATION, s. appears a favourite word with Bp. Hall, to denote—Effort, exertion; forceful exertion. Also used by Speed.

L. Angaria, which Voss. and Du Cange derive from the Gr. Ἀγγαρεύειν, from ἄγγαρος, one sent; compelled to go. Quicunque te angariaverit milliare unum,—is rendered by Wickliff, "Whoever constrayneth the a thousand paces," (Matt. v. 42.) Modern version, "Whoever shall compel thee to go."

ANGEL, s. ad. The s. is app. part. to the -ic messengers of God:—(in A. S. -ICAL. Godes ærend-gast, i.e. God's

ANGER, s. v. In old writers:—Any -LY vexation, or distress, or uneasiness of ANGRY mind or body; now (used of the -ILY. mind) commonly (but not always) restricted to—

Those sensations (sc. of vexation, &c.) when caused by the conduct of another, and accompanied by a desire to retaliate or punish (See IRE); and may thus be distinguished from anguish and anxiety. App. to the body, it still retains the old usage.

From an ancient Hymn to the Virgin in MS. Warton cites "Heyl. innocent of angerness," (vol. i. p. 315.) See ANGOUR.

Perhaps (says Sk.) from A. S. Anga, vexed, troubled; and Anga, also Gr. Ἀγγαίειν, and L. Angere, from Ger. Ang, arctus, constrictus, p. p. of ang-en, constringere.—Wach. The A. S. Anga, or Enga, appears to mean, Angustia, straitness. Ang-breast is a contraction or straitness of the breast, (Som.) (qd.) confined, straitened in the breast. Angaria, in the Mid. L. was used (Du Cange) for any vexation, trouble, distress, or anxiety of mind; so Anger, in our old writers.

ANGLE, v. s. To hang out (sc.) a bait, -ER. allure ment, snare, enticement; and, -ING. cons., to allure, to ensnare, to entice, to delude.

B. Jonson writes Engle, and applies the s. to one who has been, or may be allured, ensnared, enticed, deluded. Shakespeare uses Angle in the same manner.

D. and Ger. Angel, Hangel; A. S. Angel, hamus, an hook, (Som.); Gr. Ἀγγελος. Wach. prefers Ger. Angen, figere, to fix, to pierce. Sk. inclines to the v. To Hang. Min. to D. Angel, or Hangel, from Hangelen, to hang.

pale, Cot.) by decay; with fear; with dismay. Un-

AP-PANAGE, s. The portion of a younger brother in France : lands, &c. assigned to younger sons, or brethren. See further in Cot. and Spel. Lord Bacon calls the earldom of Chester a kind of appanage to Wales, which used to go to the king's son.
Swift uses the word met.

Fr. Appanage, appannage, appennage; Law L.
Appanagium, appannagium. Men. and Caseneuve have written fully upon the origin of this word.
Spel. favours the opinion, that Pan-agium is from Panis; or, if the word is properly written, Appen- agium, he is inclined to believe it formed, ab
Appendendo, quasi Appendagium junioris filii.

AP-PARATUS, s. L. Apparatus, a pre-

 -NESS. question, to interrogate; to exa--ION. mine. To put to, sc. to a trial,
 -IVE. to a difficulty, to a task; to try, to task. We still use the expression, to be put to it.

Apposite,—put or placed near to, adapted, fitted, suited, appropriate, pertinent.

Apposition,—in Grammar. See HYPHEN.

"He appos'd food to them; . . . they apposed their hands to it."—Chapman.

Sk. and Jun. think Appose is used for Oppose.
 As the Fr. Apposer, it is from the L. Appositum, past p. of Ap-ponere, to put or place to.

AP-POSTILL, or APOSTILL, s. Cot. explains Apostille, an answer unto a petition (any writing) set down in the margin thereof. See POSTEL.

In Lord Bacon's Works, vol. iii. p. 480, are the Heads of the Charge against Robert Earl of Somerset, with "Apostyles of the King" in the margin.

AP-RICOT, s. Fr. Abricot (which Cot. calls the abricot or apricock plum); It. Bericucolo, Albicocco; Sp. Albaricque; mala præcoqua or præcocia. See Men.

APRIL, s. Fr. Avril; It. Aprile; Sp. Abril; L. Aprilis, either from appos, foam, because Venus, to whom this month was sacred, sprang from the foam of the sea; or from Aperire, to open: or, as Joseph Scaliger thought, from Aper, a boar; and he instances as a similar name the Gr. Ελαφρηβολιον, from ελαφρηβολια, a festival in honour of Diana, the striker of the stag. The reasons against the first two are stronger than any that appear to exist for the last.

APRON, s. -ED. App. to an article of apparel worn in front of the limbs from the lower part of the body, over the other apparel:—also to a cover for the same purpose in a chaise or seat to a carriage; and to other things, from a supposed resemblance, e.g. in a goose, in a piece of ordnance.

Of unsettled etymology. Mins. proposes, Afors one. Sk., A. S. Aforan, afors. Mr. Boucher thinks it "may perhaps be derived from Nappe, whence our word Napery." Mr. Brocket says, in the North, the word is Nappers, conformable to the old orthography; and he derives from the Fr. Naperon, a large cloth. So also Mr. Todd. Lacombe has Appronaire, and Apronier. No instance of Napron has been found.

AQUATIC, ad. App. to—That which can -ICAL. or may, that which does, dwell
-ILE. or grow in the water; watery.

AQUEOUS, Aquary,—a place made and
AQUOSITY.* adapted for aquatic plants.

**Holland*.

Fr. Aquatique; It. & Sp. -ico; from L. Aqua, water. In-Sub-
Aqua is in Go. Aquos or Achwos; and in Ger. Ach (Wach.) is the element of water, and Acha, flowing water. Jun. is inclined to believe their origin to be the same; and Stiernhielmus, in the opinion of Wach., was the first to discover that origin. "Derivatur a lingua nostrae monosyllabo purissimo A, id est, Aqua; inde Aa, aqua fluens; inde Aha, (per litteram intercalarem A.) Græcis Ἀχα. Ac tandem ex Aha Latine factum Aqua."—A means source, spring, fountain, (See A.)—and thence, water springing, flowing; and the ch, or chs, or qu, (of which no account has been attempted,) may be the Go. Auk: thus, Aauk-os, auk-os, achos, achwos, agua; meaning the eking, or continuing motion or flow of the water, (i.e. chwa-ter.)

AQUE-DUCT, s. That which leads or guides, conveys, the course of water.

Fr. Aqueduct; It. -idotto; Sp. -educto, from L. Aqua, water, and ductum, past. p. of ducere, to lead.

AQUILINE, ad. Like an eagle; arched and hooked like the beak of an eagle.

ARBALIST, or ARCBALIST, s. -ER. One who casts or shoots from a bow; a Bowman, an archer. See ARTILLERY.

Fr. Arbaleste; Bar. L. Arcebalistus, from Arceus, a bow, and ballista, from βαλλειν, to cast, to shoot.

ARBITER, v. s. One who examines,

-TR-ABLE. tries, determines, decides,
-ARY. judges; an examiner, a judge;
-ARI-LY. a decider, a determiner,—
-NESS. usually app. to one chosen by
-OUS. the litigant parties. Arbitrar-y,
-OUSLY. -ily, -iness, -ious, -iously, are
-TR-ATE, v. used when the judgment wholly
-ATION. depends upon the uncontrolled
-ATOR. will of the arbiter.

-EMENT. Fr. Arbitr-e, -er; It. -o, -are; Sp. -o,
-ar; L. Arbiter; which Voss. and Jun. think is from Ar for ad, and the ancient bis for eo, to go:—The proper meaning of arbiter, being one who goes—to inspect, to examine.

ARCH, ad. Chief, principal, superemi-
-LY. nent in any respect. Cons.—
-NESS. Roguish, knavish, waggish, sly,
-ICAL. artful, cunning.

It is used by Shak. as a s. in K. Lear:—
 "My worthy arch and patron!"

Arch, from Gr. Ἀρχή, chief, (Sk.) was introduced into the Ger. dialects about the fall of the Roman empire, as in arch duke, arch rogue, &c. and signifies chief, &c.

From the frequent use of the word to denote eminence in roguish, knavish, waggish, sly, artful, cunning tricks, it appears to have acquired its consequential application alone.

Arch, or Arc, though com. affixed to the succeeding word, is an ad., and should stand alone, as it does in our old writers.

-ONICAL. to work.

ARCHI-TRAVE, s. -ED. The principal beam (trabe); or the beam that serves the purpose of an arch.
Fr. It. & Sp. Architrave.

ARCHIVES, s. Where the public papers or records are deposited; frequently so used by Josephus.

Fr. Arch-ives; It. -leto; Sp. -lee; Gr. Ἀρχαιο

ARCTIC. See ANTARCTIC.

ARCUBALIST. See ARBALIST.

ARD-ENT, ad. Burning, heating; hot,
-ENTLY. fiery; having the violence of fire;
-ENT. and therefore violent, vehement,
-OUR. passionate, eager, fierce.

Ardour is app. by Milton, to the sentient being: "Thousand celestial Ardora."

ARE

Fr. Ard-ent; It. -ente; Sp. -iente; L. Ardens, p. p. of Ardere, to parch, to burn.

ARDUOUS, ad. Lofty, steep; difficult
-LY. to ascend or climb; difficult.

-NESS. It. & Sp. Arduo; L. Arduus, from Ardere; because, like flame and things burning (quod ardent) it (aliquid arduum) directs its course to things aloft. The word appears quite modern in English usage.

ARE, ART. Are is com. called an auxiliary v. and the plural of the present tense of the v. To be. It seems very probable that the primitive meaning is front or fore:—The front part of the body, as opposed to the hind or back. In Go. Air,
A. S. Ær, is præ, ante, before. In Gr.
Eap, np, is the fore or early part of the year or day, the spring, the morning. We then find that the A. S. Ar, are, D. Eere, is used to denote honour; and the v. in
A. S. Ar-ian, D. Eer-en, Ger. Er-en, Sw.
Ær-a, to honour; i. e. to put or place forward, before others; to advance, to prefer,
 (to hery, qv.) In Sw. Ara is a messenger, an errand or errand-bearer, one sent forth or forward; and the Ger. Er-en is also to bear or carry an errand.

There seems no violence in the inference from the etymon: that—

Are is—To stand forward, to stand forth, to put or place forward or forth;—to exist, (ex-sistere, ex-stare.)

Art, (A. S. Eart), is Ared, ar'd, art, now restricted to the second person singular.
 The regular plural of Are is Ar-en: it has been long used without the term. Wiclif
 com. employs ben, i. e. be-en, in all the persons plural. See R, and also Is, Was.

AREA, s. An area is a place where corn, when reaped, may be thrashed and dried.
 From L. Arere, to dry, (Voss.)

Open places in a city are, (Var.)—and more gen. any open, though bounden space, is—so called.

A-READ, \ v.* To conjecture, to guess, to declare, to explain, to counsel.

**Not uncommon in old writers.*

A. S. Arad-an, to conjecture, to divine, to guess, to read; a word, adds Som., which to this day we use for explaining of riddles.

A-RECHE, \ v.* ARAUGHT. A. S. Arecc-an to get, to obtain, to attain or achieve; to reach, to take, (Som.)—Gower

AREFY, v. -ACTION. To dry, or cause to be dry. L. Are-facere, to make dry.

ARENA, s. -ACEOUS. The amphitheatre is usually so called, because that place is spread with sand, in usum pugnae.

"Herevnto may be added the arena, the place below in which their games were exhibited, so called, for that it was strowed over with sand for the drinking in of the blood, which was spilt vpon it, and officers

they had purposely for this business, who in the lawes and writings of the Christian doctours are tearmed, arenarii, sanders."—Hakewill.

Fr. Arēa-s; It. -a, -oso; L. Arena, sand, from Arere, to dry, (quia arida bibulæque,) because dry and bibulous.

AREO-PAGY, s. A court, said to be the most sacred and venerable assembly in all Greece. App. met. by Brown to—Severity of sentence, of punishment.
Gr. Ἀρειοπαγοί, (ἀρειοί παγοί), Mars's hill.

A-RERE, v. A. S. Aræran, to rear or raise up; to erect, to excite.

ARESON,* v. To think, to censure, to accuse, to arraign, (qv.)—Chaucer.
Fr. Arraisonner, to reason with, (Tyrrw.) Fr. Raison; It. Ragione; L. Ratio, from Reri, ratus, to think.

ARETTE, or ARRET, v. To reckon, value, estimate; to place to the account, to lay to the charge, to impute; to assign.

In Bar. L. is found Arretare; the same, says Du Cange, as Retare, retare, for Rectare; to warn an accused person to do right (rectum); to summon to justice. Arrette, says Sk., seems to mean to censure, to estimate; from the Fr. Arrester, to judge. Tyrrw.—to impute to. The Gr. Ἀρριζουσι, is rendered by the Vulgate, Imputor, Reputor, and these by Wiclif Arrete. Tindall translates the Gr. variously, to conte, to reckon, to impute, to lay to the charge. Perhaps Arrete is Arate, to raise, (qv.) from Reri, ratus.

ARGENT, ad. Silvery; having the appearance of silver.

-RY,† E. Hall. †Howell.

Fr. Argent; It. Argento; Sp. Argen; L. Argentum, silver; from Ἀργυρος, so called, κατα αργος, from its whiteness.

ARGIL, s. Potter's clay.—Tyrrw.

-LACEOUS. Fr. Argille; It. & L. Argilla; Gr. Ἀργιλλος, a white pure earth, from αργος, white.

ARGOSY,* s. In Mid. L. Argis seems to have been used for a ship, so called, says Du Cange, ab Argo, the name of the first ship, that in which Jason sailed to Colchis. And he cites "Argis haud modica mercibus referta;" i.e. perhaps "An Argosie," deeply laden with merchandize; and such a ship it is that Shak. calls an Argosy: Drayton,—a ship bearing artillery, soldiers, and other freightage.—Shak. Drayton.

ARGUE, v. To make clear, evident, manifest; to show, to prove, to convince or convict.

-MENT, s. v. To shew (the reasons of any thing); to reason, to discuss, to treat of, to debate; to dispute.

-AL,* Argument is not only app. to the reason, the reasoning; but to the subject reasoned, discoursed, treated of; the statement or summary of the subject or subjects.—S. Johnson. †Wood.

Fr. Arguer; It. -uire, -omeniare; Sp. -uir; L. Arguere; plainly, says Voss. from αργος, clear, manifest. Re-Un-

ARGUTE,* ad. Clear, briak, sharp, -LY,† subtle.

-NESS,† "Barrow. †Sterne. †Dryden. -ATIONS,† "Hall.

Fr. Argut-is; It. -o; L. Argutus; past p. of Arguere, to make clear, evident.

ARID, ad. -ITY. Dried, scorched, parched. Fr. Arid-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Aridus, from Arere, to dry.

ARIETATION,* s. Butting, pushing, striking.—Bacon. Glanvil.

Fr. Arielant; L. Arietare, to butt, push, or strike like a ram (aries). Of doubtful etymology.

A-RIGHT, av. On right, rightly, justly.

ARIOLATION,* s. Prophecy, divination.—Brown.

Haristius prius fuit Fariolus, & Fari, sive fando, (Voss.) Haristolari, to speak of, to prophesy, to divine. Berners writes Ariolus, i.e. diviners.

A-RISE, v. s. -ING, s. To get up, mount, or ascend; to grow, spring upwards; and thus, to come into view or notice; to become conspicuous, eminent; to become of greater value or esteem.—Brown.

A. S. Aris-an, to move up or above.

ARIST-ARCHY,* s. Aristocracy, — a

-OCRACY. form of government in which

-OCRATY. power is possessed by the more

-OCRAT. eminent citizens; usually few

-OCRAT-IC. in number.

-ICAL. Aristocrat is a modern word,

ARTICLE, v. s. To article (not uncon--ULATE, v. ad. mon in old writers, and still
 -ULATE-LY. used in proceedings of Civil -ION. Law,) is—

To set forth the separate particulars of a (conjoined) whole; to state separately the terms or conditions; to stipulate.

Article, s.—a small joint of an entire limb or member; a small part or portion;
 a point, a moment; a sentence, a clause;
 any one point or circumstance stipulated or agreed upon. For Article in Grammar, see A, AN, and THE.

To articulate, is to utter or emit distinctly, disjointed, separate sounds.

Fr. Artic-le, -aler; It. -olo, -olare; Sp. -ulo,

AS, is an art. and (however and whenever used in English) means the same as it, or that, or which. In the Ger. where it still evidently retains its original signification and use, (as So also does,) it is written Es.
L. Is, Us; Gr. Os. See Tooke.

Tooke has resolved an instance of Als for all as, to which the following may be added in confirmation of his explanation of As.

"His mouth is as a lion: his heart is as a hare," (Gloucester,)—i. e. his mouth is that of or similar to that of a lion: his heart is that of a hare.

"Cassiodore sayth, that he who vengeth himself by outrage, doth as evil, as,"—i. e. doth that same evil or same degree of evil, that—"he doth who committeth the outrage." (Chaucer.)

"Sure I would accept these offers, if I were as Alexander," (Bacon,)—i. e. if I were that, or the man that, Alexander is; or in the situation that Alexander is.

These resolutions require some words to be supplied according to the context; e. g. cause, means, instrument, manner, state or condition, &c.; for the cause that, in the manner that, &c.

A-SHAME, v. —ED. Perhaps the meaning of the word may be to blush, to redden. It is now app. to the feeling which occasions the blush.

A-SHORE. On shore.

A-SIDE. On side.

ASK, v. To seek, sc. an answer; to question, to inquire, to require, to—ING. demand.

To seek, sc. alms, relief, assistance; to beg, to petition. See TO SEEK.

Go. Socjan, to seek, to ask, to question; A. S. Secan, ascan, askan, acian, to ask. Also A. S. Acian, acian, to ask or ask, (qv.) Un-

A-SKANCE, av. Awry, obliquely; (per—SKAUNCE. haps) as if shunning, or de—SKAUNT. siring to shun. See SHUN.

—SQUINT. Probably (says Tooke) the participles Asquined, asquins. In D. Schwin, wry, oblique; Schuinen, to cut awry; Schuins, sloping, wry, not straight. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's note upon the word in Chaucer. Asquini probably has the same origin.

A-SKEW, av. is nearly equivalent to Askaunce.

In the Dan. Sklav, is wry, crooked, oblique; Sklaver, to twist, to wrest; Sklavt, twisted, wrested.—Tooke.

ASKILE,* i. e. Askew.—"Bp. Hall.

A-SLAKE, v. A. S. Aslakan, to loosen, to untie, to remit, to abate, to dissolve, to slake, or slacken.—Som.

A-STONE, v. The old v. was to Astone or -Y, v. Astony, which has given rise to, -IEDNESS.* To Astonish:—to stupify, to -YING,† dull, or deaden; to benumb, -ISH, v. to daunt, to appal, to abash, to -ISH-EDLY. amaze, to confound. "The -ING, s. torpedo being herself not be-INGLY. nummed, is able to astonish others."—Holland.

**Barret.* †Not uncommon in old writers.

A. S. Stunian, to stun; Fr. Estonner. Un-

A-STOUND, v. av. Tooke considers the av. Astound to be the past p. of Estonni (estonned), of the Fr. v. Estonner (now written Etonner), to astonish. But the more immediate derivation perhaps is from the v. Astone, astoned, aston'd, astound. Astound is much used now by affecters of energy. See ASTONE.

ASTRAGAL, s. has its analogy from that bone a little above the heel, whence the Fr. call it—the talon or heel itself.—Evelyn.

"The huckle bone or bonket; also the game with such bones; the first bone of the instep: also, a small and round member in Architecture (plain, or wrought, or writhen,) and termed by our workmen an astragal or small bolt."—Cot.

ASTRO-LATRY, s. Worship of the stars or heavenly bodies.—Cudworth.

Gr. αστρον, a star, and λατρευειν, to worship.

ASTRO-LOGY, s. Astrology appears to -ER. have been used by old writers as

-IAN. synonymous with astronomy. Pto-

-IC. lemy calls it—

-IC-AL. The art "which teacheth by the

-ALLY. motions, configurations, and influences of the signs, stars, and celestial planets, to prognosticate of the natural effects and mutations to come in their elements, and their inferior and elementary bodies."—Quadrupartite, l. l.

Fr. Astrologie; It. Sp. & L. Astrologia; Gr. αστρολογία, from αστρον, a star, and λογειν, to speak.

ASTRO-NOMY, s. The science or know-

-ER. ledge of the stars or heavenly

-IC. bodies.

-ICAL. Fr. Astronomie; It. Sp. & L. Astronomia; Gr. αστρονομια, from αστρον, a

-ICALLY. star, and νομος, a law.

-IZE.

ASTRO-THEOLOGY, s. Theology induced from the knowledge of the stars or heavenly bodies.

A-STRUCTIVE, ad. L. Adstruere, ad-structum. Well opposed by Hall to De-structive.

A-STRUT. On strut.

A-STUN.* See ASTONE.—**Drayton*.

ASTUTE, *ad.** As Urbanus is app. to those who have the polished manners of an inhabitant of a city (urbs), so Astutus appears to have been app. to those who are distinguished for the subtilty and circumspection of an inhabitant of a city (αστυ).

**Sir M. Sandys.*

The use of this word, and its sub-derivatives in ty and ness, is, at this time, much affected.

L. Astutus, from the Gr. αστυ, a city.

A-SUNDER, av. On sunder. Separate, as particles of sand.

A-SWEVED,* pt. Stupified, as in a dream.—**Chaucer.*

A. S. Sweof-ad, sweflan, sopre, to bring asleep. See SWEVEN.

ASYLUM, s. "The first asylum, some say, was built at Athens by the Heraclidæ, and was a refuge for those that fled from the oppression of their fathers: others will have this to be a sanctuary for all sorts of suppliants."—Potter. Antiquities.

Fr. Aegle; It. -ile; Sp. -glo; L. Aegulum; Gr. Aeglon. Ab a, priv. et εὔαν, quod est spoilum; quia, eo qui confugissent, hos spoliare non liceret, (Voss.); because those who fled to them were secure from harm.

A-SYMMETRY, s. Disproportion, irregularity; incommensurability.

-AL. From a, priv. and συμμετρος, symmetry, proportion, (εὖν, with, and μετρον, measure.)

A-SYMPOTTE, ad. -ICAL. That never falls in with, or upon: app. to lines in Geometry.

Comp. of Gr. α, not, εὖν, with, and συντείνω, to fall.

AT, pr. This pr. is usually derived from the L. Ad; and it probably has the same origin. Sk. says—At, ab A.S. Et, ad, apud, utr. à L. Ad. In our old writers we find applications of the word differing from those in modern use. Thus, in R. Gloucester, At stonde, and at holde; now, with-stand, and with-hold. In Chaucer, to see at eye, i. e. with eye, &c. By Wilkins it is used to denote, touching by approach the surface; in opposition to from, touching on departure the opposite edge or surface.

At may thus be said to be used to denote—

Near approach, nearness or proximity, adjunction or conjunction, association or consociation, connexion, consequence.

ATAXY, s. Disorder, irregularity.

Αταξία, from α, priv. and τάξις, order.

ATE, ETE, ITE, -ION, term. The ad. term. are equivalent to our own termination in ed: we also form verbs upon this ad. or past p.; thus, to animate; from which, by suffixing ed, we obtain a new pt. giving more energy; as animate, animated: from this source we also obtain some nouns, as Reprobate. Our nouns in ation, &c. are immediately from the L. and are equivalent to our term. in ing, (qv.) They denote action, the means, the effect of action. The L. At-us, &c. are formed by suffixing the article es or us, to at, et, it, the term. of the third person sing. of the L. v.—Amat-us, &c.

A-THEISM, s. Unbelief, or disbelief in -IST, s. ad. a God: in the being or existence of a God; godlessness.

-ISTIC-AL. Atheologian, rests upon the authority of Hayward. **Cudworth.*

ATROCIOUS, ad. Atrociously wicked, -NESS. is inflexibly, immovably wicked; -LY. so wicked as not to be turned -CITY. from wickedness; remorseless: and therefore app. to excessive, enormous, outrageous wickedness, or criminality.

Atrocity is used by Sir T. More; but the other words are not common in our older writers.

Fr. & It. Atroce; Sp. Atroz; L. Atroz. Præter atrocem animum Catonis. Voss. thinks, atrocem here is plainly Ατρωτον, that is, unconquered. The Scholiast interprets atrocem by constantem, which favours the derivation from the Gr. Ατρεπης (from α, and τρεπεω), that cannot be turned; inflexible, immovable.

A-TROPHY, s. Want of nourishment.

Fr. Atrophie; It. Sp. & L. Atrophia; Gr. Ατροφία; from α, priv. and τρεφω, to nourish.

AT-TACH, v. -MENT. To take, or touch; to take, or tack; to apprehend, to seize, to hold or bind fast; to adhere, to annex, to fix, or fasten; lit. and met. See ATTACK.

Fr. At-tacher; It. -laccare, aggredi, adoriri; Bar. L. Attachiare; A. S. Tacan, capere. — Hicks, Gram. Fr. Theo. Un-

ATTACK, v. s. Attack, does not appear a very old word in the language; its place was supplied by Assault.

To touch, (sc. with force, violence,) to assault; to begin or commence hostilities: to assail.

Fr. Att-aquer; It. -accare; Sp. Atacar; i. e. Atach, (qv.) diff. written and app.

AT-TAIN, v. s. To reach, to come to; to -MENT. get, gain, or procure.

-ABLE. Cheyne.

-ABLENESS. Fr. Attaindre; L. Attinere, to hold, to reach. Re-Un-

ATTAIN-T, v. s. ad. To stain, to infect, -MENT. to pollute, to corrupt; to -URE. spoil; to accuse, to charge, to -TAIN-ER. convict, of being (tainted) stained or corrupted, (sc. by crime, or guiltiness,) of felony, or treason.

Fr. Attaindre, perhaps from Teindre, L. Tingere, to stain: whence Fr. Teint, L. Tinctus, stained; as we say, He is attainted or tainted of treason, &c., that is, stained. — Mins.

AT-TASTE,* v. To taste, or cause to taste. — * Chaucer. Mir. for Mag. Hyrde.

AT-TEMPER, v. ad. To moderate, to regulate, to accommodate; to -ATE, ad. v. modify, to qualify, to mitigate, -TION. to allay, to assuage. These -LY. words are not uncommon in old -ATELY. writers.

A. S. Hwile, (for Hwiol), a turn,—Walk a while; take a turn.—Tooke. Written either separate or conjoined.

A-WHIT, AUGHT, or OUGH, s. A whit, or o whit. A. S. Hwit.

AWK,* ad. Turned out of the right or -LY.† straight line; perverted, or

-WARD. perverse, indirect; crooked, -WARD-LY. clumsy, inelegant.

Sk. does not notice the ad. Awk; and makes nothing of the etymology of Awkward, to his own satisfaction. If Awk be not a corruption of awkward, it may be deduced from D. Aver-recht, contrarius recto; præter rectum: thus, aver-recht, aur-recht, aurcht, awrc, awk, or awsk, to which add the term. ward; and Awkward will mean—looking from the right. If Awkward be the proper simple term, it may be the A. S. Acyrrad, (ac-yrred), past p. of the v. Acyrran, to turn; and thus mean, turned, averted.

AWL, s. An instrument to pierce or penetrate sharply.

A. S. Ale, ale; Ger. Ahl, subula; D. El, eisen; Sw. Syl; Fr. Alesne; It. Lesina. Wach.; who thinks the Sw. Syl, from Sy, to sew, is the root. In R. Gloucester, Aules is used as a weapon of war. In Jun. we find an opinion, that this word has the same origin with Æel, and was so called, because it can introduce and insinuate itself like an eel.

AWN, s. In Dan. Avne; Sw. Agn. In Luke iii. 17, our Eng. Chaff is in the Go. version, Ahana. Wach. & Ihre—from its acute edges or points. A. S. Ecge; Ger. Ecke; Sw. Ægg.

AWNING, s. Sk. says—vox nautica, for so is called a sail (perhaps of canvas), which like a canopy or umbrella is stretched in hot climates—on board of ship—to screen off the sun.

Sk. perhaps from Fr. Aulne, ulna; i. e. a sewing of many ells (ulsarum) of canvas together.

A-WORK, av. -ING. In work, in working.

A-WREKE,* v. To wreak, to persecute, to take vengeance, to avenge.—**Chaucer.*

A. S. Awrecan; Go. Wrekan; A. S. Wrican.

A-WRY. Writhe, crooked, bended, distorted, askance.

The past p. Awrythed, awryth'd, of the v. Wrythan, to writhe.—Tooke.

AXE, v. To axe is now considered a vulgarism; though, like many other -ING, s. words under the same censure, it is as old as the language.

A. S. Acsian, axian, to ask, (qv.)

AXE. See ADDICE.

AXIOM, s. -ATICAL. A position of worth, weight, or authority; proceeding from, laid down by, authority; not to be denied; a position admitted, acknowledged.

Fr. Axiome; It. Axioma; Sp. & L. Axioma; Gr. Ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιος, worthy, deserving.

AXIS, s. That, round which any thing AXLE rolls, revolves.

-ED. Fr. Essieu; It. Asse; Sp. Ese; L. Axis; Gr. Ἀξω, ab axew; i. e. a circumagendo, from driving round.—Mins.

AY, av. For ever; ever, always; as long as breath, animation, life, remains.

Sax. Ewer (Tyrw.); Go. An aiva (eur aivwa, in æternum, without end); A. S. A, aa, or oa; Ger. A, e; Gr. Aeu. See A.

AYE, av. Tooke thinks is the imperative of a v. of northern extraction; and means—Have it, possess it, enjoy it. In Sw. Ger. & D. it is Ja; Go. Ya, or Ja; A. S. Gea, Ja. In Shak. (old editions) constantly written I.

AYEN, AYENST. See AGAIN.

AYRY, (of Hawks,) s. written by Juliana Barnes, (Sk.) Egery, i. e. eggery—

The nest or place where the eggs are deposited;—by hawks or any other bird. See EYRY and Ego.

AZYME, s. This word appears to have been used by the translators of the Bibles published at Douay and Rhemes.

Gr. Azymos, without ferment; comp. of a, priv. and yeun, ferment.—Men. See Azymus in Voss.

B.

B, P, F, V, are cognate letters. B is denominated by Wilkins, a semi-spirituos or half-breathed consonant, a name which he applies to such as are accompanied with some kind of vocal murmur. B and P are framed when the breath is intercepted by the closure of the lips; the first of them being more soft, with some kind of murmur, the other more hard and wholly mute. Wach. has observed that the labials P (the cognate of B) and M, are the first rudiments of infantile speech; that they are blandimenta naturalia, and have, in almost all languages, furnished the names of male and female parent, Pa, Ma; but he does not appear to have suspected that they also furnished names for the child also, whether male or female; the ba-be, the boy, the mai, the maid. See ARBA, PAPA, BABA, BOY, MAI or MAID, and letter M.

P, with its cognates, seems, as a literal root, to have been the source of words in various languages, signifying, as the Eng. Be, merely—sensation and motion. (See BA.) From the same source we may deduce the L. pr. Ab, and its cognates; and the Eng. pr. By. See BA, P, F, V, and also A, AN, and BY.

BA, s. "The ewes never hold (i. e. cease) bawing."—Chapman. See BABB.

BABBLE, s. v. To babble, is to talk con-mixt. fuddled, inarticulately; to prate -er. idly, unreasonably, inconsider--ing, s. ately. See BABE.—Whitgift.

BABLY.* D. Babolen; Sw. Bieble; Dan. Ba-bile; Fr. -bille; Gr. Baβeλov, from Heb. Babel, where, says Jun., the first confusion of speech arose.

BABE, s. Udal uses the v. To babish; and

-ery. Young, To baby;—-ism. To deceive or delude, as babies; -y, s. ad. to treat as babies, who are easily -y-ism. deceived, or cheated; deluded, or -moon. played upon.

Heb. Ba-bel; Syr. Baba. Sk. derives the Eng. Bab from Babote, bambo, bambles, which (Men.) is of Syr. origin: Sk. himself prefers to derive Babote from Babbe, vox infantilis; quo sc. infantes patre suo compellant. Babe consists of the repetition of ba, the earliest, because easiest organic, consonantal, articulation uttered by children. See B, BAY, &c.

BAB-OON, s. -ION. An animal so called because it very greatly resembles the human race.—Sk.

Fr. Bab-ouin; It. -nino; D. Beeulen; from Babe.—Sk. & Men.

BACCHANAL, s. -IAN. A follower of Bacchus.

One devoted to the pleasures of wine. De-

BACCI-FEROUS-PLANTS—which bear (fer-unt) berries (baccas).

BACHELOR, s. -SHIP. Bachelor is now gen. app. to any man before his marriage. Ben Jonson applies it to an unmarried woman.

Fr. Bac-heller; It. -cellero; Sp. -chiler; A. S. Bachilers, bacalauril, (Lye, but without citing any authority.) Som. has not the word. Wach. suggests, that when app. to students in theology, it may be compounded of the Sax. Bac, liber, bibula, and larsow, doctor: and when app. to persons of a certain military rank, he approves of the etymology of Fauchet, viz. that Bachelers are so called, qd. Bac Chevaliers, because they were lower in dignity than the Millites Banerarii; with, though behind, whom they were allowed to sit. He rejects, as destitute of authority, the opinion of Calepinus, that a chaplet of laurel berries was placed upon them, and that they were thence called Baccalauri. The word has probably but one origin, which would account for its various applications. Kilian adopts the opinion of Ludovicus Vives, that that soldier is called Battalarius, who has once been engaged in battle (battalia); and, in literary warfare, he is also called Battalarius, who has publicly engaged in dispute upon any subject. And see Du Cange and Men.

BACK, v. s. av. To back a horse, is to mount upon a horse's back; and also to move him backwards.

To back a friend, &c. is to stand to his back, to support, uphold, assist, encourage him.

Back is much used as a prefix: before nouns it may be denoted an ad.; before verbs, an av.

A. S. Bac, bac; Ger. Back; Sw. Bak; Dan. Bag. Un-

BACK-BITE, s. To calumniate the ab-
-er. sent, to detract or derogate from
-ing. the reputation of the absent; formed from our back and bite, qd. to bite

at the back of any one, i. e. when he averts his face, and presents his back.

To defame, to slander, to revile, (any one absent.)

A word truly elegant, says Sk., and worthy to be compared with any of Gr. composition.

In A. S. Bacslitol, (from Sliton, to slit, to tear in pieces,) is a backbiter, a slanderer.

BACK-SLIDE, v. To slide, or slip, back; -ER. sc. from good and virtuous principles or practices; to return to evil; to forsake or abandon good for evil.

The word does not appear to have been used in our versions of the Bible prior to that of King James. "Disobedient, rebellious, turning back," in the older versions; in King James's, "backsliding," "Back-faller," equivalent to Back-slides.

**Joye*.

BACK-WARD, ad. s. v. or BACKWARDS, av. -WARD-LY. Slow, dilatory, unwilling, -NESS. -luctant; sc. to step or move forward.

In Shak. "The dark backward or abyss of time," is the point of time, back, or passed, to which our view may be directed. To be backward, is to be after or behind others, or, met. as those are, whose sight, views, thoughts, wishes, inclinations are directed back; and who thus are—slow, &c.

A. S. Ward, from wardian, to look at, or to direct the view. See AWARD.

BACON. App. to—Swine's flesh—dried by heat. Past p. of A. S. Bacan, to bake, or to dry by heat.—Tooke.

BAD, ad. Hurtful, injurious, destructive, -LY. mischievous, vicious, wicked, ill; -NESS. worthless, depraved.

In Go. we find Bauhts, surdus, Baudai, surdi: and Jun. observes, that, as whatever has lost its odour or its savour is called surdum in L.; so in the Codex Argenteus, Baud is—Insipidus, fatuus. Luke xiv. 34:—Gabal salt bauē wairthith; sic sal evanuerit, (Insipietur, Beza.) And he suggests, that from this last acceptance of the word, we may have taken our Bad, malus, inutilis, (Jun. Goth. Gloss. p. 85.) That which is bad, then, would be like salt which has lost its savour; i. e. of no use, unfit for any useful purpose; corrupted, spoilt. But, as Mad is from A. S. Mæt-an, and Sad from A. S. Sæt-an, may not Bad be from A. S. Beāt-an, to beat: thus beat-ed or bated, ba'd, bad, i. e. beaten, or worsted—and then used actively? Tooke thinks it is the past p. of the v. To Bay, i. e. to vilify, to bark at, to reproach, to express abhorrence, hatred, defiance, &c.—Bayed, baed, i. e. Bay'd, ba'd, abhorred, hated, defied, i. e. Bad.—Dis. of Parley, 8vo. ed.

BADGE, s. Fr. Bague, a ring, is app. to -ED. the reward bestowed on, or prize -LESS. gained by, him, that does best in any game or exercise, (Cot.) Hence, to any mark, or note, sign or ensign, of distinction.

D. Bagge, gemma; from L. Bacca; and thence also Fr. Bague, a ring. (Sk.) In the A. S. we find "Beage, corona, sertum, a crown, a garland: also armilla, monile, a bracelet to wear on the arm or wrist; a jewel to hang about one's neck, a necklace:" perhaps (Som.) from A. S. Bugan, or Bygan, to bend, to curve, to bow; whence also Bar. L. Bauca and Bauga, armilla; and whence, further, in Wachter's opinion, Fr. Bague, a ring.

BADGER, s. v. To badger, is to hunt, pursue, pester, persecute; as the (animal) badger is hunted, bayed, barked at, &c.

Sk. perhaps, from the D. Back, a cheek, a jaw, qd. Backer, i. e. endowed with strong jaws: et est sane animal mordacissimum.

BAFFLE, v. s. -ER. To baffle, is to defeat by perplexing, confusing, deceiving; to render or make useless, and ineffectual.

Of unsettled etymology. Fr. Befler, from It. Befare, to deceive, mock, or gull with fair words, &c.; Fr. Bafouer, to baffle, abuse, revile, disgrace, handle basely in terms, give reproachful words to. Jun. thinks these Fr. words have some affinity with the D. Befen, or Blafen, to bark, (to bay,) whence also Ver-blaffen and Ver-blaffen, to baffle, to put out of countenance.

BAG, v. s. To belly out, to swell. To bag game, &c. is to put into a bag.—To bag, in Chaucer, is to swell with pride, arrogance, self-conceit. Baggingly,—sulkily.

A. S. Bai-ge, -ig, belly; D. Baigh; Ger. Balg.

BAGGAGE, s. -ER. App. to—The furniture, utensils and other articles, bagged, or conveyed in bags, for the use of an army, a traveller, &c.

Also to such articles in whatever manner conveyed; to any luggage, package; to the attendants upon such luggage, male or female.

To women of a similar character to those who follow with the baggage; and, less strictly, to any playful, wanton, or saucy female.

From the same root as Bag. Fr. Dan. & Sw. Bagag-s; D. -ie; It. -lia; Sp. Bagajes.

BAG-PIPE, s. -ER. A wind instrument. Bag and pipe: the bag to hold or contain the air; the pipe, through which it is emitted or expelled.

BAIL, v. s. Bail, Bailiff, a person to -ABLE whom authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction, is delivered. -Y. Bail or Baillie, the extent or commission. -TWICK. pass, limit, or bound, of such jurisdiction.

Bail (in its legal application), because a defendant, &c. is delivered or bailed to his sureties, upon their giving security for his appearance.

Bailment, a delivery (in trust).

Fr. Bailler, to deliver; D. Baai, baillie.

BAIN, * v. s. BAGNIO. To wet, to wash, to bathe.—**Not uncommon in old writers.*

Fr. Baigner; It. Bagnare; Sp. Bannare. All from the L. Bainum, (Baneum, banum, baia, Men.) Bainum, perhaps Παπα το αποβαλλειν τας ανας: quod pellat ex animo dolorem ac tristitiam.—Poss.

BAIRN or BARNE, i. e. Barn (qv.); so pronounced, and also so written in ancient ballads.

BAIT, s. v. -ING. -Bit or Bait, whether used (like moro, morcean, or morset;) for a small piece, part, or portion of any thing; or for that part of a bridle, which is put into a horse's mouth; or for that hasty refreshment which man or beast takes upon a journey; or for that temptation which is offered by treachery to fish or fool; is but one word diff. spelt, and is the past p. of the v. To bite.—Toohe.

A. S. Bitan, to bait or bite.

BAIT, v. s. -ING. To bay or bark at; to persecute in, to persecute with, baying or barking; with continued or repeated attacks.

Binium, incitare canes vel falcones venandi causa, (Verel in Ind.) Beito, incitare falcones aut canes venaticos in predam.—Wach. The stake to which bears, bulls, &c. are fastened, to be attacked by dogs, is called Baye. "As boistous as is here at bay." Hence (Jun.) Beights; now written Beite.—And it is formed regularly from To bay (qv.), thus—Bayed, bay'd, bayt, bait.

BAIZE, s. An inferior or coarser cloth;—to which some ascribe an Eng. origin.

D. Be-ey; Dan. i; Sp. -peta; It. Bajetta, i. e. Baise passua, from Bais, where this cloth was first made.—Mins. Rather, (says Sk.) from Bais, because it is an inferior, &c.—ut supra.

BAKE, v. To dry by heat.

-ER. A. S. Bac-an; Sw. -a; Ger. -hen; D. -ING. Bakken; Dan. Bager. Un-

BALANCE, s. s. To divide by weight -ER. into equal proportions; to bring to, -ING. to keep in, equipoise; to have equal weight, force, power, influence.

To try or prove the proportions; to hesitate, to waver or totter on the beam of the scales, when the weights are equal.

To distribute and arrange accounts, so as to ascertain, state, and settle the difference of the proportions, sums, or amounts.

Fr. & D. Balanc-e; It. -la; Sp. -a; L. Bilanz, (libra and lance.) Libra libra is the plate, platter or basin, in which the things to be weighed, or divided and distributed according to their weight, were placed; perhaps from Lance, to divide or distribute, or separate into portions. See Foss, Lances et Lance. Over-Out-Un-

BALCONY, s. A platform, on the outside of a window, supported by beams projecting from the wall. See BALK, s.

Fr. Balc-on; It. -one; from L. Palcus, palcus, palcus, palcus, Balcone.—Mén. Duchat and Sk. agree, from the Ger. Balk, a beam. "Vox (balko) a Francis relictus," says Wach; and from it, he and Ibre think the It. Balco is taken.

BALD, ad. Naked, bare, stripped, or deprived (of hair, or other covering; -NESS. of ornament, of value.)

Sk. prefers Fr. Pel, pt. of the v. Peler; i. e. to deplete or deplete of hair. From the ancient manner of writing the word—so. Balded—it seems to be the past p. of the v. To bali; to reduce to the roundness and smoothness of a ball,—by clearing away the hair.

BALDERDASH, s. Potus mixtus, according to Sk., who believes it to be compounded of Baldor, boldor, and dash; qd. potus temere mixtus. Dr. Jamieson suggests that it is allied to the Icelandic Baldar, enscurponum blateratio, vel stultorum balbuties.

BALDRICK. See BAUDRICK.

BALE, s. Torture, writhing, wretchedness, misery; that which causes -FULNESS, mischief, calamity, ruin, destruction.—Jun.

Go. Balejan, torquere. Nl balejete mis, (Mark v. 7; Luke viii. 28,) ne torquas me. In balestinum, (Luke xvi. 23,) in tormentis. (Vid. Jun. Gloss. Goth.) Bale, in Chaucer, is mischief, danger, destruction.

BALE, s. v. A round mass, a ball, of goods.—Sk.

Fr. & D. Bale; It. -la; Ger. -la. Fr. Emballer; It. Imballare; Ger. Einballen, merces compingere, to pack goods together.—Wach. Perhaps (Sk.) from Ball, qd. pila, seu massa rotunda mercium.

BALE, u. To lade out the water rushing into the ship.

A nautical word.—Sk. From the Fr. Bailler, to deliver, to free from.

BALIST, s. Fr. Baliste, an ancient engine, or kind of ordnance, whereout stones were thrown.—Cot. And thrown (says Potter) with so much violence, as to dash ("or to break") whole houses in pieces at a blow. See BRAKE.

Holland translates the L. Balista, (from Gr. Βάλλειν, to throw,) balist or brake.

BALK, s. Land heaped up between two -ISH. furrows, and extended (porrecta) in -'d. length.—Jun.

Balk'd, (Shak. Hen. IV.) heaped, piled up in balks or ridges; ridged up.

The L. Porca, i. e. terra porrecta.—Var. "Perhaps, Balk, a beam, (qv.) because it is extended like a long and straight beam."—Jun. See Ray, Jamieson, and Moore's Suffolk Words.

BALK, s. -ISH. A beam. See BALK, infra.—Slanyhurst.

Of uncertain origin, says Ibre. D. Balk; Ger. Balk; Sw. Balk; Dan. Balkke. Why not from Πελεκαι, to hew, to strike with an axe? since a beam is hewn wood.—Wach.

BALK, v. s. To disappoint, to defeat the expectation; to baffle, to puzzle: also, to do less than expected, whether wished or feared.

To pass over, to omit, to neglect, to treat with neglect.

Sk. thinks Balk, a beam, is from the It. Falicare, from Farecare, to pass over, to omit. Farecare, according to Mén, is from the L. Falicare, to pass over, to climb over.—Var. (See Foss. In voce Varus.) Balk, a beam, a furrow, a disappointment, have probably one origin with Bulk, bulge, (qv.) To bulge or belly out—app. to a beam or furrow, &c.; to a disappointment, met. when any thing standing forth, held out, offered, proves to be other than was expected. But see BAV.

BALKER, s. A balker or buer!—One who, standing on the cliff, and then discerning the quantity and course of the fish, (the pilchard,) directs the fishermen.—Carew.

BALL, s. BALLIARD, or BILLIARD. Any thing round, or rounded; as a cricket-ball, a billiard-ball, the eye-ball, the ball of the earth.

Sw. Ball; Ger. & D. Bollen, volvens, vertere, rotare, to roll, turn, round; Bol, rotundus.

BALL,* s. It. Ballare, to dance; Gr. Balla-λίζειν, to throw or cast about, sc. the legs and feet; from Ballaλίζω, to throw.—**Shirley*.

BALLAD, v. s. It. Ballata. A kind or -ER.* sort of poetry or song, so called -RY.† because adapted to a dance or -LETT. ball. Perché si cantava a ballo, -LAT-ED.‡ (Bembo in Men.) See BALL. -RY.‡ App. by our older writers to the Song of Solomon, as The Ballet of Ballettes of Salomon, called in L. Cantica Canticorum. BALUSTER, s. App. to—A small -TRADE. column used chiefly on terraces, -TERED. tops of buildings, and frontages. It is corruptly pronounced bannister. Balusters, when continued, form a balustrade.

Fr. Balustre; Sp. Balau-ter; It. -tro. Dalla forma simile alla balaustre, (from Gr. Balausteron, the flower or blossom of the pomegranate;) balaustre, si dice certa colonnetta, che regge l'architrave del ballatoio, (Vedi. La Crocea).—Men.

BAMBOOZLE, v. To delude, to mislead, -ER. to cheat, to cozen, to deceive, to -ING. beguile.

Not in our old lexicographers. Serenius has, To Bam, or Bamboozle, deludere; but he offers no etymology.

BAN, v. s. -NING, s. To ban, may be (clamorously, vehemently)—

To call, to call upon, to cite or summon; to pronounce an edict or order;—to bid; to forbid, to prohibit, to interdict, to excommunicate, to execrate, to curse. See TO BANISH.

Ger. & D. Bann-en, bann; Sw. -a; Dan. For-bænder, a word of very various applications.—See Wack. Iara, Kilian, and Men. A. S. Bannan, abbanan; which Som. interprets, —to command; to publish, to proclaim; to call forth, summon, congregate, or call together. Hence also, he adds, Bannes of marriage; and Fr. Ban-nir; It. -dire; Eng. Banish. Goldast (a name of no great weight perhaps, see Bayle.) derives Bann, coactio imperantis, from Band, vinculum, from Binden, vincire. This, however, is rejected by Wack., who asserts that from Bann, princeps, comes Bannan, to compel by imperial authority; whether by commanding, forbidding, summoning, punishing, restricting, exacting, publishing, declaring the law, or by any other means belonging to those in power. With respect to the Bannes of marriage, there appears little difficulty; to publish them, is to publish the bonds, bonds, or obligations of matrimony into which the parties enter.

Tooke derives Ban (to curse,) and Bane, from the v. To bay, thus: past p. Bayen, bay'n, bayn, bēn. See TO BAT, also BAD, BANE, and BART, (as dogs do a bear).—See Tooke, Svo. ed.

BAND, v. s. To tie, fasten, unite, join, -AGE. yoke together. See BIND.

-DOG. To be in, or yield to, bandowns, i. e. -ON.* bonds or bondage.

To join or unite together; to confederate for one common purpose. Om. -ER. -ING.

Band, in our old writers, is frequently written Bende. See ABANDON, and BOND.

Band-dog, (in Dan. Bonds-hænde), supposed to be so called because bound or chained, (canis catenarius,) should perhaps be written Ban-dog, so named from his loud bark.—**Chaucer*. Berners.

Ger. Bunde; D. Bende; Dan. Baund; Sw. Band. Band, the s. upon which the v. To band is formed, is the past p. of the v. To bind. A. S. Binden, ligare, nodare, vincire, obligare, to tie, to knit, to bind.—Som. Dis-Un-

BAN-DIT, s. -ro. One declared to be ban'd, banished, exiled, outlawed. An outlaw.

Fr. Ban-dit; It. -ito; Sp. -ido. Ban and ditto, (qv.) the past p. of Dicere, to say.

BANDORE. See PANDORE.

BANDY, s. v. ad. -ING, s. Bandy, a club, bent at the bottom; perhaps from the v. To bend.

To bandy,—to strike backwards and forwards from one to another, with a bandy.

To beat, or throw, or toss, to and fro; to give and take in turns; to exchange.

Bandy-leg, is bending-leg; bowing.

BANE, v. s. -FUL. Bane,—any thing es-

BAN

That which destroys, ruins; causes destruction or ruin; poisons, or renders poisonous.

See Banjos, ulcers, sores, wounds, (Luke xvi. 31.) Banjo fulla, full of ulcers, sores, wounds, (Luke xvi. 30.) A. S. Bane, destruction; Sw. Bane, a wound; perhaps (says Ihre) from Bana, percutio. In P. Fleishman we find Abana. But see BAN.

BANG, v. z. To beat or strike, to hit hard; to give repeated, heavy blows.

D. Banger, to beat with sticks, clubs; Sw. Bana, to strike.

BANISH, v. To forbid, to prohibit, to -ER. interdict, sc. from any place, -MENT. from staying or remaining in -N-TION. it; to order, command, condemn to leave or quit any place; to expel or drive away, to exile.—Blackstone.

Fr. Ban-ir; It. dire; Sp. ido. (See To BAN.)

Lat. Forbans, a banished man.—Som.

BANK, v. z. App. to—Any thing raised by, or to confine, a current of water; to the seat raised from the bottom of the boat; to the raised table or counter of merchants, traders, money-changers.

To bank, is to confine, or surround with banks; to throw up embankments. In Shak. (K. John,) Mr. Stevens suggests, that to bank, may mean, to sail along the banks. See BANCO.

Fr. Bano; It. & Sp. Banco; Dan. & D. Banche. According to some, (says Jun.) from the Dan. Banke, to beat, to strike, because they are constantly beaten against by the waves of the sea. Lat. says,—Bano, a long shole, shelf, or sandy hill in the sea, against which the waves do break. Sk. is content with A. S. Banc, tumulus. Wach. has—Bano, a hill, mound, heap, and any eminent or rising place. It is transferred, he adds, to all eminent or rising places for sitting or lying. Em-

-RUPT, ad. v. bank, or bench of money-

-RUPTCY. changers, &c.

Bankrupt, (by Sir T. More written Banke-ruptus,) from L. Bancus, Fr. Banque, the bench, table or counter of a tradesman; and ruptus, broken; and thus denoting one whose bench or table is broken up.

Bankrupt, —Fr. Ban-querote; It. carotta; Sp. carota. In the Mid. L. Rupius and Ruptus are used, as we use Bankrupt and Bankruptcy. See De Cange.

BANNER, s. The banner, band-roll, (also -ED. written banerol and bannerroll,) or

-OL. ban-sign, is perhaps merely—

-ET. The band-roll or band-sign, the sign of union; the flag or standard under which men are united or bound for some common purpose.

Banneret, —a small banner; also, the person bearing it. A degree next below a baron.

D. Ban-ler; Fr. bannier; Ger. -nler; It. -da, -niera; Sw. -er; Dan. -ner. In A. S. Bannega is the ensign, or banner. Wach. from C. B. Bann, exclaim. Ihre and Lye from Bando, signum; Bando-jen, significe.

BANQUET, v. z. The s. was sometimes

-ER. app. to that addition to a meal, called

-ING. now a dessert. Gen.—Sumptuous

-ANT.* and luxurious feasting.—Chapman.

Fr. Banquet; It. chetto; Sp. Banquete, Vanqueto; Ger. & D. Banquet, from Bank, a bench or table; because (convivæ) messmates sit or recline at the same bench or table, to eat, feed or feast together.—Sk. and Wach.

BANS, or BANNS, s. (of marriage), i. e. the bands or bonds. See BAN.

BANTER, v. z. To play upon with light

-ER. and humorous railery, mockery

-ING. or ridicule,—by ascribing doubtful or excessive merits or virtues; by eliciting concealed weaknesses, lurking follies.

Not in our old lexicographers, and of unsettled etymology. May it not be a dim. of Ban, past p. of Bay, to bark at?

BANTLING, s. Infans ante nuptias.—

Serenius. A child born, or at least begotten, before the marriage of the parents. Perhaps ban-telling, or bane-telling. Now more gen. app. to any infant.

BAPTIZE, v. To dip or merge frequently;

-ATION. to sink, to plunge, to immerge.

BAR, v. z. -FUL.* To defend, keep safe, to protect, to arm, to guard, to secure, to fortify, to strengthen. See BARGE, BARK, BARGAIN, BARON, BURGH, BARBAROUS, BARRICADE, and BARRISTER.

Barred, in Chaucer ("barred and plated of gold and silver; barred all of silk"), may be merely striped or crossed in the form of bars. (See To BARD.) To bar is also used for—

To guard against; to prevent; to obstruct. See HAUBERG.

A Bar, to secure a window, door, fire, house, city; a gate made of such bars; to secure or confine waters; to secure from ingress; to exclude; to keep apart—as the Bar of an inn; of a court of justice, at which Barristers sit, criminals are arraigned, &c.; and in this latter usage app. gen. to a court, a tribunal.—Shak.

Fr. Bar-re; It. & Sp. -ra. To bar, is the Go. & A. S. Bairgon, beorgan, birgan, byrgan, custodire, servare.—See Tookes. De Em-Out-Un-Up.

BARB, v. z. The s. Barb is app. to—

-ATED. The jags or reversed points of an

-ED. arrow or hook; to certain equip-

-ER, v. z. ments, caparison, armour, or

-ET. trappings of a horse or man.

See BARD.

Barbet is app. to—a certain covering or protection for the head.

Barb, in Chaucer (Troilus), is said by Mr. Tyrw. to mean a hood or muffler, which covered the lower part of the face and shoulders.

To barb, is also to cut close (the beard), to shear, to shave, to mow.

D. Barb-eres; Fr. -er; L. Barba, (of unsettled etymology, see BARBARISM.) a beard. Un-

BARB, s. A horse from Barbary.

BARBARIZE, v. A Barbarian is now

-ISM. app. to—One who is rude, fierce,

-ITY. cruel; not improved or polished

-IAN, ad. s. by the arts of civilization.

-IC, ad. s. To barbarize, is to reduce to a

-OUS. state of barbarism; to make, or

-OUS-LY. cause to be made, fierce, cruel,

-NESS. uncivilized.

Fr. Barba-re; It. & Sp. -ro; L. Barbarus; Gr. Barbapopos. Tooke suggests the Gr. Bapros, strong, with a reduplication of Bap, to give additional force. The barbarians seem to have been distinguished by Greeks and Romans for their strength. —See Tooke, 8vo. ed.

BARBEL, s. A fish, so called, says Geener, by reason of the barb, or wattels at his mouth, which are under his nose or chaps.—Walton's Angler.

BARBICAN, s. A casemate, or a hole in a parapet or town wall, to shoot out at; some also hold it to be, a sentrie, scout-house, or hole.—Cot.

"The Barbicans, because in old time the same had been a burge-kening, or watch tower for the citie."—Stow.

Fr. & It. Barba-cane; Sp. -ceno. Thwaites asks, May it not be barb-beacon? Spel. derives it from Sax. Burge-kenning, urbis seu propugnaculi specula. Others ascribe it to Ar. origin.

BARD, s. The kind of song which the

-IC. Bards sang is called Barditus by

-ISH. Tacitus, in his Germania; and Bar-

-LING. ditus is derived by Wach. from Ger.

Barten, pugnares. The Bards, then, were the composers of the war song, the song of battle; and their task was, martem accendere canta, to kindle warlike courage by their song. Du Cange says, that Bardire, is to send forth the cry of the stag; whence it has been supposed, that Bards were so called because they imitated the noise or bellowing of a stag.

BARD, -ed. A bard or barbed horse or harness may be a horse or harness—armed, guarded, protected.

A word of constant occurrence in our old chronicles, and of which Mr. Stevens thinks that Barb, barbed, may be no more than a corruption. Cot. interprets Bards, barbed; Barder, to barb, or trap horses, &c. The glossarist to Gawin Douglas says, Bardis, beards, manes of horses, or rather their trappings; thus making Barb and Bard equivalent, and of similar origin. (See BEARD.) In Chaucer (see BAR) we find "harness barred and plated," "a schilt barred all of silk." Upon this past tense, barred, barde, the v. To bard may have been formed. In Holland's Amnianus, limbia ferreis cincti, is rendered "bard about with guards of Steele." Fr. Barde-er; D. -eren; phalerare, phaleris ornare.—Kilian.

BARE, v. ad. To strip off; to denude; to

-LY. make or cause to be naked; to

-NESS. uncover; to make manifest;

-FACED. to bring to light; to expose;

-FACED-LY. to divest; to strip of ornament,

-NESS. concealment, protection.

Bare, ad. (of clothing), naked; (of flesh,) lean.

Bare-faced is used met.—Uncovered, unmasked, undisguised; sona.—Daring, audacious, impudent, shameless.

BARGAIN, v. s. To bargain, is to make -ING. a confirmed, strengthened, agree--ER. ment. After two persons have agreed upon a subject, it is usual to conclude with asking, Is it a bargain? Is it confirmed?—Tooke.

A bargain is—An agreement, a contract, confirmed, or strengthened, ratified, or assured.

"That every bargains made by the said marchants, &c. shal be firme & stable, so that none of both the marchants shall shrinke or giue backe from the bargains after that the earnest penie be once giuen and taken betwene the principal bargayners."—Hackluyt. See To BAR.

Fr. Barguigner; Go. Bairgan; A. S. Georgan, birgan, byrgan, custodire, servare.

BARGAIN, s. An armed fight or battle; a battle in which both parties are on their guard, well defended, protected, and secured.

BARN, n. s. -FUL. A barn ('bar-en, bar'n) is—A covered inclosure, in which grain, &c. is protected or defended from the weather, from depredation, &c.—Tooke. See TO BAR.
Go. Barra, to defend, to protect. Jun. traces it thus: Bere ara, (ara, locus,) berara, bera, barra.

BARN, BAIRNE, or BEARN. A child barren, or bera. Still in common usage.
A. S. Barna; Dan. Sw. & Ger. Barn. In Dan. Barn-dan is infancy. The past p. of Barn is A. S. Bearan, to bear.

BARNACLES, or BERNACLES, n. s. Bernacle is the common name of the shell Lepas anatifera. There are also Bernacle geese—"Birds that, about two hundred years ago, were believed to be generated out of wood, or rather a species of shell that often adheres to the bottoms of ships, or fragments of them, and were called Tree Geese."—Pennant. And see Men. in voce Bernacle.—"Drayton. Brown.

BARO-METER, n. s. -TRICAL. An instrument to measure weight—(the weight of the air.) Used met.

Gr. Baros, weight, heaviness; and metron, a measure.

BARON, n. s. A baron,—an armed, defenceful or powerful man. Now, a mere title. See TO BAR.

-ST. Fr. & Sp. Bar-on; It. -one. Etymologists have written very unsatisfactorily about this word. Tooke derives it from the Go. Barra-an, to arm, to defend, to strengthen. See Speel and Foss.

BARO-SCOPICAL, ad. Boyle seems to use Baroscope, as if the instrument were the same as a barometer, (Works, vol. iii. p. 219 et al.)

BARRACK, n. s. A strong building, (sc. compared with tents.) See BARRICADO.

Fr. Bar-que; It. -acca; Sp. -aca. This word is not found in our early lexicographers. Perhaps from Bar-ricado, -rique, barrack.

BARRATOR, n. s. -TRY. "Common barrety is the offence of frequently exciting and stirring up suits and quarrels between his majesty's subjects, either at law or otherwise."—Blackstone. See BARTER.

Fr. Bar-ot, -aler; It. -rara, -alar; Sp. -alar, to cheat;—A Cimbric Barattas, battle, fight, strife, contention, which word is now used apud Gothobolli. But from Dan. Norm. Barot, our lawyers have Barotter, barottry.—Hicks. Sk. thinks, a barrotter is one who harasses the bar or court with importunate litigations. See Jamieson.

BARREL, n. s. A stout, strong vessel. App. also to—The hollow of a gun; of the ear, &c.

Fr. & Sp. Bar-til; It. -tile. Jun. says, perhaps from Barna, repagulum, (see TO BAR), because English are held or contained in a cask, quasi in quodam repagulo; as if under bar, in security.

BARREN, ad. Barren, i. e. barred, -LY. stopp'd, shut, strongly closed up, -NESS. which cannot be opened, from which can be no fruit nor issue.—Tooke.

Sterile, fruitless; (met.) dull, stupid, uninventive, unproductive. See TO BAR.

BARRISTER, n. s. App. to—One who takes his station, stays, remains or continues at the bar; sc. to plead causes, &c.

Law L. Barristerius, republicanus, considicus.—Spet. Perhaps from Fr. Barreau, (Bar, and ester, to stay, remain, or continue.)

BARROW, n. s. A small carriage, borne along (by hand).

A. S. Bereus; Dan. Baare; Sw. Bar; Fr. Bervolle, (qd. roulette, role, Mins.) from the v. To bear.—Sk.

BARROW, n. s. A boar hog made a barren hog.—Mins.

BARROW. See BURROW.

BARTER, v. s. Barter, n. s. is app. to—An -ER. exchange of goods or wares for goods -Y. or wares; as distinguished from an exchange of goods for money, or buying and selling.

Fr. Bar-ter; It. -rattore; Sp. -star. The Fr. Barter (Cot. says) is, to cheat, cozen, beguile, deceive, lye, cog, foist in bargaining; also, to truck, scourse (see Scours), barter, exchange. It is to the latter application that the word barter has been long confined.

BASE, n. v. -LESS. The bottom, the foundation, the pedestal. Evelyn calls it, the sustent, prop or foot of a thing, (On Architecture.) Om. -MENT. Fr. Sou-bassement. To base, to found, to fix, or establish (upon a foundation)—a v. not now uncommon.

Fr. Bas, basse, basse; It. Basse, basso; Sp. Bas; L. Basis; Gr. Bas, (from bauein, to stand or go,) the foot; that upon which any thing stands, or rests, as the base of a pillar, tower, geometrical figure, &c. Sur-

Elyot; and Bawee is explained by Sk. (exclamare, furiose intonare,) to clamour aloud, to make a furious noise. To bog, as Fr. Abayer, is to bark at, to rail loudly at, to revile extremely (Cot.); and thus, to express loudly, hatred, dislike, detestation, abhorrence, contempt. A-De-Em-Un-

BASE, (of a horse, man, &c.) s. App. to the comparisons of a horse, to an article of dress; to bed furniture; is so app. from its low situation—dropping, hanging down.

BASE, v. To bid base, to play at bace, to bace, may merely be—

To bid, call, or challenge to the ground (of contest); to win or maintain, by running or otherwise, the ground; to keep moving about upon one spot of ground. "Young heifers bass by their dams."—Chapman.

Sk. says, To play or run at baysse or bayss. The latter mode of writing seems introduced to sanction his etymology from Bayss (laurus), with which he supposes the victor to have been crowned. Bayss is near akin to Bawee, (see BASE, ante), and may have been app. to the game, from the clamorous shouting with which it is played; or, merely as above explained.

BASENET, s. Fr. "Bassinet, a little bowl, a small basson; also the scull, sleight helmet, or head-piece, worn in old times by the French men of arms."—Cot. See BASIN.

BAT

BASTILLE, or BASTILE, s. A fortress -FROM. or fortification; a fortress or castle -TILLION. furnished with towers, donion, and ditches: (in Paris, la Bastille is as our Tower, the chief prison of the kingdom.)—Col.

Fr. Bastille, -ion; Sp. -ide. From the Fr. Bastir, to build, qd. mediocrum bellicum. But whence Bastir? Perhaps (says Sk.) from the Gr. and L. Basis, qd. Bastire, i. e. to raise upon a basis or foundation.

BAT, s. A. S. Bat, batt. Though the v. -LET. is not common in writing, it is in -OS. speech, part. among cricketers—at -TER. Westminster and Eton; as, He -OWNED. bate well, he is a good batter, &c.

That which beats, strikes, hits, batters.

Batem,—a staff, a truncheon.—E. Hall.
A. S. Bætan, to beat; Fr. Bâton, bâton.

BAT, s. A bird. See REE-MOUSE.

-TISH. Shak.

-TY. Sk. says, either from the A. S. Bat, a beat, because, with its wings expanded, it resembles a boat impelled by oars; or the Ar. Baptes, the Ar. name of the same bird. G. Douglas calls it Bak; and Dr. Jamieson says, the modern name in Scotland is Beckie-bird.

BATCH. A batch of bread is the bread baked at the same time.—Todds. Any entire quantity.

The past p. of Baken, to bake.

BATE, s. Gen.—A fight, a strife, a -ABLE. struggle, a contention, a contest. -FUL. Batable ground (terra pugnabilis), from the Fr. Battre, pugnare.—Sk. Also called debatable ground.

"Batable ground,—i. e. ground lying in so dubious a posture, it is hard to say to which side it belongs."—Fuller.

Bate, as in De-bate, Sk. thinks is from the A. S. Bætan, to beat, to strike. Ger. Batten; Fr. Battre; Low L. Batters, and L. Batture.

BATE, v. To beat or press down; to -LESS. lower, to depress, to lessen, to -MENT. diminish in quantity or number; -ING. to sink or cause to sink, to deduct or take away from, to shorten, by beating or pressing into a smaller space or compass.—Shak.

A. S. Bætan, to beat; to beat down.—Sk. A. E. Sur. Un.

BATHE, v. To wet, to wash, to soak in BATH. water or other liquid or fluid; to -ER. cover, steep, immerse or over--ING.whelm, as in a bath.

A. S. Ba-thian; D. & Ger. -den; Sw. -da. Be-Em. Fer. Un.

BATTAIL, s. To battail,—to prepare -ANT. for or against battle; to arm; to -OUS.† fortify; to secure; to defend -TALION. with fortifications.

Battalion,—a division of an army or armed force. See BATTLE and EMBATTAIL.

†Spenser. Gower.

Fr. Bat-taille; It. -aglia; Sp. -alla. From the A. S. Bætan, to beat, strike, fight. Em-

BAV

BATTEL, v. s. ad. To fatten, to fertilize;

-TABLE. to render fruitful or productive;

-TLER. because abounding in baises,

-FUL. bites, or bits.

-TLING. Upon the s. Battel, the v. appears to have been formed; and to be app. cons. as above explained.

Battel, (a term at Eton for the small portion of food, which, in addition to the college allowance, the collegers receive from their dames,) is bat-dæl. Bat-fui (a favourite term of Drayton) is a similar compound of the two pts. Bat and full.—Tooks. Battler is not an uncommon word in Wood's Athenæ. See TO BAIT, and BATTEN. Over-

BATTEN, v. To fatten, or become fat; roll or wallow in fatness or full feeding; to swell, or belly out.

This word seems to have succeeded and to have supplanted the v. To battel; and to be from the same A. S. v. Bætan, to bite, to feed, and cons. to fatten.

BATTER, v. s. To beat or knock against, -ER. to strike, to bruise; to wear out with -Y. hard usage.

Batter,—milk and flour, or other similar ingredients, batter'd or beaten together.

Fr. Battre; It. -ere; Ger. -en; from the A. S. Bætan, to beat. Un.

BATTLE, v. s. To fight, also to prepare

-MENT. for fight; to put in a state of de-

-MENTED. fence; to fortify, to strengthen,

-ING. to secure.

Battle, or battaille, (qv.) appears to have been app. to a particular division of the army; the mid or main body, as distinguished from vans and rears. See BATTAIL.

BATTOLOGY, s. Empty, idle, unrea-

-SON. sonable discourse.

1st.† Milton. Prymne. †Sir. T. Herbert. Whitelock.

Προσευχόμενοι δε μη βαττολογησιντες. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, (Matt. vi. 7.) The Gr. (says Dr. Hammond) is lit. To do as Battus did. He adds from Suidas: Battologieis—multiplying of words. The word itself is taken from one Battus, who made long hymns consisting of many lines, full of tautologies. Hesychius explains it as above.

BAUBEE, s. As this coin bore the bust of James VI. when young, some have imagined that it received its designation, as exhibiting the figure of a baby. But the name, as well as the coin, Dr. Jamieson adds, existed before his reign. Pinkerton, however, with whose derivation Dr. Jamieson declares himself satisfied, ascribes the first use of the word to a copper coin, struck in the reign of James VI. He derives it from basbillon, the worst kind of billon. (On Medals, vol. ii. p. 109.)

BAVIN, s. Baven,—the smaller trees, whose sole use is for the fire (Sk.);—perhaps, D. Bauwen; Ger. Bawen, edificare, to build; because it is made of—

The fragments of trees cut for buildings.

Versteegan derives bawd from bawle p. 333

BAW

BAW, v. Bawd, is bdd: the etymology Bawd, v. s. ad. and application support each other. Baude, joyous, according to Tyrw. is riotously joyous. Baude, dirty, foul, defiled, polluted. "Ye baw, quoth on:—Ye bawe, quoth a brewere," (see P. Ploughman.) i. e. Ye talk contemptibly, vilely, bddly.

Bauda, ad. Mr. Tyrw. says, is joyous. Fr. Baud-erie, -rie, pimping, keeping a bawdy-house. Baudy, ad. dirty.—Baudry, Sk. thinks, is either from the Fr. Bauder, bauderis, bold, boldness, or from the Fr. Broderie, from Broder, q. Border, a fringe or edge. Bald, in balderdash, and bawd, in ribandry, are probably the same word.

The Glossary to the reprint of P. Ploughman says, that Baw is still, in Lancashire, used as an interjection of contempt and abhorrence. Such usage is not confined to Lancashire; Dr. Jamieson tells us, that Bawph, in Sc. means "not good." Mr. Moore, in his Suffolk Words, says, "Bawda is, to abuse grossly." Baw, bawda, bawse, appear to be the same word, used to express (loudly) contempt, abhorrence; feelings appropriate to that which we call bad, or (the a pronounced broad) bawd, which is formed from bawgh or baw, by the addition of the term. ad.—bawgh-ed or baw-ed. And it admits of conjecture, that this baw may be the root of the v. To balk, qd. to do any thing bawdily, badly, or, as the Scotch write, bawchly, not so well as hoped or expected; and thus, To disappoint, &c. See Bauch, Bawchly, Bauchness, in Jamieson; and To Baz, and Baze.

BAWBLE, s. -ING, ad. Any light, pretty, showy, trifle or toy.

"A bawbling vessel was he captain of."—Shak.

Fr. Babioles; It. Babbola, bavola. Sk. suggests that it may be from Babe, It. Babolo (a dim. of his own formation), an infant; qd. an infant's, a child's plaything. Spel. voce Baubella (from baw and belle.)

BAWDICKS, s. A belt, a girdle, a bracelet.

The Fr. Baudrier, to dress, carry and colour the hides of kine, &c. is also explained by Cot. to signify, "to make belts or bawdricks; and Baudrier is derived by Men. through the medium of the Low L. Baldringus, from the L. Balleus. Du Cange accounts very diff. for Baldringus, baldring; he thinks it to be the ring or belt of a bold (bald) man.

BAWL, v. -ER. To clamour, to shout, to cry aloud.

Sk. applauds the conjecture of Mins. that bawl is from Bawles, the noise of dogs; others, from Balers, which Voss., after Festus, considers to be formed & sono vocis. It appears to be the dim. of Bay, v. bayel or baw-el, bay'l, bawl.

BAWN, s. appears to have been app. to—

Any habitation, dwelling, or edifice, whether constructed of stone, mud, earth, or other material.

Mr. Todd (Spenser's Works, vol. viii. p. 309) observes, that "bawn is evidently used by Spenser for an eminence." In the notes on Swift's Poem, "The grand question debated, whether Hamilton's bawn should be turned into a barrack or a malt-house," it is said, that "a bawn was a place near the house, inclosed with mud or stone walls, to keep the cattle from being stolen in the night;" and that Hamilton's bawn was "a large old house." In the Go. Baw-an, Ger. Bawen, is, habitare, construere sedem ubi habitas; and bawwin, domicilium, occurs, Mark v. 3: "He had his dwelling among the tombs."

BAZ

BAWSE,* a. "Bawses made of seals' skins." The writer perhaps means Baze, (qv.)—Drake. World encompassed.

BAWSE. See BASE.

BAWSIN, s. The Badger, (qv.) Perhaps Bawse-en (see BAWSE and BAY); and so called from the bawing or baying clamour with which it is hunted.

BAY, s. A bay is nothing else but a bending or curving of the shore.—Sk. For a similar reason the L. is Sinus.

Bay-window, because it is builded in manner of a bay or foed for ships.—Mins. It is a bow-window.

Whether app. to any recess of the sea-shore, or in buildings, in barns or windows, it always means one and the same thing; viz. bended or curved.—See Tooke.

From the A. S. Bagan, bygan, to bow or bend. Em. Un-

BAY, s. "The bates or berries (bacca) that it (the roiall laurell) beareth."—Holland. Plinie.

Bay is app. to a crown of garland, bestowed on warlike or literary merit; to the merit itself.

It may be derived (says Sk.) from the Fr. Baye, a berry; and Fr. Baye, evidently from the L. Baccæ.

BAY, ad. Bay, ad. is app. to a shade of -ARD. colour between red and brown.

-ARDLY. Bay-ard,—a horse, so called from its colour; a favourite colour: hence, a favoured, pampered, horse: bold and fervent: also app. met. to men bold, self-willed, headstrong, blind.

Fr. Baye; It. Baio; Sp. Bago & Fago; D. Baey; L. Badius; Gr. Baer or Bacon, the branch of the palm; so called, παρα το βαυ τιναν, because it cannot be easily torn away.—See Voss. and Men.

BAY, v. s. -ING. To bark at; to bark continually, loudly.

To keep or stand at bay; (sc.) to face the baying or barking dogs. The s. is app. to—

The noise of a dog, part. his repeated bark when his prey ceases to, or cannot, fly, and faces him; when that which angers him keeps before him. See BAD, BAWD; BAN, BASE.

Fr. Ab-bayer; It. -baiare; L. Bawbari; Gr. Bawar, Bawceiv. Sk. has various conjectures for the origin of this word. Bawes, or Bawes (in Sk.) was undoubtedly the same word.

BAYONET, v. s. Cot. says—A kind of small flat pocket dagger, furnished with knives; or, a great knife to hang at the girdle, like a dagger.

Fr. Bayon-ette; Sp. -eta, a new invented weapon, being a short dagger fixed at the end of a musket; so called, because the first bayonets were made at Bayonne, in France.—Delpino.

BAZAAR, s. App. to—A number of shops or stalls under the same roof.

From Pers. and signifying Marché, merchandise.

BE, v. -mre. To feel, or cause to feel; to have, or cause to have, feelings or sensations; to live, or have life; to exist, or have existence.

The usage of Be, ben, been, was very indiscriminate in our old writers.

In A. S. as in Eng. the words to which be is pref. are used also in their simple form as verbs:—Beggyrdum, to begird; gyrdan, to gird; bethencan, to bethink; thencan, to think. In Eng. this prefix be still appears in many instances to give emphasis to the application of the simple term; as, to be-dumb, to be-praise, to be-amar. And part when derision or contempt is intended; as, be-maddled, in Bp. Taylor; becurl, in Search; be-mingle, &c. in Sterne; be-press, in Mallett; beauschewen, be-tugged, in Churchill; be-tailed, in Goldsmith, &c. Be, or, dropping the e, & very easily unites, as its cognates (p, f, v,) also do, with a succeeding liquid, l or r; as be-lock, black; be-ride, drive. See AM, ARE. Som. Bha; Pura. Buden; Russ. Bu-ti; Sax. Bera, eme, Geri (Lye); esse, to be (Som.). Sax. Ic bis; D. Ic ben; Ger. Ich bin, I be. The etymologists do not attempt to settle the meaning of this word. See B, and also A, As. In Un-

BE, pref. See, in each instance,—for the etymology, and, where no explanation, for that also,—the word to which Be is pref.

BEACH, s. App. by Hackluyt to the -ED. pebble stones that lie between the -Y. water's edge and the main land.

Not found in our early lexicographers. Perhaps Beag, (from Bigen vel Bagan, to bend, to wreath,) whatever girds or surrounds.

BEACON, s. v. A beacon is—Any thing -ED. so placed that it may be ken'd, seen, -AGE. or distinguished,—intended as a sign, notice, or warning.

A. S. Beaccon, beacn, a token or sign. Beacconian, to make unto, to becken, to signify.—Som. Beaccon, Sk. thinks, may be from the A. S. Be and comman, to ken, to see. In G. Douglas, "Dat clarius e puppi signum." is rendered "Furth of his eftschip ane takin gait he stent."

BEAD, s. Bead (says Tooke), in the A. S. -ROLL. Beade, oratio, something prayed, -S-MAN. —because one was dropped down -WOMAN. a string every time a prayer was -BIDDING. said, and thereby marked upon the string the number of times prayed. Spherulæ precatorias.—Sk.

It is the past p. of Biddan, orare, to bid, to invite, to solicit, to request, to pray. See BID.

BEADLE, s. A messenger, a servitor; -DELEY. a bearer of messages, orders, -BLESHP. warrants; an officer to execute certain orders, mandates, &c.

Bedellus in Du Cange. Sp. Bed-el; Ger. -elt; A. S. Bedel, bedel (hard-del), from Biddan, benden, to bid, to tell, to order; because (Jun.) he proclaims and executes the will of the superior powers. See Bedean, Bedeanus, and Bidello, in Men.

BEAGLE, s. A dog, so called, perhaps (Sk.) from Fr. Bugler, to bellow; from their deep and sonorous bark (or bay).

Fr. Bigles, of which Men. offers no etymology. Sk. also suggests, that both the Eng. and Fr. words may be derived from It. Piccolo, (from L. Pascuis.) qd. cani piccoli, smaller dogs; for such beagles are, when compared with other dogs of the chase. It is perhaps Bay-ell, a dim. of Bay, to bark: the y changed into the guttural g.

BEAK, s. The beak is that which picketh -ED. or pecketh: also app. to any thing -ER. shaped or placed prominently, like the beak of a bird.

A beaker (Sk.) may be—a beaked cup, such as perhaps were formerly in use.

Fr. Bec; It. Becco; Sp. Pico; D. Beek. Fr. Bec-quer; It. -care, to peck; A. S. Picas; Ger. Picken, to pick or peck. Ger. Becher, D. Becher. Voss. derives from L. Bacer, explained by Baculus to be vas vinarium; and this Beacer or Bacer perhaps from Beckus. Men. derives It. Bicchiere from Gr. Bacos, vas sive urna habens anas.—Hayck. See also Wach. Beccus,—Antortus Primus: Cui Tolosa nato oghomen in pueritia Becco fuerat; Id. valet gallinæ rostrum.—Suet. in Vitellio.

BEAM, s. -Y. The beams or rafters of a house sustain the whole building; the beam of a balance sustains the scales appended to each end.

Also app. to—The horn or antler of a stag. "The beamy stag."—Dryden.

A. S. Beam, Matt. vii; D. Boom. "In A. S. (Jun.) Beams est arbor; from Go. Began, the true etymology of which I have still to seek." Wach. suggests, that Go. Begms may be immediately from Icel. Byggja; and A. S. Beam, from Ger. Bamen, to build.

BEAM, v. s. A ray of light emitted from -LESS. an enlightened mass; an emission, -Y. an effusion of light. Used met.

To beam,—to emit such rays; to emit, to effuse, to throw light, warmth; passion or strong feeling; to emit or shoot forth, to effuse, to kindle.

A. S. Beamian, radiare, to shine, to cast forth rays or beams of the sun.—Som. And this Sk. declares to be from the preceding Beam, because a ray or beam represents the figure of a beam drawn out in length. In—(en.)

BEAN, s. A kind of pulse.

Ger. Bohn; D. Boon; Sw. Borna; A. S. Beon, bien. Jun. thinks, from Gr. Bvavov vel vavov, the same with vavov, which Eustathius would believe to be so called vava to vavv alpha, because they produce blood.

BEAR, v. To carry, to support, to up—-ER. hold, to sustain, to undergo, to -ING. suffer, to endure.

-ABLE. To carry, to stand firmly under or against; to resist, to repress, to urge, push or press,—upon or against.

To carry, or bring forward or forth, to produce; (subaud. fruit, children, &c.) See BARN.

To bear in hand, Mr. Steevens says, is "to delude with false promises." It is merely to carry along with us, to lead along, as suitors, dependents, expectants, believers.—Chillingworth.

Go. Batran; Sax. Baran, baran, beoran; Ger. Baren; D. Beuren; Sw. Bära, bära; ferre, portare, parere. Gr. Φερ-ειν. A-For-Mis-Over-Un-Up-

BEAR, s. May not this animal (and Boar -ISH, also) derive its name from the -HEED, or Old Eng. v. To Bay; It. Baiare? -WARD. —Bay, bay-er, baer, bare, or bear. See BRUTE and BOAR, and BEAGLE.

"I take the meaning (of the word bear) to be, that one who ensures a real value upon an imaginary thing, is said to sell a bear."—Tattler.

A. S. Bera, bers; Ger. Bar; D. Beer; Sw. Björn; Dan. Bær-er. The northern etymologists abandon this word to Gr. Beipon, which they find in Hesychius interpreted, pilosum, villosum, (ursus, quasi hirsutus, hirsutus, pills horrens.)

BEARD, v. s. To beard is to oppose face -ED. to face in a hostile or daring -LESS. manner.

Mr. Steevens observes, that, "in ancient language, to head a man, was to cut off his head, and to beard him signified to cut off his beard; a punishment which was frequently inflicted by giants on such unfortunate princes as fell into their hands."

A. S. Beard; D. Beard; Dan. & Ger. Bart. Wach. thinks perhaps from Ger. Barren, A. S. Brytan, secare, dissecare, (which he finds so interpreted by Benson only) to cut, pare, or shave. Otherwise: from Ger. Baren, to shew, to manifest; because the beard shows or manifests, or is the sign of, manhood. Un-

BEAST, s. An animal,—opposed to man; -LY. distinguished from birds, fishes, -LINESS. insects.

-INGS. Fr. Best-e; It. & Sp. -ta; Ger. Beasts; -LIHOOD. Dan. Beste; from the L. Bestia; perhaps so called, q. Beastia, from bestia, to offer violence. See Foss and Martinius. Un-

BEAT, v. s. To hit, knock, strike or dash; -ER. to thresh, whether with sticks or -ING. flats, or any other thing: to impel or give impulse to.

To beat down,—to level, to depress, to lower, to subject, to subdue, to repel, to conquer.

To beat into, (met.)—to impress or imprint by repetition; to inculcate.

A. S. Beatan, beatan; Ger. Bat-ten; Fr. -tre; It. -tere; Sp. -tir; L. Batuere. Re-Un-

BEATH, v. "Beathing or bathing wood by the fire. Setting or straitening unseasoned wood by heat."—Gross. Norf. and Suff. A. S. Bethian, bathian, to bathe.

BEATIFY, v. To make, or cause to be, -IC. blissed or blessed; happy; to -IC-AL. bring into a state of happiness -ALLY. or felicity.

-ATION. From Beo, beatue, and fo. Beo,

BEATITUDE. (Voss.) may be deduced from Beo, i. e. Beo. Thus, Beo will be facio ut res eat, sive procedat; I so act, that the matter may go on, or proceed; so. succeed, or go well.

BEAU, s. A Beau (bellus homo, of Mar- -ISE. tial) is a good, smart, pretty, -SHIP. dresser; one who decks himself prettily, smartly, gaily, according to the fashion of the times. Beaux;—see BUCK.

From Fr. Beau, good. In G. Douglas, Beo ochyris, is Good sire. In Gower, Beau retreat, is a good retreat. See BEAUFRE.

BEAVER, s. "The Blewer, in Pontas, will bite downe the trees growing by the river sides, as if they were cut with an axe."—Holland. Plinius.

A. S. Befer; D. Bewer; Ger. Biber. A word (Wach.) common to most languages, and, by consent of all, from L. Fiber; because this animal inhabits the edges (fibras, from finis) of the water.

BEAVER, ad. s. Made of the skin of the animal, the Beaver.

BEAVER, s. -ED. Beavere, or Beaver, is—That part of the helmet, which lets down to enable the wearer to drink; and is so exposed to catch the drops or dribbling. By Shak. and others it is diff. app.

Fr. Beavér-e; It. -e; Bevero, from Bevo.—Mca. It. Beo-a; Fr. -e, are, sham, slaver. Beavere (Cot.) is the bib, mocket or mocketter, to put before the bosom of a (slavering) child.

BEAU-PEER, s. A good companion, or friend.

From Beau and peer, phere, or fore, (see FRAM.) companion, associate.

BEAUTY, v. s. Beauty is a term of -EOUS. most extensive application.

-EOUSLY. 1. To those qualities or ob- -EOUSNESS. jects, which are agreeable or -IFUL. pleasing to the senses, part. to -IFULLY. the eye and ear; as colour, -IFULNESS. form and motion; and the various combinations of them:— -IFT, s. to sounds, and their combina- -IFIER. tions.

-IFYING. 2. To the intellectual and moral qualities of man; and to the productions of the human mind.—Hammond.

BE-CALL, v. In Morte Arthur, By-calle, which Ellis explains,—accuse.

D. Be-kallen, alloqui, colloqui.

BE-CALM, v. -ING. To becalm, is to make or cause to be calm. And calm, as the Fr. Calme, is—Still, quiet, peaceable, fair, gentle, unmoved, without storm, without surges.—Cot.

BE-CAUSE, co. Written Bicas, bicause, bycause, (be and cause.) Cause being; there being cause; "because of his sickness," his sickness being the cause. "Because we earn before we eat," we earn before we eat being the cause why—our food is so very sweet.

b, as in a hundred instances: Φηγος, so called αρο του φηγου, to eat, because the mast-bearing tree supplied men with food in the earliest ages. (Q. Be-ec,—see OAK.)

BEEF, s. ad. App. to—The flesh of kine: formerly to the animal, as the plural, Beeves, still is.

Fr. Bœuf; from the L. Bos, bovis; the Gr.

BEER, s. Ger. & D. Bier. In A. S. Bere is barley. Goldast thinks, a pyris; beer being first made of pears. Voss. from the L. Bibere, biber, and (extrito b) bier. Som. from Heb. Bar, frumentum. Noel (cited by Som.) says Beer is metheglin, or a kind of drink made with honey, whence it hath the name of Bee. Wach. quotes Luke i. 15, “And he ne drineth win ne beer,” whence he infers that beer was made of any grain, or from honey or pears, &c.; and supposes the Welsh Berwy, coquere, to be the parent of the word. Single beer and double beer seem app. to beers of different strength.

BEEBLE, v. s. Beetle, a mallet, (Sk. & -BROWS. Jun.) perhaps from the v. To -BROWED. beat; that which beateth, smiteth,
-HEADED. or with which we beat or smite.
A three-man beetle was one so heavy, that it required three men to manage it.—Nares.
Beetle-headed, as thick as a beetle. Beetle, the insect, Sk. also supposes to be from the same v. To beat; because in their evening flight, they beat against us. Beetle-brow, is a brow overhanging like that of a beetle.
Hence, Mr. Malone thinks Shak. coined the v. To beetle, to hang over.

D. Be-looven, Ghe-looven; Ger. Lauben, Ge-lauben; A. S. Lyf-an, Ge-lyf-an; Go. Leub-jan, Ge-laub-jen, credere, fidem dare sive habere; to credit, to give or have faith.

The etymologists do not attempt to account for this important word:—It is, undoubtedly, formed upon the D. Lo-ven; Ger. -ben; A. S. Lyf-ian, Be-lyf-ian; Go. Liban, vivere, to live or be-live, to dwell. Live or less, be- or bi-live or less, are used indifferently by old writers, whether to denote vivere or credere, (See LEVA.) In R. Gloucester, to "biense here," to "biense without the town," to "biense all the winter," is to live or continue to live, to dwell. In the same writer, "Right by-leave him taught," is—taught him to live rightly,—taught him a rule by which to be-leave, or to live; and "gave him Christendom," i. e. Christianity,—made known to him the life of Christ, how he *be-leave*d or lived,—as told in the Gospels of Christ. In P. Plouhman, "to bring forth your bi-leave," is to bring forth that by which you may live. In Berners, "He leuth every man still in his own bi-leave," is, his own living or dwelling-place; his dwelling, his domain. Dis- Mis- Un-

BE-LIKE, av. -LY. Belike, in our old writers, and in vulgar speech at the present day, is used to denote—

It is likely, it is probable, it is credible; it may be; probably; perhaps.

BE-LIMED,* pt. Glued, fastened together, entangled, as with lime.—**Hobbes*.

BE-LIVE,* BLIVE,† av. Be there life, or liveliness: with activity, with spirit; quickly, instantly.—**Spenser*. †Chaucer.

BELL, v. s. BELFRY. To bell,—"As loud as belleth wind in hell," (Chaucer,) i. e. bel-loweth.

To bell is also to form the shape of, to grow in or into the form or shape of, a bell.

To bear the bell, Mr. Nares explains, to win the prize at a race, where a bell was the usual prize; and he quotes examples from Saltonstall and Camden. Mr. Todd produces a quotation from Riche, which, he thinks, countenances the opinion, that the expression is deduced from the sheep bearing the bell; a bell-weather, (qv.):—"My prick-ear'd ewe, since thou dost bear the bell."

A. S. Bell-an, to bellow; Ger. & D. -en, to bellow, and to sound a bell. Spel. says, Petris, unde nostrum vernaculum bel.

BELLE, s. Beldam, Mr. Nares observes, BELDAM. is used in Spenser as belle dame, -SIRE. fair lady. It seems, then, to -LIBONE. have been used as good dame, goody, grandam; then app. to any old woman; to an old witch or hag.

BE-MOCK,* v. To deride, to scoff at; to jeer or gibe, to ape or imitate, scoffingly, jestingly, in derision or contempt.—Shak.

BE-MOIL, v.—Shak.

BE-MONSTER,* v. Monster,—any thing enormous, prodigious, frightful.—Shak.

BE-MOURN, v.—Wiclif.

BE-MUFFLED, pt.—Sterne.

BE-MUSE, v. To bemuse, in wine, or beer; to indulge the musings, the thoughts or meditations, which wine or beer produces.

BE-NAMED,* pt. Called, denominated. **Sidney*.

BENCH, v. s. -ER. Also written Benk. Dan. Bank. Wach. says, Banc, (see BANK)—

A hill, mound, heap, and any eminent or rising place. It is transferred, he adds, to—

All eminent or rising places for sitting or lying, (for any purpose.) Dis-

BEND, v. s. To move out of a right or -ER. straight line, to bow, to crook, to -ING. curve; to turn, (ac. out of a direct BENT, s. course, to a particular end,) to incline. And thus the s. is app. met. to—

The inclination, the disposition of the mind; the course, direction, determination of the thoughts, studies, pursuits, passions.

Bent, is app. by Chaucer and Dryden, to the bending, curvature, declination, declivity of land.

A. S. Benden; Fr. Bender or Bander. Dis-Over-UN-

BE-NEATH, pr. The same as Below, (qv.) It is the imperative be compounded with the s. Neath. (See Tooke.) Nether and nethermost, i. e. lower and lowermost, still continue in common use. See NETHER.

A. S. Bensoth, Bensothan; D. Benoden.

BENE-DICT, s. As now app. Bene-

-ION. diction is—-IONARY, s. A blessing, a wishing of all good to; an utterance or expression of good wishes, grace or favour.

L. Bene-dicere, dictum, to speak well of. Fr. Bénédiction; It. -dizione; Sp. -dicion.

BENE-FACTION, s. A doing of a service, a favour, a good office; a BENE-TRESS, stowing of a charitable donation. Also app. to the service, favour, good office done; the charitable donation bestowed.

L. Bene-facere, -factum; to do well, to do good, to do a service.

BENE-FICENCE, s. Any benefit or -FICENT, service. "Which ben -FICENTLY, partneres of benefice," -FICE, Wiclif, partakers of benefice, -FICED, (Bible, 1551.) -FICELESS, Benefice, in feudal times, -FICIAL, s. ad. was app. to the gratuitous -FICIAL-LY, donations of estates (in -NESS, beneficium, id est, usu-
-FICIAL-ARY, ad. s. fructum); to things given -ENCY, for the benefit of the church (in beneficium ecclesie). The applications of Benevolence, Beneficence, and Benefit, are not badly distinguished by Sir T. Elyot.

Beneficence is benevolence (i. e. good will, kind wishes) "in operation or endeavour." It is the doing of, or the endeavour to do, an act of goodness, of kindness; to do a favour, an advantage, a service. "And that virtue [beneficence] if it be in operation, or (as I mought saye) endeavour, is called than beneficence: and the dede (vulgarly named a good tourne) maye be called a benefyite."—Elyot.

BENE-VOLENCE, s. Good will; a -ENT, will or wish for good, for the -ENTLY, good, or happiness of others; of -OUS,* our kin or kind: kind will, wish, or desire. See BENEFICENCE.

Also app. to—A contribution of sums of money—and orig. so named from the liberality of the contributors: after, a compulsory tax.—Puller.

Fr. Bénévo-lence; It. -lo, -lenna; Sp. -lo, -lencia; L. Benevolentia, from Bene and volo, volens, volentia, to will.

BENE-NIGHT, v. To go down (sc. in darkness, gloom,) to overtake, to overshadow, to shroud, to overwhelm, (sc. in darkness, in gloom, in ignorance.) Un-

BENIGN, ad. The application of the -ANT, word is to—

-ITY, Those qualities or dispositions which -LY, are productive of good, with a kind intent. To that which is—Gentle, courteous, gracious, kind, liberal, bountiful.

Voss. rejects both the etymologies of Festus; sc. benignus dicitur proprie, qui bonis, et dignis largitur; or benignus from bene signendo. He prefers benus, addito gnus, but what gnus is he says not; and Martinus thinks gnus, unless productio vocis, may be genus: the Gr. Eurygnus, though usually app. to the well-born, might have been app. to the well-natured; the kind. *Fr. BE-TWEEN, -twixt, pr. Separating, dividing, into two; shared by two—two persons, two parties. See ATWEEN.

Between (formerly written twween, a-tween, by-tween,) is a dual pr. to which the Gr., L., It., Fr., &c. have no word correspondent. It is the A.S. imper. Be, and Tween or Twain. Between is the imper. Be, and the Go. Twos, or two.—Tooke.

BEVEL, s. v. ad. That which forms or shapes angles, or by which angles are formed or made.

Ger. Bugel, dim. of Bug, from Bugen, to bow, flectere in angulum.

BEVER, *v.* s.* -AGE. Beverage is app. to—any drink; usually a pleasant liquid mixture; formerly, to a drink given as a reward for labour; and even to the expected reward itself.—Brewer.

Fr. Bewerage, bewerage; It. Beveraggio, from the v. Bibere; L. Bibere. The afternoon and evening computations (says Spel.) in academiarum jurisque collegiis, are called Bevens.

BEVY, s. Bevy, in the language of sportsmen, is now confined to quails.

A word of unknown etymology. Sk. says, It. Beca, perdicum ternio; perhaps because they are accustomed to drink together, from the It. Bevens, L. Bibere, to drink. In the gloss upon Spenser, (Shep. Calendar,) it is said, "A bevis of ladies, is spoken figuratively for a companie or a troupe; the term is taken of larkes: for they say a bevis of larks, euen as a couey of partridges, or an eye of pheasants." Can it be from the v. To vie?

BE-WAIL, v. -ING. To utter the yell of distress; to utter loudly, sc. grief, sorrow.

To complain, to lament, to moan, to deplore. Un-

BE-WAKE, v.—Gower.

BE-WARE, v. To look at or after, to take heed, to be cautious, to be upon the guard, to guard against, to avoid, to shun; to take heed or care of; to use, to employ, carefully, thriftily.

To ware, or beware money, Ritson explains—to expend, to lay out.

BE-WEEP, v. A.S. Wepan, bewepan. To weep, to weep for, to bewail, to lament, to bemoan, to deplore.—Som. To shed tears.

BE-WET, v. To wet, water, or moisten.

BE-WEVED,* pt. Clothed, involved, infolded, inwrapped; and, as it should seem from Fabian, entangled, ensnared.

**Fabian*.

The Go. Bi-waiþyan (Luke xix. 43) is rendered by Jun. coarctare: and he observes, that as our clothes constrain and confine us all around, Bi-waiþyan began to be used for Amicti, to throw round. A.S. Wefan, weofan; D. Weeven; Ger. Weben, to weave, (qv.)

BE-WHAPED. See AWHAPE.—Gower.

BE-WHORE,* v. "Hoor.—I find this anciently written hure, and I find hure to be also used and written for the word hyre; and because that such incontinent women do commonly let their bodies to hire, this name was therefore aptly applied unto them."—Verstegan, c. 10.

**Shak. Beau. & F.*

BE-WIELD,* v. To manage, to sway; to bear or move with full command.

**Holinshed*.

BE-WILDER, v. To wilder or be-wilder is, to cause to be in the state of one, who finds himself in a wild or wilderness; at a loss which way to go; to puzzle, to perplex.

BE-WINTER, v. To cause, to produce, the effects of winter. "Tears that bewinter all my year."—Cowley.

BE-WITCH, v. To enchant; to use -ER. sorcery; to charm, to overpower -ERY. by charms, to fascinate; to over- -ING. power, to prevail, by allurements -INGLY. or enticement. **Milton*. Un- -MENT. -FULL.*

BE-WONDERED,* pt. Surprised into a state of stupefaction.—**Sidney. Faifrefax*.

BE-WRAP, v. To inwrap, (qv.)

**Hall. Faifrefax. Mir. for Mag.*

BE-WRAY,* or BERAY, v. To dirty, to befoul; to bespatter with dirt.

**Hynde. Milton. Holland*.

Serenius thinks from Lal. Hrd, cadaver, a corpse. Sk. says, perhaps from the v. Array, vestire, i. e. concacare, confortare. It is probably from the A.S. Wrgan, to cover, sc. with dirt, with filth.

BE-WRAY, v. To accuse; i. e. to inform -ER. or be an informer; a betrayer. Rit- -ING. son supplies an example of the use of the simple word wray.

A.S. Wrgan; D. Wroeghen, accusare, prodere, deferre, to accuse, to discover, to bewray.—Som. Wrag-an may be wrag-an, to act covertly.

BE-WREKE,* v. To awreke, (qv.)

**Mir. for Mag. Berners*.

BE-WROUGHT, pt.—B. Jonson.

BE-WYMPLED,* pt. D. Wimpelen, to veil, to cover with a veil; to infold, to involve.—Kilian. **Gower*.

BE-YETTE,* s. Sk. says, "No bit, no whit." The meaning is probably this,—the beget, the get, the gain, the possession, the advantage.—**Gower*.

BE-YOND, pr. "Beyond any place," means "be passed that place," or "be that place passed." Beyond expectation,—be expectation passed, surpassed, exceeded.

Beyond (in the A.S. With-geondan, bigond, be geond) means be passed. It is the imper. Be, compounded with the past p. geond, geoned, or geoned, of the v. gan, gangan, or gongan, to go, to pass.—Tooke.

BEZZLE, s. v. -ER. To bezzle, seems gen. to be app. to—guzzling:—

BID

To waste or squander in guzzling, or drinking; in riot or prodigality.

St. suggests, among other things, that it may be Beastie, to act the beast. Mr. Todd thinks it is the old Nor. Fr. Beater, beselt, beseltes, embezzeled (Kelham, Nor. Dict.); and that this Beater is the parent of our modern word Embezzle, (qv.) But neither the Nor. Fr. nor the Eng. are yet accounted for.

BIAS, v. & ad. ov. -DRAWING. To turn away, out of, a straight line: met.—

To turn away, from a right, fair, impartial judgment.

Fr. Bi-ais or -age, -aiser or -ager. To crook, stand askew, to fetch a compass, go away, make about.—Cot. Men. from It. Bieco, and It. Bieco from Bio-oculus. The editor of Men. "that the old Gallic Bihay resembles the Eng. Biway." In Fr. Bihayer, Hayer is probably Hauser, to hoist, or raise, sc. out of an horizontal position; turn out of a straight or right angle. Un—

BIB, z. n. A bib, (Sk.) "is a cloth stretched over the breast of an infant, that -BING. it may imbibe the overflowing -ULOUS. liquid," perhaps, while the infant imbibes—or feeds.

A man who drinks much, frequently, is called a bibber, a tippler, a sot.

BIBBLE-BABBLE, s. Merely Babble-babble.

BIBLE, s. Bible is app. by pre-eminence to the Holy Scriptures. Chau—
-ICAL. cer furnishes usages of the
-IO-THREE. word as app. to any book.
-THE-CAL.
-CARY. Bibliothecary,—the store room
-LATRY. or depository for books; now
-MANIA. eom. called the library.

Biblos sive Biblos, is an Egyptian plant, of which a material for writing upon was made.

Bibliothecary —Fr. Biblio-thèque; It. -teca: Sp. & L. Bibliotheca, from Gr. Bιβλιον, a book, and θηκη, a depository.

BI-CIPITAL,* ad. -Tous.* Two-headed.
*Brown.

L. Biceps (bis-ceps), bi, binus, two; and caput, Gr. κεφαλή, the head.

BICKER, v. To be always pecking at, -ING. attacking, skirmishing; squab-
-MENT.* bling, or quarrelling with; also, to move unsteadily, to quiver.—*Spenser.

St. mentions the Welsh, Biers, conflictus; but he is strongly inclined to believe it of A. S. origin. He suggests the v. Picker, to fight with pikes. In the A. S. Pycen; D. Picken or Bicken, pickeren; Ger. Bicken, is to peck at; and bicker (p into b) may be—et supra.

BI-CORNED, ad. -CORNOUS. Having two horns.

L. Bi, binus, two; and cornu, a horn.

BID, s. To require, to demand, to com-
-D-ER. mand (sc. any thing to be done):
-ING. to solicit, to invite, to request, to pray. See BEAD.

To require, or demand, sc. for a certain price; to offer, or propose to give.

BI-ENNIAL, ad. Living, lasting or enduring, two years.

L. Bi, and annus, a year.

BIER, s. -BALES. That which bears, sc. a corpse to burial.

That which bears—a sick person; a litter. A. S. Bæran, to bear.

BI-FID,* ad. Cleft in two, (bis.)

*Common in works on Natural History.

BI-FOLD, ad. Two-fold.

BI-FORM, ad. -ITR. Having two forms or shapes; double formed.

BI-FRONTED, ad. Having two fronts; double fronted.

BI-FURCATED, ad. -ION. Separated, divided, cleft asunder, like a fork. Bala writes bifurked.

BIG, v. ad. Large, enlarged, great, ample; -LY. magnified, of great size, magni--NESS. tude or extent; extended, distended; expanded; filled out in bulk, swollen, tumid.

Big is much used pref.—

Dr. Jamieson says, "that a biggin is a house properly of a larger size, as opposed to a cottage." He also produces, from Ritson, some instances of the use of byggy, signifying habitable, commodious; and others, where it may signify big, i. e. large. Ritson gives no explanation, but evidently considers them the same word diff. app.

Perhaps from the A. S. Byrgan, byrgan; Sw. Bygga; Eng. To big, to build; Adificare, struere, adstruere, to build, to pile or heap up; and thus to increase the bulk or size, to enlarge, to form into a large mass, to magnify.

BI-GAM,* s. A bigame is one twice mar--Y. ried, whether the first spouse be living
-IST. or not. A divorced woman who married again was also called a bigame.

*Bp. Peacock.

Gr. διγάμος, dis or bis, twice, and γάμος, to unite in marriage; (A. S. Gym-an. See GROOM.)

BIGGIN, s. A kind of cap, Mr. Steevens says, at present worn only by children, but so called from the cap worn by the Beguins, an order of Nuns. "From the biggen to the nightcap;" Mr. Gifford interprets, "from infancy to age."—B. Jonson.

BIL

BIGOT, ad. s. A hypocrite, or one that -ED. seemeth much more holy than he
-IC. is: also a scrupulous, or supersti-
-IC-AL. tious fellow.
-ALLY. Speight says, "Bigin, (in Chau-
-RY. cer) bigot, superstitious hypocrite." Upon which Thynne remarks, "whiche sence I knowe y<sup>t</sup> maye somewhat beare, because y<sup>t</sup> saurethe of the dispositione of those Begins or Beguines, for that ys the true wrytinge."

The French at this day apply the word bigot, to one superstitiously religious, not certainly from the oath bi-got, as Men. thinks; but rather from the A. S. Bigan, colere; and hence also Begine, a religious woman. (Wach. in v. Bei-Gott.) Cot. says, Bi-got, an old Nor. word, (signifying as much as de per Dieu, or our—for God's sake) made good Fr. and signifying—as above. Un-

BI-LANDER,* s. A boat or vessel, fit only to keep close to land.—"Dryden.

D. Be-lan-den, to land; Fr. Be-lan-dre.

BILBO, s. A kind of sword or rapier, and BILBOES. also of stocks for the feet; so
-SMITH. called, because made at Bilboa.

BILE, s. App. to—An ulcerous tumour.
See BOIL.

A. S. Bile, ulcus; D. Bylle; Ger. Buhel; Sw.
Beld. In F. Plouhman, Bale. Jun. says, "Bylle vel pylle est tuber, & pyllus, protuberans, prominens." Wach. that Bent is a stroke, a blow; the mark made by a blow; a tumour; from the
A. S. Bisan, to give a blow, to strike; yet he doubts whether the signification can be transferred from a tumour (a tubercule) to an ulcer (ad ulcera).

BILE, s. -IOUS. Used met.:—"The bile is of two sorts, the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, which is a sort of repository for the gall; and the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver."—Arbuthnot. Om. BILIARY.

Fr. Bile; L. Bilis, from Gr. χολη.—Voss.

BI-LITERAL, ad. Consisting of, formed by, two letters, (literæ.)

BILK, v. To cheat, to defraud, to elude.
Mr. Gifford says, "Bilk seems to have become a cant word about this (B. Jonson's) time, for the use of it is ridiculed by others, as well as Jonson.
It is thus explained in Cole's English Dictionary:
—"Bilk, nothing; also to deceive." Lye, from the Go. Biliskun, which properly signifies insultando illudere.

BILL, v. s. The bill, beak, or nib of a bird, the nose or snout of a beast or fish, the snout or beak of a ship.—Som.

To bill, (met.) to fondle, to play the part of fond lovers.

A. S. Bile. Perhaps from the A. S. Pullian, to pull. The beak, that which pecketh; the bill, that which pulleth. So in L. Vellicare, (from vellere, to pull,) is to pull, as a bird does.

BILL, s. A hooked tool or weapon; to cut,
-ETS. mow, hew.

-MAN. Jun. thinks billets are pieces of wood cut with a bill.

A. S. Bill; D. Byl; Ger. Beil; which Sk. thinks is securis rostrata, a beaked axe, so called from its great resemblance to the bill of a bird.

BILL, v. s. -ET, v. s. A bill seems to be app. to a statement in writing of certain particular things; as a bill of indictment, a bill of costs, a bill of exchange; the first, setting forth the particular offences charged; the second, the particular sums claimed; and the last, the particular sum to be paid, the time when, the place where, &c.

To billet a soldier or other person is, by note, bill, or particular in writing, to appoint his quarters or lodgings.

Spel. Schedula, libellus, syngraphus. A. S. Bille

v. occurs in our old translators; Conquirere milites.
In modern usage, to enlist, to enroll, to put or write upon the muster-roll, is rendered—to bill, by Sir Henry Savile.

BILLIARD. See BALL.

BILLOW, v. s. -Y. To swell or heave; usually app. to the swelling or heaving of the waves.

Sw. Go. Bulga, to bulge, to belly out, to swell.

BIN, s. Any thing that incloses, that confines; as a corn-bin, a wine-bin.

Sk. and Tooke derive from A. S. Pyndan, to inclose, to pen, or pin; to bin, differing merely in the application, from to pen or pin. See BINN.

BINAL, ad. BINARY. Twofold, double.

L. Bin, binaus, two. Com.

BIND, v. s. To tie, to fasten, to knit, to

-ER. connect, to confine, to put into con-
-ING. finement, under constraint or obligation; to constrain, to oblige. See BOND and PIN.

BIN-OCULAR, ad. Having two eyes.
When app. to a telescope,—allowing or requiring the use of both eyes.

BI-NOMINOUS,* ad. -NOMIAL. Having two names, or two terms.—"Fuller.

BIO-GRAPHER, s. A writer of the -GRAPH-Y. lives of individuals.

-ICAL. Gr. Bios, life, and γραφειν, to grave, to write.

BIPARTITE, ad. -PARTED. Shared, separated, divided, into two parts.

BIPED, ad. s. Having two feet. An animal with two feet, in Natural History, as distinguished from quadruped, an animal with four feet. Gr. dis + pes.

BI-PENNATED, ad. Having two wings.

BIRCH, s. -EN. A. S. Bire, birce; D.
Berke; Dan. Birk; Ger. Birke, which Wach. thinks is from the v. Brechen, splendere, to be bright;—the tree being so called from the brilliant whiteness of the bark. Pliny (xvi. 18,) speaks of the mirabilis candor of the birch. "It sheweth wonderful white," says Holland.

BIRD, s. v. So called from the encreased
-ER. breadth of the animal when the -LIME. wings are expanded or spread abroad.

Augurandi studium, is rendered by Goldyng. Bird spelling. See SPELL and BURNOLTA.

Bird-lime,—lime, (made of the berries of mistletoe,) to hold or catch birds.

Anciently Bridde, from A. S. Breden, to broaden, to spread abroad.

BIRE. See BORE, s.

BIRTH, s. That which beareth; any -DAY. manner of action which beareth; -NIGHT. also, that which beareth, carrieth, -PLACE. supporteth any thing: the place -RIGHT. where, the space allotted, to bear: -TIDE. as a ship's birth, a sailor's birth; sometimes written berth. That which any person or thing beareth; sc. into life or existence. Noble by birth, English by birth, i. e. by family, parentage, &c.

Birth is too established by usage, in composition with day, night, right, &c. to allow a separation.

The third person of the v. To bear; A. S. Bearthe; Ger. Bert, from the v. Bären.

BIS-CUIT, s. The article of food, so called, is not uncommonly more than twice baked. In Lodge written bis-coct.

Fr. Bis-cuit; It. cotto; Sp. Bis-cocho; L. Bis, coctum, twice baked.

BI-SECT, v. -IONA. To cut into two.

BISHOP, v. s. A Bishop is lit. — An -RICK. over-looker, an over-seer.

-DOM. Milk, in Yorkshire, is said to be -ING.† bishoped, when it is burnt. "For--MOOD.‡ merly, in days of superstition, -LY.‡ whenever a bishop passed through a town or village, all the inhabitants ran out in order to receive his blessing; this frequently caused the milk on the fire to be left till burnt to the vessel, and gave origin to the above allusion." (Grose, Prov. Gloss.) Tindale seems to point to a more specious origin of this expression, in the rancour of the Reformers, which ascribed every ill that might betide them to the Popish Bishops. "If the porage be burned to, or the meate ouer rosted, we say, the bishop hath put his foote in the pottle, or the bishop hath played the cooke, because the bishops burn who they lust, and whosoever displeaseth them."—Tyndall.

To bishop,—to perform the church ceremony of Confirmation.

*Milton. †Sir T. More. ‡Udal. ‡Hardinge.

BIS-SEXTILE, ad. So called because the sixth of the calends of March was repeated; occurred twice.

BISSON,* or BEESEN, i. e. Blind. A word still in use in some parts of the north of England. Steevens; Bizend, beezen, or bison, blind, (Grose.) In A. S. Bisen, cæcus, blind.—*Udal. Shak.

BI-SULCOUS, ad. App. in Natural History to—Cloven footed animals.

L. Bis, and Sulcus, Gr. ὄλκος, tractus, from ἔλκειν, to draw.

BITCH, s. App. to the female of the dog, and other animals; and also, opprobriously, to a woman.

A. S. Bicca, bicca; Fr. Biche, is the female of the stag; Ger. Baika.—See Men. and Wash.

BITE, v. s. To pinch, to squeeze, to gripe, -ER. to crush; to pierce, to penetrate, -ING. to wound, to pain as a bite, or any -INGLY. thing which biteth; lit. and met.

BIT, v. s. A bit,—a small piece; so much -LESS. bit or bitten: as a bit of bread, a bit of a bridle.

To bit—to put the bit in the mouth,—to cause to bite, gripe, or hold fast.

A bite, (Swift and Spectator,) app. met. from the simplicity, silliness, eagerness, with which fish bite or catch the bait,—to that unsuspecting credulity which seizes and swallows whatever is placed before, or imposed upon it.

BITTER, ad. s. Biting, piercing, pene-FULL. trating, as any thing which bites; -LY. and thus, painful, hurtful, inflict-NESS. ing pain or distress, of mind or body; calamity, wretchedness. App. part to the taste.—Chaucer.

A. S. Ger. D. & Sw. Biter; A. S. Biterian, from Bitan, to bite. Em-

BITTERN, s. BITTOUR. Bos taurus, or Boatus taurinus, from the noise it makes, when its head is immersed in the mire. "In the territory about Arelate, there is a bird called Taurus, because it loweth like a bull or cow, for otherwise a small bird it is."—Plin. x. 42.

D. Butoor; Fr. Butor; Sp. Bit-or; It. -tora.

BITUME, s. The common s. is Bitumen:

-ED. May uses Bitume.

-EN. "She (Semiramis) buylded Ba-

-INATED. bilon and enclosed it with a wall

-INOUS. of bricke enterlayed with sand and bytumen, which is a kynd of slimye mortar, yssuing out of the ground, in diuers places of that country."—Goldyng.

L. Bitumen; Gr. Πετρεον, αἰθερ, αἰθερ, from πιεω, premere, premendo affigere, (Lennep,) to press, to fix by pressure.

BI-VALVE, ad. s. Having two folding

-ED. sides or pieces. App. in Natural

-ULAR. History. "Bivalvular, or bivalve husk, (or shell), is one that opens or gapes the whole length, like a door that opens in two parts."—Miller.

L. Bis, twice, and valva, perhaps valva, so called, because they fold inwards.—Foss.

BI-VIOUS, ad. Having two paths or ways.

BLAB, v. s. To pour forth from the lips

-BER, v. whatever occurs to us; to tell all

-BING. that we know; to prate or talk thoughtlessly, carelessly, without reserve or discrimination.

Jun. refers to babbling; in D. Labberem (be-labberem); Ger. Blappere; perhaps from Labben, (be-labben, blabben); A. S. Lap-lan, to lap or lip, (differing indeed in the application.) And thus we approach Skinner's explanation: Lablis quicquid occurrat effusum,—as given above.

BLACK, v. s. ad. To blacken, met. is to -EN, v. darken, obscure, overcloud, so-
-ING. the fairness of a character or re-
-ISH. putation; to pollute, or soil, or -LY. sully its purity, its integrity. Sw.
-NESS. Be-lacks, calumniari.
-GUARD. Black is app. to that which has -MOOR. the dismalness, the gloominess, the forbiddingness of darkness; to that which is dark, dismal, gloomy, forbidding, fearful, dreadful.

Blackguard.—"In all great houses, but particularly in the royal residences, there were a number of mean and dirty dependents, whose office it was to attend the wood-yard, sculleries, &c.; of these the most forlorn wretches seem to have been selected to carry coals to the kitchens, halls, &c. To this smutty regiment, who attended the progresses, and rode in the carts with the pots and kettles, the people, in derision, gave the name of blackguards."—Gifford on B. Jonson.

D. & Ger. Black. Lye says, the A. S. Blac, black, is niger, bleak; that Blac-lan, is pal-lere, nigrescere, and also albescere, to be pale, to grow or to become black; and also to grow or become white. That Blac-an, is palidum colore Inducere: and also nigrescere, denigrare, to black; to put on a pale colour, to grow or become black, to blacken; to bleach. And that Blac-an, blac-an, is, de-albare, fulgere, coruscare; (Blac, candidatus,) to whiten or be white, to shine, to glitter. Black and bleach, are used by our elder writers in correspondence with pale; and they seem to be app. when, by some withering, blight-ing (bleicht-ing), agency (e. g. of weather), a chill and sterile paleness is produced; but we should not and do not hesitate to apply bleak, to a chill, and sterile blackness, effected by a similar withering and blighting agency; when verdure or fruitfulness are withered away, blight-ed (or bleicht-ed), where these genial appearances of nature are lacking; and hence it admits of conjecture that Blac-an and Blac-an owe their origin to Go.
Lacks; Dan. Lakker, de-cas, de-ficere; Sw. Lack;
Dan. Lac, de-fectus; D. Lepoken; and Eng. Lack, to lessen, or cause to lessen, to decrease, to wane or be wanting, to fade, to decay; to wither or waste away: the root of the whole being the Go.
Lag-yan, ponere, deponere; and cons. de-ficere.
The common prefix Be, (See letter B.)
would form Belech-an, bleych-an, to bleach;
Bleych, bleached or bleached, pale; and by a mere difference of vowel, Blac, black,—bleaked or bleaked, dark; the application of black and bleach being to appearances differing in colour, though effected by the same or similar causes. See BLANCH, BLANK, BLEACH, BLINK, which seem formed upon bleach, white or pale, (by the insertion of n or qy. Blin?) See also BLANCH.

BLADDER, s. v. That which is blown or blown, puffed or inflated; tumid.

A. S. Bladr; Ger. Blatter; D. Blad-der; Sw.

-ED. to a bone, of a similar shape. See
-Y. BLADE, infra.

Dan. Blad. "Blad, folium, frons. Blat, (Bocanus) is so called from Plat, i. e. latus, planus," (Kilian.) Otherwise from A. S. Blad, past p. of the v. Blaw-an, to blow; to bud, to sprout.

BLADE, v. s. Blade is app. met. to—Any one who pretends to the sharpness, brightness of a sword blade.

Jun. thinks that Chaucer, when he wrote platte for blade, sc. of a sword, (Squieres Tale, v. 176,) pl intimated his opinion of the origin of the word.
Plat (Tyrrw.) is Fr. Plat, flat; and this Casen.
deduces from Gr. Πλατυς, (τε-λατυς, L. Latus,) enlarged, expanded. Sk. prefers A. S. Blad, folium, because it (the blade of a sword, lamina ensis) late est instar folii.

BLAIN, s. A distention, tumor, or inflation of the skin.

A. S. Blægena; D. Blæyna. Jun. and Sk. perhaps from the A. S. Blæwan, to blow. The latter adds, a blain is—as above.

BLAME, v. s. To detract from—the fame,

-ABLE. character, or reputation; to -ABLY. find fault with; to pass an un-
-ABLENESS. favourable judgment upon; to -LESS. rebuke, to chide, to censure, to -LESS-LY. reprimand, to reprehend.
-NESS. The phrase "is to blame," is a
-ER. remnant of Old Eng. idiom.
-ING. Is to, and is to be, are all we -FULL.* now have to supply the place of the L. future participles, in rus and dux.

Culpaturus and culpandus, would by Chaucer have been translated without distinction, is to blame. Sperendus est, he renders, it is to despise.—Chaucer.

D. Blamen; Fr. Blâmer; It. Blasimare. Sk. and Jun. coincide with Men. that these words are, through the Bar. L. Blasphemare, from the Gr.
Βλασφημειν, (see To BLASPHEM;) but may not the D. Blamen be composed of Be and lâmen, to tame, minuire, diminuire, mutilare? Mis-

BLANCH, v. -ER. To blanch,—to brighten, to whiten, (lucescere, de-albare,) and thus,
To give a fair appearance, a fair face, to any thing, (Chapman;) and also as, To bleach or blink, (qv.)

To avoid, or cause to avoid, to evade, escape, or shun, to shrink or start away from, to startle.—Bacon. Wotton.

Blancher, i. e. bleucher.—Sidney.

Fr. Blanc, blanchir; It. Bianco, bianchire; Sp.
Blanco, blanquear; A. S. Blitan; Ger. Blâchen, blinken, to shine, to glitter, to twinkle or blink;
luere, coruscare, micare; and by consequence, de-albare, to whiten; quis (album) prae reliquis coloribus copiosissimam lucem reddit. —Sk.
Blanch, blench, and blink, are probably the same word diff. written and app. See also BLANCH.

BLAND, ad. Bland,—Soothing, mild,
-ISH, v. gentle, lulling, caressing, flat-
-ISH-ING. tering.

-MENT. To blandish,—to soothe, to mol-
-IMENT.* lify, to lull, to caress, to flatter,
-ISHER.* to fawn.

*Sir T. More. Hall. †Sherwood. Cot.
Fr. Bland-er; It. tro; L. Blandus, soothing.
Of uncertain etymology.

BLANK, v. s. ad. -NESS. To blank, is—
To whiten, to make pale, to appeal, or cause to look pale; to strike with the paleness, to have the paleness, sc. of disappointment, of astonishment, of dismay: and thus, to disappoint, astonish, dishearten, or dismay. "Peter was blanks and sore astonished."—Udal. "All this blanked not Pompey."—North. And more nearly to the usage of blanc,—

To avoid, evade, escape, shun, or shrink, or start from, to startle. Blank verse, i. e. in which rhyme is avoided.

A blank, sc. paper, is a white paper, with nothing distinguishable upon it, that destroys its entire whiteness: also, a white mark or spot at which to aim: and thus—

The aim, mark, or point aimed at, is so called.

Sk. derives the Eng. Blank, Fr. Blanc, It. Bianco, Sp. Blanco, through the Ger. Blinden, from A. S. Blincan. It is no doubt the same word as Blanch, (qv.)

BLANKET, v. s. -ING. A white covering. (See BLANK.) It is app. met. by Shak. from the v. To blank, as we might now use blankness.

To blanket,—to cover with, to toss in, a blanket. Smollet coins Blanketeer.

Fr. Blanchet; It. Biamehette, pannus albidus.—Sk.

BLARE, v. Blare, in the North, is to roar and cry.—Gros. Linguam etiam ab irrisu excrementum, is rendered by Holland, "scornfully lelling and blaring out his tongue."

D. Blarren; Ger. Blarren, mugire.

BLASPHEME, v. To attack, assail,

-ER. insult, (the name, the attributes,

-ING. the ordinances, the revelations,

-Y. the will or government of God.)

-OUR. **E. Hall*.

-OUSLY.

Fr. Blasphemer; It. -er; Gr. Bla-

-mesa. επιμαρ, παρα το βαλλειν την φημιν: βαλλειν, i. e. petere, and φημιν, fama. To attack or assail, the name, character, or reputation. See BLAME.

BLAST, v. s. To strike as with a sudden

-ER. gust or wind; as with an im-

-ING. petuous and destructive wind: to

-MENT. wither up, to desolate, to destroy,

-Y.† to annihilate.

It is used by E. Hall and Surrey for—

To blow or sound a blast, to sound aloud, to proclaim, to blaze abroad.—**Shak.* †Boyle.

A. S. Blasian; Ger. Blasen, to blow; Dan. Blas-

BLATANT, ad. "I know not," says Sk.,

"whether or not from the L. Balatans, qd.

Balamus vel Balatans." See BLATTER.

BLATTER, v. -OON. To throw out, sc.

idle words; to speak foolishly, to babble, to blab.—**Howell*.

L. Blattare, from Blattis, which Voss says

you may derive from the Gr. Blavos, for Blavos, cast, thrown forth; αφο του βαλλειν, to throw.

BLAZE, v. s. To rush, issue, send forth

-ING. or emit, like a blast, i. e. sud-

-ER. denly, widely, rapidly.

-ON, v. s. To blaze and To blazon, (Fr.

-ON-ER. Blasonner),—to spread or dis-

-SE. perse, to divulge, to publish, to

BLASTURE. proclaim: also to display or set forth conspicuously, ostentatiously. And also restricted to the heraldic blazonry of arms.—**Berners*.

A. S. Blæsen, to blow; past p. Blæsed, blæd, blæst; Ger. Blasen; D. Blæsen; suscitare ignem statu, (Kilian); to raise a flame by blowing. More probably, to emit a flame, like a blast. Em—Out—

BLE, term. Able, ible; L. bilis, from the Gr. Abal, strength, power, force. The L. term. in bilis (with few exceptions) was used passively; e. g. Arable, that may be erod or ploughed; Audible, that may be heard; and the contraction into ile, Docile, that may be taught: and was thus contradistinguished from the terms. ive and ic, which were used actively; e. g. Coercive, that can or may coerce; Didactic, that can or may teach. In the decay of the L. language, ads. terminating in bilis, used with an active signification, were introduced in great numbers; thus, Comfortable, that can or may, that does comfort; Conducibile, that can or may, that does conduce. Sensible, we use, to denote full of sense—which can feel—which may be felt; (he is a sensible man; very sensible of the cold;)—and of any sensible change of the weather. Many words of this description are considered by Tooke to have been received by us from Fr. words in ble, which were taken corruptly from It. words in vole:—as It. Confortevole, Fr. Comfortable; It. Capevole, Fr. Copable.

The abuse seems too firmly established, and too widely spread, to admit of any but a very partial remedy. See IC, IVE.

This term., though of L. origin, has not been confined to words from that language: and might perhaps be extended with advantage more freely to words of Eng. origin.

BLEACH, v. ad. To whiten, to make

-ER. pale or white. "She is pale and

-ERY. bleche."—Gower. See BLACK and

BLEAK.

A. S. Bliscan, ablican, dealbare; Ger. Bleichen; D. Bleycken; Sw. Blaka; Dan. Bleeger. Un—

BLEAK, ad. The same word as Bleach,

-NESS. diff. app.;—as the earth, the her-

-Y.bage, bleached or bleaked, blighted

-LY. or blacked, by cold, piercing, withering winds; and then app. to that which is exposed to cold, piercing winds;

to that which is chill, dreary, desolate.

"The heretykes haue made it (the church)

as it were pale & bleaked for very sorow

& heuyness."—Udal.

Dan. Bleg; A. S. Blæc.

BLEAR, v. ad. To blæar the sight, (met.)

-NESS. is to dim, impede, or obstruct -EDNESS. the sight, as if disordered with pustules or blains.

From D. Blæar, pustula; Sw. Blira.—Sk. Jus.

Min. Sk. adds that Blæar is from the Ger. Blæen, tumescere, (A. S. Blæan, flare, inflate; qd. outis inflatio.)

BLE

BLEAT, v. s. Bleat is the cry of the -ER. sheep. Holland, not seldom, writes
-ING. Blea.

A. S. Blæt-an; D. -en; Ger. Blehen; It. Bel-are; Fr. -er; Sp. Balar; L. Balaris.

BLEB, s. "A blister; also a bubble in the water. North."—Grose. In Mir. for Mag.—"Blubb'd."

Sk. from Ger. Blaen, tumescere, to swell.

BLEE,* s. App. gen. to—The complexion, hue, colour.—In Chaucer and old ballads.

A. S. Bleoh, from Blewan, efflorescere, to blow, to bloom. In Ritson's Ancient Songs, p. 27, "Hire blee blykyeth so bright."

BLEED, v. -ING. To pour forth, to emit, to draw forth, blood; (met.) to feel the pains or agonies of bleeding. See BLOOD.

A. S. Bled-an. Sk. prefers the D. Bloesen, rubescere; A. colore, sc.; to grow red; to blush or bloom. Be- Un-

BLEMISH, v. s. To blemish, is to affix
-LESS. some blame, some cause of blame;
-ING. some stain, some spot, which sul-
-MENT.* lies, taints or tarnishes, the original soundness, fairness, or purity. And hence—

To taint, to tarnish, to sully; to deform, to disfigure.—Spenser.

BLENCH, v. s. To blench (qv.)—to avoid, -ER. or cause to avoid, to evade, to -ING. escape, to elude, to shun, to start or shrink from, to startle;—and, by Gower, to blink: "Without blenching of mine eie." See To BLANCH, and To BLINK. Un-

BLEND, v. To mix, to mingle; to confound, to give to each ingredient some quality or qualities of the other. See To LEND.

A. S. Blendan; Sw. Blend-a; Dan. -er, miscere; perhaps from Be-lasan, blanan, blan-ed, blaned; and upon this past p. the v. Blend-an. Un-

BLENT,* is the past tense and past p. Blinned, blind, blint or blent, from the A. S. Blinnan, to stop, sc. the sight, the vision, See BLIN.—Chaucer. Gower.

BLENT, the past tense of Blench, shranked, started aside.—Tyrow.

BLESS, v. s. Cons.—To loosen, or dis-
-ED. solve; to release, to relieve—sc.
-EDLY. the tightness, stiffness; to alle-
-EDNESS. viate, to soothe or soften—the -ER. harshness; to mitigate, to as-
-ING. suage, to still, quiet or tranquil--EDFUL.* lize—the violence or turbulence,
-FULNESS.† the pain or anguish; to pacify, to please, to gratify; to communicate or confer ease, pleasure, joy, gladness, happiness, prosperity; to bestow a wish, a prayer, for happiness, or well being.

Bless you,—May ease, pleasure, prosperity, happiness, be conferred upon you. I bless you,—I (as far as my wishes and prayers are effectual to do so) confer prosperity, happiness, upon you.—Udal. †Drant.

A. S. Bliss-lan, blissian, blithian, lætari, lætiscare, to make blithe, (qv.) joyous or glad. A. S.

BLI

Blithe, be-lithe; blissom, blithsome; i. e. Be-lissom, be-lithsome. Lithe, lithesome, and lissom, are still used in the north, for quiet, still, gentle, pliant, flexible; from the A. S. Lýgan, to loosen or slacken. Un-

BLIGHT, v. s. To destroy, to wither up, to desolate. See BLACK, BLEAK.

Perhaps from the A. S. Blithan, belithan, descendere, dealitre, (lacy-an, deponere,) to alight, to descend, to fall upon, to strike upon;—to strike, to blast. Un-

BLIN, v. To stop or stay; to stop, impede,

BLIND, v. s. obstruct, prevent or hinder, -ING, s. ad. sc. the sight, the vision, the perception, the understand-
-LY. ing. See To LIM.

-NESS. ing. See To LIM.
-FOLD, v. ad. To blind-fold,—to fold any thing over the eyes, the sight, the vision, (lit. and met.) so as to blin or stop, prevent the sight, &c.

A. S. Blind-an, -ian; Ger. -en, or blenden; D. Blind-en; Dan. -er, cæcare, obscurare, from the A. S. Blinnan, cæcare, to stop.—Juss. and after him Tooke. Be- Un-

BLINK, v. s. To blink, is to give to -ARD. the eye the twinkling motion or
-ER. action of any thing glittering, e. g.
-ING. a star; to twinkle, to wink; to look with the eye partially closed, to close the eye partially; and as this is frequently done to avoid any sudden action upon the eye, to blench (so Gower writes it) or blink, is cons.—

To avoid, or cause to avoid, to evade, to escape, to elude, to shun, shrink or start from. See To BLANCH, and To BLENCH.

A blink,—a quick opening and shutting of the eye; a quick short sight or view; a glimpse, or glance, a wink, a twinkle.

Blinker,—one who blinks; also that which screens, sc. to prevent blinking.

A. S. Blit-can; D. Blitken, blitcken, conscare, micare; Ger. Blincken, oculos vibrare; Sw. Blitka; Dan. -er, nictare.

BLISS, v. s. The v. is now written Bless:

-FULL. the s. Bliss is—blessedness. Gen.

-FULLY. app. to—

-FULNESS. Excessive pleasure, happiness,

-LESS. prosperity, good fortune, well-

-ED-LY.* piness.—Jewell. †Udal.

-NESS.†

BLIST, or BLEST, v. To strike, to throw out—suddenly, violently; to strike, to hurt; or beat about.

Dan. Bless-er; Fr. -er, to hurt; from Be, and lascare, formed upon læsum, past p. of L. Ladere.—Men. Perhaps from Lascher, to lash, with the common pref. Be. Or it may be—To blast.

BLISTER, v. s. A pustule or blain.

D. Bluyster; Sw. Blissa, pustula. Perhaps Blasi, flatus, from Blastan, to blow, to puff up. Be-

BLITHE, ad. Gentle, easy, pliant, flex-

-LY. ible, easy to move or to be moved.

-SOME. And therefore—

-NESS. Active, spritely, lively, joyous;

having activity, liveliness, spriteliness, cheerfulness, gaiety: joy or gladness. See BLESS and LIVER.

BLO

A. S. Blitha; D. Blide, alacer, hilaris. The A. S. Blitha, be-blitha, be-blithome, be-blissom, is derived of the pref. Be, and blitha, thus—Blitha, blithome, blissom.

BLIVE. See BELIVE.

BLOAT, v. ad. -EDNESS. Is very probably Blowed, blowt, bloat; i. e. blown, swelled, puffed out; meaning—

To blow out, swell, or puff out, be or become swollen or tumid.

Sk. from D. Blaem, to blush.

BLOBBY-LIPPED, ad. Having bled, swelled lips. P. Plouhman writes Baber-lipped. See BLER.

BLOCK, v. z. A block of wood, or other

-ADE, v. z. substance, -i. e. a piece suited,

-ISM fitted, to shut up, or close up,

-ISM-LY. to include or exclude, to ob-

-NESS struct.

-HEAD. A block, as well as blockhead, is

-HEAD-ED. app. (met.) to any one who has

-LY. the lumpishness, the heaviness,

-ISM* the dulness of a block; whose faculties seem blocked up; whose understanding is inaccessible.

To blockade, (Fr. Blagner).—To shut in, or block up, to besiege, beset, or compass on all sides.—Cot. See LOCK.

**Christ. Smart.*

Sw. D. & Ger. Block; Dan. Blak; Fr. Bloc.—Block, in be-lock, block; from the A. S. Lycan, be-lycan; D. Be-lyckten, claudere, concludere, occludere, obscurare; to shut, to close, to shut up, to lock.—Som.

BLONKET, ad. The Gloss. says, "Blonket liveries are gray coats." They are blank, dismal liveries.—Spenser.

BLOOD, v. z. Blood is app. met. to—

-Y, v. ad. Men of high spirit. (See BLADE.)

-ILY. Blood, pref. to other words, has

-INESS given birth to some expressions

-LESS of very powerful import: e. g.

blood-guilty, blood-thirsty.

Go. Blodh; A. S. Sw. & Dan. Blod; D. Bloed; Ger. Blut. Blood, or as it was anciently written Blod, blode, is the past p. of the v. To blood. Un-

BLOOM, v. z. To bloom is to blow, to put

-ING forth, to throw forth flowers; to have

-Y. the hue, the complexion, the sweetness, the freshness, of flowers just blown, or thrown forth: and thus—

To flourish; to be in full vigour; in the full vigour of health, beauty, reputation.

See BLOW.

Go. Bloma; A. S. Blom, blomian; D. Blome; Ger. Blume; Sw. Blom-ma; Dan. -me. Sk. thinks from Blom, tumescere; Wach. from Blasen, flare, spicare; guia spirat (sc. flos) odore. In F. Holland we find "the Bloume-smithie." Som. gives, "Blotemen, florere, gemmae, germinare; to bud, to blossom, to bear flowers, to bloom, flourish." Re-

BLORE, v. z. App. to—A roaring wind; gale. See BLARE.

**Mir. for Mag. Chapman.*

D. Blarren; Ger. Blarren, to roar, to bellow.

BLU

BLOSSOM, v. z. To bloom or blassem, is

-ED. to put forth, to throw forth the flowers;

-Y. to have the hue, the complexion, the sweetness, the freshness of flowers just thrown forth. See BLOOM. Em- Un-

BLOT, v. z. -TING. A blot upon any thing extends just so far as that thing is covered, and no farther. See LID.

To blot out any thing written, is to cover it, and so make it illegible; to obliterate, to efface or deface.

To blot, (met.) is to cover, sc. with disgrace; to fix some mark or stain of disgrace, of infamy.

Fr. Blotter.—Be-blod, be-blot, (Eng. Blot.) is the regular past tense and past p. of Be-bliden, to cover.—Tooke. Be-

BLOTCH, v. z. A pustule; a tumour; a corrupt tumour; a spot of corruption, or defilement.

"Blatchy, is in Glouc. black or dirty."—Gross.

Sk. writes it Blotch, and suggests that it may be from the A. S. Blodig, bloody, qd. a bloody tumour; or from Blase, a blaze, which it resembles in its fiery heat and redness. Harmar writes Blatch: it is (perhaps) a blotch, from Blot.

BLOTE, v. To smoke (sc. herrings) till dry.

L. Infumare, to smoke. Mins. derives from D. Blod. Sk. from Blasen, rubescere, whence, he adds, our blot-coloured; which is perhaps equivalent to blown.

BLOUGHTY, ad. Perhaps from Bloated: in Bp. Hall, "his bloughty volume," is—his swelled, his puffy volume. See BLUFF.

BLOW, v. To send forth or emit wind, air,

-ER. breath; to puff or swell out with

-ING. wind; to inflate.

To blow, always implies an excess, beyond the natural action of the lungs; beyond the breath or effect of that action.

A. S. Blawan, flare; Ger. Bläen. Perhaps comp. of Be and blawan, fovere, teperere. For- Over- Un- Up-

BLOW, v. z. To blow, to bloom, blossom,

BLOWTH, v. z. or bear flowers: to bud, to bur-

BLOWERS. geon, to spring, to flourish.—Som.

See BLOOM and BLOSSOM, and also BLADE.

A. S. Blowan; D. Blowen; Ger. Bluen, florere, frondere, efflorescere. Un-

BLOW, v. Like the word blast, is app.

to that which strikes; as a sudden, impetuous, and injurious wind: a hit, a knock,

a stroke. D. Blowen, to strike.

BLOWZE, v. z. -ED. Seems app. to—One who has been well blown upon, who has been exposed to blowing winds; who has a coarse, ruddy bloom; a highly coloured blush.

Not in Sk. or Jun. Ford and Burton write Blowze; Bp. Hall Blowaze. D. Blow-en, to blush, (qv.) See BLAZE.

BLUB. See BLER.

BLUBBER, v. z. -ING. To swell out, to distend, to puff out, to inflate, sc. with weeping or tears.

A blubber is used by Chaucer as we now use a bleb.

Blubber of a whale, a mass of fat, encompasing the body.

Bleb, blob, blub, blubber, and blubber, have, no doubt, the same origin; and Bleb, Sk. says, is from the Ger. Blasen, to swell, to puff up. Be-

BLUDGEON, s. (Not in our older lexicographers.) A stick formed to inflict severe blows, (perhaps to fetch blood.)

BLUE, ad. The blue, formerly blewe sky, -LY. may be the blew-en, or blown -NESS. sky; the sky from which the -ISH. clouds are blown, dispersed, the -ISHNESS. open sky, (hemel blauwen.—Kithan.) Voss. derives coruleus from caelum.

The word blue is of northern origin, and in these cloudy regions may have been app. to that (colour) which was produced or exposed to view by the blowing away, clearing away, dispersing of the clouds. Bleach, in A. S. Blee, in Eng. was also app. to the complexion, to the air of the countenance. A blue nose, blue cheeks; i. e. having a colour produced by the keen, blowing wind. In the same manner other colours, brown, yellow, &c. take their name from that by which they are produced. See BLACK, BROWN, YELLOW, &c.

D. Blauw, (Blauwen, to blow;) Ger. Blau; Fr. Bleu; Sp. Bloo; Sw. Blå; Dan. Blæ, coeruleus; A. S. Bleo, bleoh, bleow, blæwan, blæ, to blow. Sk. suggests flavus, (i. e. yellow,) others, the Gr. Πελος, niger, subniger.

BLUFF, ad. -NESS. A bluff point is a blunt, obtuse point: exposed to wind.

Bluffness,—a bluntness, coarseness, roughness of manner. The manner of one blough or bloated, with his own importance. See BLOUGHTY.

This word is not found in our older lexicographers: nor is it common in composition.

BLUNDER, v. s. To blunder, is to act -ER. like one, whose faculties cease, -INGLY. stop, halt, stumble: whose mind is blunt, dull, undistinguishing; who is apt to err, to mistake: also, to cause a blunder, error, or mistake; to mistake, to mislead. See BLUNT.

A. S. Blinnan, to blin, to stop, (to blind.) Blin is the regular past tense; by adding ed, we have blon-ed, blon'd, whence (by further addition of the term. er.) blonder, blunder.

BLUNDERBUSS, s. Said to be so called because it hits by blunder, not by skill in a direct aim:—Blunder is perhaps formed from blon-ed, (see ante.) and the name given from the blunt form of the weapon, compared with a musket. Used met. by Pope.

In D. it is Dunder-buss, i. e. thunder-buss; Dan. Musque-dunder. For Buss, see ARQUEBUS.

BLUNT, v. ad. To deaden, to dull, to -ING. render obtuse; to have or cause -ISHNESS. to have no edge, point, sharpness; no polish, no keenness; -LY. no politeness. Hence the ad. -NESS. no politeness. Hence the ad.—

Unpolished, coarse, rude.

To blunt forth, (Sir T. More,) to utter bluntly, rudely.

Blunt is blon-ed, blond, blont or blunt: i. e. stopped in its decreasing progress towards a point or edge: the past p. of the A. S. Blinnan, cessare, to blin, to stop, (see Tooke,) comp. of Be and Blinnan, to stop, to lin, qv. Un-

BLUR, v. s. To spot, to smear, to blot; to mark with any spot, smear, or stain; to disfigure, to deface.

Blare, blare, (qv.) and blurr, have probably the same origin. Blurr may perhaps derive its usage from the D. Blare, (see BLADDER,) a pustule, or blain, or spot. See BLUR.

BLURT, v. s. To throw out a blurt,—to throw out rudely, hastily, inconsiderately; without consideration or reflection.

Formed upon the past p. of Blurr; blurred, blurr'd, blurt.

BLUSH, v. s. App. cons. to—The colours -ER. of flowers blooming or blooming.

-FUL. To redden, to be or cause to be -ING. red, or rosy; blooming with red-

-Y. ness or rosiness; to shame or -LESS. as shame.

-LESSLY. At the first blush,—on the first complexion or appearance; at the first look.—B. Jonson.

BLUSTER, v. s. To be roaring, noisy,

-ER. boisterous, as a loud, hard blowing

-ING. wind;—to be boisterous or turbulent;

-OUS. to talk loudly, to threaten loudly; to boast noisily.—Udal. Holland.

A. S. Blæstan, to blow, to puff, to inflate.

BOAR, s. -ISH. Boar may be formed thus, —Bayer, baer, bår, (pronounced bawr.) boar; and the animal so named from its noise. See To BAY, and also BRUTE.

A. S. Bar; Ger. Eber; D. Beer. Beccanus-beer a baeren (to bear) died ait, quod plurimos fectus signat. Wach. and Sk. agree that it may be from L. Aper. But see BEAR.

BOARD, v. s. To board, is to cover with

-ER. boards, as a floor, a roof, &c.; to go

-ING. or get on board a ship, and cons. to force a way on board; also to be or cause to be at the same board or table, and cons.

to take meals at the same board; to receive at the board, to supply the board with provisions.

Board, the s. i. e. broad, sc. wood, or piece of wood, is the common word for table in our old writers. Boardless, i. e. boardless, is used by P. Ploughman; without a board or table.

Boarding-house,—a house where a board or table is kept.

Board-wages,—wages to supply the board or table.

Board is also app. to those who sit at the board or table: as the Board of Control, &c.

Sw. Bord; Dan. Borde; Go. Beards; A. S. Bræde. "Board, by metathesis of the letter r, is from Bread." Jun. and in this Tooke agrees. See BROAD. Dis-Over-

BOARD. See ABORD and BOURN.

BOAST, v. a. To boast, from the etymology, will mean—To puff out, —FUL. to swell, to raise or exalt, to enlarge or magnify, to exaggerate, —INGLY. to display ostentatiously.

—ISE. **Shenstone*.

—IVE. Probably from Fr. Boesse; which Cot. explains, swollen, risen, puffed up. Eng. Boas, (qv.) and D. Boese, umbo, tumulus; as the boss of a shield. And Sk. observes that umbo and tumulus are merely things, (quasi extumescences et infatig.) as it were swelling or tumid, and puffed out. Un-

BOAT, s. A vessel forced along the water —MAN. by the beating of the oars.

—SWAIN. Boatswain.—A.S. Bot-swain; Ger. Bot-swain; from bat or boat, and swain, a servant; formerly app. to—The rower or manager of the oars.

A.S. Bot, bat; D. Boet; Ger. Bot; Sw. Boat; Dan. Boat; Fr. Bateau; It. Batello. Wach. says, from Ger. Batten, (to beat,) trudere, impellere, to thrust, to dash or drive along. Bot dicitur de Cymba, quia Cymba est alveus trusatilis, qui remis impellitur.

BOATION, s. The roar or bellow of an ox; any roaring or bellowing.

L. Boars, boacum: from Bovis, the ancient Latins termed boars; whence boars. Boacum est Bois non fores. See TO BAY.

BOB, v. a. Seems to be the same word as —CHERRY. Pop, (qv.) and to be usually —TAIL. app.—To some short, jerking —WIG. action: as to bob in the face, to bob a curtesy; to play at bob-cherry; to bob for grig, when some part of the tackle bobs into the water;—

To something short, cropt, docked; as a bob-tail, a bob-wig, ear-bobs.

Whether To bob, to cheat, is so app. from some short, sharp, sudden act or trick, like those of a juggler, admits only of conjecture.

"That I bob'd from him; that I fool'd him out of. A bob formerly signified a mock, a jeer. Cole renders it in his Dictionary, 1679, by sanna, and bob'd by titulus. To bob for fish, is likewise a technical term among those who delight in angling." So Mr. Stevens. The Etymologists afford no insight into the origin of this word.

BOBANCE, s. Fr. Bobancer, to boast. Bobance or Bombance,—boasting; which Men. forms from Pomp. Perhaps from Bombasta. See BOMBAST.

BOBBIN, s. Fr. "Bodine, a quill for a spinning wheel; also a skane of gold or silver thread."—Cot. Perhaps, Bombine.—See Men.

BODE, v. To abede, to bode, and to —ING. forbode, are used in the same manner, v. ner; viz.

—MENT.? To see or discern, to show or exhibit, some external, superficial appearance, sign or token; from which we infer good or ill.—Holland. †Shak.

Shakspeare considers the primitive word to be A. S. Bodan, the first outward extremity or border of anything. A. S. Bodien; Ger. Bieten, predicare, nunciare, to make known, to manifest, to announce. "The bode came to the king," "the bodeword came to them," (in R. Brunne,) is, the news came; it was made known.

BODGE, v. a. —ER. To bodge and to botch, (qv.) seem to be the same word diff. written and pronounced.

"I find," says Mr. Malone, "bodgery, used by Nash in his Apologie of Pierce Penniless, 1593, from botchery." And Mr. Stevens thinks that "we bodg'd," only means "we boggled, made bad or bungling work of our attempt to rally. A low unskilful taylor is often called a botcher."

BODICE, s. Something worn round the body.

BODKIN, s. Sk. suggests that it may be a bodikin, a diminutive of body; on account of its thinness, its slenderness.

BODY, v. s. Body,—the substance; the —IED. substantial, solid mass, or con-—ILLES. structure.

—ILY, ad. av. It is app. to the body—of a man

—Y-GUARD. or other animal, as distinguished from the members; of a tree, as distinguished from the branches; of an army, as distinguished from van-guard, rear-guard, &c.;—to material things, as distinguished from immaterial;—to the main bulk, the greater proportion, the united or collected mass.

To body, or to embody, is to put into bodily, corporeal, material or substantial shape or form.

A word of very various applications. Sk. thinks that when used as it is in Lincolnshire for the lower part, inferiori corporis parte, it is connected with Ger. Boden, A. S. Boten, which, according to Wach., means fundus, (i. e. bottom), et quicquid natura pedibus nostris calcandum subjecti; and he refers to pedden, calcare. More probably from Bed, past tense, and past p. of Bid-an, to bide; manere, restare. Dis-Em-Un-

BOG, v. s. App. to—Land, or ground,

—GY. that bows, or bends, yields, gives —LAND. way to pressure:—marshy, miry,

—TROTTER. land.

A. S. Bug-an, to bow; D. Boogen, flectere, quia se. prementis cedit; because it gives way to pressure.—See Sk.

BOGGLE, v. To stick or stay, as if sunk

—ER. in a bog; unable, afraid, unwilling

—ING. to proceed or advance; and thus——ISH.? To hesitate.—"Bp. Taylor.

The diminutive of Bog; qd. to stick in the mud, labouring in vain to disembarass yourself.—Sk.

BOIL, v. s. To boil, is to throw, to cast up

—ING. or forth, sc. some portions of a solid

—ER. mass above or over the rest; and thus to fluctuate; to effervesce; to agitate or cause to be agitated; to be heated (as water by fire, till it throws itself or is thrown over, sc. the vessel.)

Met. To be warm, animated, ardent, eager.

Boiler is app. to the person who, and the vessel in which any thing, boils.

Fr. Bouillir; It. Bollire; Sp. Boilir; L. Bullire; perhaps from the Gr. Ballaen, to throw, to throw forth, sc. from the surface. The s. when app. to an ebullition or ejection from the surface of the skin, is written Bile by Wicliff and Tindall;

in P. Plouhman, Bules. See BILZ. Em-Over-Re- Un-

BOIST,* s. Fr. Boiste, a box. See Box. **Chaucer*.

-OUS-LY,† Tuberville. † Udal.

-NESS,† D. Büsen; Ger. Beisen, mordere.

-EOUS,† Beisenwind is a keen biting wind; as the north wind. The D. Büster is

-EOUS-LY,† furious, raging, turbulent. And from these Boistos and Boisterous

-NESS,† may have been formed, and app. as above explained.

BOLARY, ad. Of or pertaining to the species of clayey earth, called Bol-armeniace. L. Bolus Armenia, a kind of earth found in Armenia.—Mis.

BOLD, v. ad. To bold or bolden,—is to

-EN, v. confirm the courage, to give addi-

-HEDE. tional courage; or as we now say,

-LY. to encourage or embolden, (qv.)

-NESS. Bold, the ad. is also app. to the extreme of courage, to that which is daring, audacious, impudent: as well as to that which is—

Fearless, intrepid, dauntless, courageous.

To that which is—

Well, firmly, built; strongly constructed, either in nature or art,—as a bold coast; or, in painting or statuary, a bold figure.

Sc. Bald; Fr. Baud; It. Baldo; D. Boude; A. S. Bald, byld, gebyld, audax. A. S. Bydan, to build, to confirm, to establish, to make firm and sure and fast, to consolidate, to strengthen. And thus (adds Tooke) a man of confirmed courage, i. e. a confirmed heart, is properly said to be a built, built, or bold man, who, in the A. S. is termed byld, hylded, ge-byld, ge-bylded, as well as bold. The A. S. Bold and Bolt, i. e. built, built, are both likewise used indifferently for what we now call a building, (i. e. builden), or strong edifice. In Sc. Beild, ad. is bold; and Beild, s. a building. See BOLD, infra. Em-

BOLD,* s. From Built, build-en, or as we now say, building. See BOLD, above. **R. Glo*.

BOLL, v. s. BOLNINGS. To boll, is to round by circumvolution, by rotation; and then, gen. to round, to rise out in a round form or shape, to swell out.

The bols of a tree, of the throat,—the round trunk or stem.

Wiclif renders inflationes, bolnings: Inflat estis,—“Ghe ben bolmun with pride.”

Ger. Boi; from Bolen, vertere, volvare, rotare.

—Wach. Dan. Bulner. See BALL and BOWL.

BOLSTER, v. s. Bolster, s.—a ball or roll

-ER. of straw. To bolster is—to put or

-ING. place a bolster, or any thing in shape or form of a bolster, sc. as a support; and thus, cons., to raise, to uphold, to sustain, or to support.

A. S. Bolster, bolstre; D. Bolster; Ger. Polster, from Boll. (See BOLL.) And Ster, or Stre, is perhaps A. S. Stre, straw.

BOLT, v. s. To bolt,—as to bolt the door, is to fasten the door, to strengthen it; to throw to—a bolt, i. e. as now app., to throw to—that by which a door or shutter is fastened or strengthened; from the A. S. Bydan, to build, strengthen, or confirm. (See Tooke.) Also simply—To fasten; to make, to hold or keep, fast; to confine, to constrain.

In D. it is Bout, i. e. Boud, the past tense and past p. of Bowwen, to build. Un-

BOLT, v. (Sc.) To bolt the bran. To Boulter, force away, to drive out, to sift BULTEL. or separate, sc. the fine from the coarse, the good from the bad. See BOLT, infra.

D. Buydelen; Ger. Brutelen; Fr. Bluter; and this latter, Ferrarius derives from L. Aplauda, (bran.) And Aplauda, according to Wach, a plodendo, (whence our Eng. To explode.)—See Men and Wach. Bulle! is in Low L. Bullitus. Un-

BOLT, v. s. To force out or away, to throw or drive out, to eject, to expel; to rush or cause to rush out, to start out.

The s. is app. to an arrow from a bow; to a thunder-bolt, a bird-bolt. Upright as a bolt,—upright as a dart, straight as an arrow.

D. Bolt; Ger. Bols; from the s. Bolen, to throw, which Wach thinks is certainly from Gr. Bolles, to cast or throw. It admits of conjecture, that to bolt bran, to bolt out, are usages of the same word, and denote—To throw, to throw out, to expel, to eject.

BOLT-SPRITT, or BOWSPRITT, s. A transverse beam on the mast of a ship.

Vox nautica, (says Sk.) from the D. Bolt, vectis, a bar; and Spritt, a sailyard.

BOMB, v. s. Bomb,—a loud humming

-ARD, v. s. noise or sound. Bomb, bom-

-ARD-IER. bard,—a gun or cannon, re-

-MENT. markable for its loud noise,

-ILATION.* when discharged.

Bombard-phrase is used by B. Jonson for ampullas,—a phrase of more sound than sense,—sounding or noisy, as a bomb or bombard.

A bombard of sack or beer,—is a vessel, so called, perhaps, from some resemblance to the murthing piece or gun.

A bombard-man, Mr. Gifford says, was one of the people who attended at the buttery-hatch, and carried the huge cans of beer to the different offices.—**Brown*.

Fr. Bombard-e; It. & Sp. -e; Ger. Bombe, bombert; D. Bommen, bombannen; Sw. Bomb; Dan. Bombe; which Kilian thinks are words & sono fiata. Voss. thinks the same of Gr. Βομβος, and L. Bombus. Bombarda, (a new word, he remarks, for a new thing,) & bombo, et ardere, so named because it vomits or throws forth iron balls with a noise and blazing fire,—cum sonitu et flamma. Laurentius Valla, who wrote in 1480, about forty years after the invention of these murthing pieces, as Cot. calls them, gives the same opinion.

BOMBASIN, s. The ancients (says Sk.) so called—Any soft or delicate wool adapted for weaving garments.

Fr. Bomb-asis; It. -agino; L. Bombys; Gr. Βομβή, a word, as Voss. thinks, of Eastern origin.

BOMBAST, or BUMBAST, v. s. ad. To

-IC. stuff out; to swell or cause to swell

-RY.* out, largely, excessively; hence the s. app. met. to tumid or inflated words, or language, exceeding the occasion,—of more sound than sense.—**Swift*.

Of the same origin as Bombastin, (qv.) Bumbast, Sk. says, is linen sewed together with flax between. Hackluyt and Holland call it Cotton. Hence bombast words or style,—inflated, et quasi stupidi refertus.

BOND, s. ad. —AGE. The past tense and past p. of the v. To bind, (qv.)

A bond is that which binds, fastens, or confines; or by which any thing is bound, fastened, or confined; which puts or keeps in confinement, under constraint, under obligation; that which constrains or obliges, which forces or compels.

A bond man, maid, &c. is a bond man, &c. *bond*ed to servitude or obedience; the words are usually written affixed.

BONE, v. s. "The bones are to support —LESS. the body, and to bear great burdens, —Y. or to be employed in strong exercises, they being made hollow, for lightness and stiffness."—Ray.

Bone-lace, or bone-worked lace, is lace worked, made, or manufactured upon bones.

To make no bones, is to do—as willingly, as readily, as easily as a dog or other animal devours meat without bones; and thus—to invent no difficulties.

Bone-set, to set a dislocated or fractured bone into its place.

A. S. Bein; Ger. Bein; Sw. & D. Bein; Sc. Bein. Martinus, Wach. Ihre, agree with other etymologists that the Northern Bein and the Gr. Bainos, to go, to step forward, to proceed, ire, gradi, incedere, must have some affinity. "Crura," says Wach. "sunt naturalia gradiendi instrumenta." And Martinus, "Bein, os; quia oesum virtute est re facere."—Quere! A. S. Beon, exister, extare. Un—

BONE-CHIEF,* s. Fr. Bon, good, and chief, the chief or head; opposed to Mis-chief.—*Chaucer. W. Thorpe.

BONER,* ad. Fr. Bonnaire, "gentle, courteous, affable, mild, without malice, faithful, sincere."—Cot.

**Jewell*, and old romances.

Boner is still preserved in De-bonair.

BON-FIRE, s. A boom-fire, a fire of joy or gladness; gen. a fire voluntarily kindled as a token.

Hickes in his Diction. Island. says that Ban-fyr, whence our Bone-fire, by change of a letter of the same organic utterance (namely i into n) is Quon Ban-fyr, regus; Sax. Bal; Isl. Baal, incendium.

The Glossarist to G. Douglas adopts this opinion, and it is transcribed into Lye's edition of Jun. without comment. But Jun. himself, in his Gloss. Goth. in v. Balugan, torquere, (with which he considers the A. S. Bal to be connected) intimates nothing of the kind. He indeed produces (in consistency with this connexion) instances of the usage of the A. S. Bal-fyr and Baethfyr (i. e. blaze) in application to the fires lighted by Abraham, to burn his only son, and by Nabuchodonosor to burn the three young men.

There is no evidence that such a word as Ban-fyr ever existed. The etymology proposed by Sk. certainly accords better with our more common usage of the word, and is more simple in itself. "Ignis festus, qd. bonus, vel bene ommatus ignis, i. e. Fr. G. un bon feu."

BON-GRACE, s. A frontal or covering for the foreheads of infants, to defend them from injury when they fall; so called because they seem graceful or becoming to them. Baret considers it to have been a mere umbrella or umbraculum, "to keepe off the sunne."

Fr. Bonne-grace, Cot. says, is the uppermost flap of the downhanging tail of a Fr. hood; and hence, detorto sensu, according to Sk. our Bon-grace,—as above explained.

BONIFY, v. —FORM. To become, or cause to become, good; to do good, to benefit. Cudworth is sole authority.

Fr. Bonifier, from the L. Bonus, and fac.

BONNET, v. s. A clothing or covering of the head.

Bonnet is also app. to certain small sails attached to the larger sails.

Fr. Bonnet; Sp. Bonete; D. Bonet; Sw. Bonad. The Sw. Bonad, Ihre deduces from Sw. Bo, boa, to prepare, to provide. Wäl bodd, he observes, is well-clothed, i. e. well prepared or provided, so against the cold; and hence, Bonad, a clothing, a covering: Hufwud bonad, tegmen capitis. Fr. Bon, bonne, good. Not in our old lexicons.

BOOBY, s. —ISH. The Eng. Booby is probably no more than an emphatic repetition of boy,—sc. boy, boy; a boy indeed, a mere boy, having none but boyish, childish qualities and dispositions; a simpleton.

The penguin is called booby, from its stupidity when in danger of being killed.

Jun. thinks that Booby has the same origin as Sc. Bowbard; namely, Gr. Bovfapax, as heavy as an ox; or, as Hesychius interprets, a great, senseless fellow, (from Boo, an ox; and fapax, heaviness.) Ruddiman derives Bowbard from L. Bubo, an owl.

BOOK, v. s. The s. app. to—A collection —ISH. of written or printed leaves or —ISH-LY. pages (of paper or other material).—A portion of such collection. —LESS. —MAN. To be well booked, in Gower, —WORM. is to be well read in books; —FUL.* learned in books, book-learned.

Ger. Buch; D. Book; Sw. Book; Dan. Bog; A. S. Boc, and also Boc-tan, to book. In A. S. Boc, is also a beech tree. Hence it has been presumed by Sk. amongst others, that our ancestors wrote upon the bark of the beech tree (Agalis corticibus, Sk.) and that the name thus originated. Wach., supported by learned names, ascribes to it an origin similar to that of L. Folium, (from Folvere, to roll,) viz. Ger. Bug-en; A. S. Bug-an, nectere, convolvere; to bow, to fold. Un—

BOOM, v. App. as bumble by Chaucer, and bump by Dryden, to the noise of the bittern. Also to the noise and roar of the waves. See To BOMB, and BITTERN.

BOON, ad. Fr. Bon, bonne. A boom blade or companion, a bon compagnon (Fr.); bonus, i. e. lepidus, factus et hilaris socius.—Sk. A pleasant, witty, merry companion. See BONNY.

BOON, s. App. to—Some good or benefit, either asked or granted.

To boom or boon, (Ray,) to do service to another as a landlord; and boom days, (Brocket,) those days which tenants are obliged to employ for the benefit of their lord, gratis, are from the Fr. Abonnir or Abonner, to make good or do good unto; to make good one thing with another; to compound with.—See Cot.

A. S. Bens; Sw. Bon. In Luke i. 13, Gr. Δεσπς, L. Deprecatio, are in A. S. version rendered bene. It appears, (Sk.) to be from L. Bonum.

To compensate, to reward, to bestow or confer some benefit or advantage upon, to serve or be of service to. To boot is the infinitive, and is equivalent to—in addition. What boots it?—what profit, what benefit is it? what avails it? Boot and booty are the same,—viz. acquisition, gain, profit, advantage: the latter app. to that which is acquired or gained from an enemy; as plunder, pillage. To play booty, is to play apparently to the gain or advantage of another.

Boots for the legs, are an additional covering or protection for the legs.

Fr. Boter, to pull on boots, or put boots on.—Cot. Sk. prefers the A. S. Abutan, about; because boots go round or about the legs. It is more probably from A. S. Batan, D. Boeten, to boot, (qv.) to superadd, to supply; to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something less.

BOOTH, s. "Booth, an house made of bowes."—Tyndall.

D. Boede, an abode, from the v. Beijden; A. S. Bidan, to abide, manere, morare; or more immediately from the D. Bouwen, to build, to construct.—Sk. More probably because made of that which boweth or bougheth.

-ER. Bordeau is compounded of bord, the border or edge, and eau, water; because such places were heretofore au bord de l'eau, on the edge of the water. Wach. says that Bordell, lupanar, is the dim. of the A. S. Bord, a house; and properly signifies domuncula, a small house. Domuncula, he considers to have been so called, because the places for luxurious indulgences among the ancients were tents or booths stationed on the banks of rivers. This fact, he observes, Men. has proved from Cicero, Orat. x. in Verrem, and Suetonius in Nerone.—May not bord-ell, app. not merely to places, but to persons, be derived from Bawd? (qv.)

BORDRAGING,* s. Pillage.

**Spenser*, who also writes Bodrags.

Dan. Bort-draget; to drag, or drag along (drager), to carry, hale, hurry, or draw away (borte).

BORE, s. App. to the rapid and noisy influx of the tide into a river or strait.

Bore is, perhaps, Bower, bawr, bore, from the loud noise which accompanies it. The D. Beeren, beren, is—sublate et ferociter clamare, more u-sorum. Unde et fluctibus marinis apud nos nomen.—See Kilian. Wiclif (Matt. viii.) renders irruit, "went in a great bire;" and Apoc. xviii. impetu, "in a bire." And see BORAL, and Baw.

BORE, v. s. -ER. To pierce or penetrate through, to make a hole or cavity through, to perforate; (met.) to tease by ceaseless repetition—like the unvaried, continued action of a borer.

A. S. Bor-tan; Ger. -en; D. Boeren; Sw. Böra. Wach. and Sk. think the Gr. Παρα, transigere, whence the L. Forare, is the parent of this word.

BORE, BOREN, BORNE, or BORN. Born is, Borne—into life; brought forth, produced—into being, or existence.

BOREAL, ad. Northern.

L. Borealis, from Boreas, the name given to the north wind, αφο τῆς βοῆς—from its bellowing, roaring noise.—See Foss. And see BOAR, s.

BOROUGH, s. A Burg or Borough meant formerly a fortified town, (see Tooke); and Verstegan says, "All places that in old time had among our ancestors the name of Bow-roughs, were places one way or other fenced or fortified." (Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 7.)

Gen.—A place of defence or security. See BURROW.

Ge. Borogan; A. S. Borogan, birgan, byrgan, to bar, to defend, to fortify. See BORON.

BORREL, s. ad. Mr. Tyrw. derives it from the Fr. Bureau, which (Cot. says) is a thick coarse cloth, of a brown russet, or dark mingled colour. It appears to have been also app. to those who wore such coarse garments: to laymen.

BORROW, v. s. A Borrow was formerly -ER. used for what we now call a security, -ING. any person or thing by which repayment is secured; and by which the lender is defended or guarded from the loss of his loan.—Tooke. My faith to borwe; St. John to borwe; Mr. Tyrw. interprets,—My faith for a pledge; St. John for a security. Dan. Borgen.

"Bork, in Old Saxon, signifies a pledge or surety, and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith; St. John to borrow, that is, for assurance and warranty."—Spenser. On Ireland.

To borrow, in mercantile concerns, is to take or receive the money, or other property of another, upon a promise or pledge, or security given, to repay or return it.

To take or receive without such a pledge;—a gentle term for—to steal, to thieve.

A. S. Borogan; D. Borphen; Dan. Borger; Ger. Borgen, to guard, to secure. See BOROVON. Un-

BORSHOLDER, s. i. e. Boroughs elder; the elder, senior, man in the borough.

BOSKE, s. Also written Buake, busky, BOSCAKE (qv.) A bush.

BOEK-ST. Beeket, from It. Bochetto, a dim. -Y. of Becco, is—a grove.

BOSOM, s. s. Bosom may be so called from its form or shape; bowing, bending, curving, arching. It is also app. to that within or beneath the bosom; as the heart,—the feelings or passions, the affections, the desires of the heart.

To bosom.—To store, to treasure up in the bosom, to seat or fix deeply; to store or conceal, to shelter.

A bosom friend,—a friend of our affections; a friend affectionately, especially, beloved. And so of other compounds.

A. S. Bosome; D. Bossem; Ger. Bussem. Jun. derives from Bor-an, Bor-an, to feed, to nourish. Sk. from the Fr. Poor, for Reposer, to rest, to lean upon; because infants rest and repose upon the bosom. Wach. says, that Ger. Bosm may arise from fathm, and this fathm from fassen, falten, to seize, to embrace. In this uncertainty a new attempt to trace the word may be allowed.—In A. S. we have Bug-an, to bow; Bugum, buhum: hence perhaps the A. S. Bosome. In D. Booghen, to bow; Booghen: hence perhaps the D. Bossem. In Ger. Bosgen, to bow; Beng-sam: and hence perhaps the Ger. Bussem. In confirmation, it may be remarked, that the L. Stans and the Gr. Kakron, are the bosom, and also a bay or bow. Em-

BOSS, v. s. A Boss is—Any thing rising -ED. or raised up, swollen, projecting, -Y. thrusting or pushing forth.

Mr. Gifford, in a note on B. Jonson's Time Vindicated, observes, that "Boss (the Boss of Billingsgate) is an head or reservoir of water. It frequently occurs in Stowe. 'The bosses of water at Belinsgate, by Powles Wharfe, and by St. Giles without Cripplegate, were made in the year 1423.' (Survey of London.)"

It. Bossa. "Bosse, Fr. from Pusa, which is formed from Quas, quas, inflo;—Quas, pusa, busa, buasa, bosse. From Pusa, the Latins formed Pusula, pustula, a pustule." Thus Men. Killan has Bosse, bokeler, umbo. Wach. explains Bossein, globis et conis ludere; but adds, that the proper meaning is, trudere, impellere, propulsare. Sk. varies little from Men.; and adds, that Boss is, res quasi extumescens, any thing rising up. Em-

BOTANY, s. Knowledge, science, of -IST. herbs, of plants; of vegetable -IC. nature.—Brown.

-ICAL. Fr. Botan-ique; It. -ica; Sp. -ico; -OLOGER. Fr. Botanog, a herb, herbage; that which is fed upon; from bovo, to feed.

BOTCH, v. s. As now used.—To botch is, -ER. to amend or repair, in patches, in -Y. clumsy pieces; to patch together -EDLY. clumsily, unsuitably; with pieces of a different quality or colour. And thus the s. may be app. to discoloured, disfiguring spots, tumours or eruptions.

Jun. thinks, that the D. Boetsen, to bodge or bolche, is the frequentative of Boeten, (see Boor), to amend, to repair. Botch, the s. he and Sk. suppose to be from the Fr. Bosse; It. Bossa; but there appears to be no reason for assigning a different origin to these words.

BOTH, ad. co. Chaucer uses the expression, "your bother love," which Mr. Tyrw. observes might lead one to suspect that bother was the genitive of both, as aller of alle.

Go. Be, bei; A. S. Be, batwa; Ger. & D. Beide; Sw. Bade; Dan. Baade. R. Gloucester writes Beys as well as Bothe. The origin of this word is unknown. Iure thinks it is compounded of two synonymous words, be, two, and two, two.—See Iure in voce Bade.

BOTHER, v. s. To pother, is to make a pudder, or rather a puther; qd. a powder; to raise a dust, as a horse running with speed.—Sk. Cona.—

To be or cause to be as one involved in dust, in a cloud,—who cannot see his way; to perplex, to puzzle, to confound.

A word common in vulgar speech, but rare in writing. Perhaps the same as pother. Locke uses pother (qv.) exactly as Swift uses bother. And it does not seem to matter which way the words are written.

BOTT, s. A grub that bites. "The botts that fret and gnaw in the bellies."—Holland. Plinie. From the A. S. Bitan, to bite.

BOTTLE, s. Fr. Boteau, a bundle, or bottle, as of hay.—Cot. It is still common in the northern parts of England to call a truss or bundle of hay, a bottle. Sk. suggests that it may be a corruption of bundle. Em-

BOTTLE, v. s. Bottle is the name of—
-ED. A vessel of various sizes, made
-ING. of glass or other material, narrowing to a neck at the top, to receive the stopper.

Fr. Bouteille; It. Bottiglia; Sp. Botella; Low L. Baticula; Sw. Bultelje; Dan. Bullel. Voss and Men. derive from the Low Gr. Bourne, which Sk. has no doubt is itself of northern origin. Lye and Serenius think that Bottle is a dim. of the A. S. Bylla, a butt or cask. See Burr.

BOTTOM, v. s. ad. Bottom, s.—that upon -LESS. which we tread, stand, walk, or
-RY. go; the lowest part; the part at the lowest depth. That upon which any thing stands, rests; upon which it is sustained or supported; the foundation;
the groundwork: or, That which bides, dwells, remains settled; settles, subsides;
and thus the lowest part, &c.

To venture in the same bottom, is (met.)
o run the same risk as those who have ventured to embark themselves or property in the same ship's bottom; and bottom is
app. to the whole ship.

To bottom, is to rest, place, or stand upon; to fix, found, or establish.

Bottomry,—a pledge of the keel or bottom of the ship, as security for repayment of money.

A. S. Botm; D. Bodem; Ger. Boten; Sw. Botn.
Wach. refers to the Ger. Padden; A. S. Petathian, (whence our path), to trample or tread upon,
to bruise with the feet; or rather from the A. S., D., & Ger. vid-an, bygd-en, beiden, to bide, to remain. Un-

BOUGE, v. To bilge or buige, (qv.)
Utres is by Holland rendered Bouges; i. e. something swelling or belying out.

BOUGE, s. Mr. Gifford observes, that "Bouge of Court was an allowance of meat and drink for the tables of the inferior officers, and others who were occasionally called to serve and entertain the Court."
(B. Jonson's Works, vol. vii. p. 228, n. 1.)
It appears to have meant merely free entrance or access, ingress and egress.

Fr. "Bouche, a mouth; also, a passage, entry, entrance, or overturn into. Avoir bouch & court, to eat and drink scot-free; to have budge-a-court,
to be in ordinary at court."—Col.

BOUGH, or Bow, s. So called, because it bows or bends from the stem or trunk.

A. S. Bug-an, to bow, (qv.)

BOUGHT, or Bout, s. The bought of a serpent,—the flexure, bends, curves, folds, or involutions.

The bought of the knee or elbow (in the north called beight) is—the flexure or curvature of the knee or elbow. A winding bout,—an involution. Another bout,— another turn. The bout of a sling, is the bent leather upon which the stone or thing to be thrown is laid. See Bour.

From the A. S. Bug-an, to bow; to bend, to turn.

BOULINE, or BOLING, s. "A tack or cord in a ship, with which mariners use to draw the sail which way they list, that they may thereby gather the wind: Fr. Bouline, perhaps from boule, globus, from its round form."—Mins.

dens quidam in navi.—Sk. Dan. Borline.

BOUN, or BOUND, pt. Boun, boue, or boom, is—prepared, or provided, dressed, ready.
And To be bound to any place,—

Prepared or provided, furnished or supplied (with freight or cargo, as a ship bound to Brazil). I am bound to go to such a place, to do such a thing,—prepared, ready, to go; on the start, on the way; ready to do it, on the point of doing it. In Spenser;
"The way that does to heaven bound;" i. e. prepare, fit, lead, guide: and, gen. To be bound is—

To be on the way or voyage, on the road, in the course.

Ray: To boun or unboun, is to dress, and undress; perhaps from the D. Bouwen, to build, to manure. Boun days, are those days which the tenants are obliged to employ for the benefit of their lord, gratis.—Boun, (boun-ed), bound, are, in Sc., and also in northern parts of England, very common words: Whither are ye bound? I am bound for such a place, the Gloss. to G. Douglas interprets ready, adopting the etymology of Sk., the A. S. Abund-en, expeditus, from the v. Bind-an,
to bind; and, agreeing with him that it is a metaphor from military service, in which the men, when prepared for march, have all their baggage bound up, (whence he adds the L. Accingi ad iter.)
Dr. Jamieson thinks the true origin is the Sw.
Boca, to prepare. Ihre interprets Bode-boun, ritet paratus, (i. e. ready boun), ready or already prepared; far-boun, færda-boun, prepared for a journey, prepared to go. Ready boun is a common Scotch phrase. The Sw. Boca is the D. Bouwen (proposed by Ray); Ger. Bauen; A. S. Bug-an, to build:—cons. To construct, to contrive, to provide, to prepare; also to till, or, as Ray says, to manure, to dress the land. See Booz.

BOUNCE, v. s. Met. To boast; to crack.

-ER. Vox a sono ficta, says Sk. Perhaps from
-ING. Bounds, bounts, bounce. See BOUND, Fr.
Bondir, infra, to which Bounce is equivalent, and Sc. To bount, in Jamieson.

BOUND, v. s. -ING-STONE. Fr. "Bondir, to bound, to rebound, to leap, jump, jert, skip, rise (suddenly and swiftly) upward."—
Col. Om. -ING.

To bound (Sk. says) is from the Fr. Bondir, to be struck back, to leap back, to be dashed back, from the L. Undare, abundare, redundare, because a ball, when struck back, comment et remeant instar undarum. But rebound (to which he refers, and which he explains to signify—to be driven back as a ball,) he derives from the It. Rimbombare, to resound as an echo, from the Gr. Βομβος, βομβειν, to bomb, or hum. Re-

BOUND, v. s. To include or inclose,

-ARY. within limits or confines; to
-ER. -LESS. limit, to confine, to restrict or
-LESSLY. restrain; to determine or ter-
-LESSNESS. minate.

Low L. Bonna, or borna, or bunda, bonnare;
Fr. Bonne, or borna, bornier. Abonner, abonner, to fix the boun or bound; to include, or inclose within limits. To bound, which (with the mere difference of the interchangeable letters b and p) is to pound, from the A. S. Pynd-an, to inclose.

BOUQUET, s. A nosegay or posy (a bush or bush) of flowers. Fr. Bouquet.

BOURD, s. s. -ING. To bourde, bord, or board, seems merely to be—To abord or aboard, to accost, to approach; to accost in speech, to address, or direct the speech or discourse to; to attack in speech, sporti-vely, jeeringly, jestingly; to jeer or jest, to banter.

*Common in old writers, from Chaucer to Ford.

Fr. Bourde, scoffs, jests, gibes, cuts, quips.—

Cot. D. Boerde; Mid. L. Burde. Dr. Jamieson thinks that the Fr. Bourd-er is merely an abbreviation of Be-boudir, beborder, to joust together with lances,—and that this being a species of mock fighting very common in former times, the idea has been transferred to talking in jest or mockery.

See Jamieson in v. Bourd.

BOURDON, s. s. Burden, or burthen,

(qqv.)—*Spenser.

BOURGEON, s. or BURGEN, v. s. Fr.

Bourgeoisier, to bud, to spring or sprout out, to put or shoot out.—Cot.

*Wiclif to Dryden.

Burgen geminus, is rendered by Wiclif, "bur- geunge upwards." Men. says the Fr. Bourgeon is from Burris, and Burris from Burra; Sk., that it is from Bourre, soft down, because buds are

gen. soft and downy. Perhaps the A. S. Ber-an,

A. S. Byrnan, burn; D. Born; Ger. Born, brun; Sw.

Brunnas; Sc. Burn. A well, spring, fountain.

Jun. and Wach. think it is from the Gr. Bouein, to spring or flow forth; Itho, from Rinnan, be-rinnan, brinnan, to flow. Rinn-an is also written Yrn-an,

and be-grn-an gives immediately the A. S. Byrn-a.

BOURN, s. Fr. Bonne or Borne, a bound,

BOUSE, v. To bouse,—to drink largely,

-Y. sottiſhly; to swill.

-EE, v. To bousen,—to drench, to souse.

"He was bousened again and again in the pond."—Carew.

The D. Bugge is, (according to Kilian,) a cup with two handles, which, on account of its size, is taken up and set down with both hands.

Buggen, to drink out of such a cup, to drink largely. Sk. suggests from the Gr. θυσειν, to blow. It seems plainly formed from the Fr. Boire, to drink; beu, drunken.

BOUT, s. One bout, one turn; another turn, another trial. See Bouvent.

BOUTEFEU, s. Fr. Boute-feu, a wilful brand of sedition, a kindler of strife and contention; one that loves to set, and see men together by the ears.—Cot.

Fr. Bouter le feu, admovery, immittere ignem.

BOW, v. s. To bend, to curve, to crook,

-ER. to arch, to incline, to decline.

-YER. Bow, the s. whether app. to the ticular kind of knot; or the curved part of a saddle, or of a ship; or to the arc-en-ciel

the same thing; viz. bended or curved; and is the past tense and past p. of the A. S.

Bygan, flectere, incurvare. See Tooke.

Wiclif renders the L. Declinare, vitare,

Eng. To bow. It is also used (cons.) for—

To give way, to yield, to submit; to obey.

Bower,—he who, that which, bows, or

The Sc. Rack, (see Jamieson,) Eng. Brack, are app. to a hound, canis venaticus; to a dog that scents out, or traces out by the scent: perhaps rack and brack are race, be-ræcc, bræcc, from the A. S. Ræce, from Recan, to reek, to send forth a fume or scent; Ger. Riechen, be-riechen, to scent out, to trace by the scent or odour. -GERY.* E. Hall.

D. Braggeren; Fr. Brague. Jun. observes that Brag, in Sc. is fear, terror; and he quotes several instances from G. Douglas of the word so used. The Glossarist also remarks, that, "to boast and brag one, is, to threaten, or sharply reprove one." And hence was deduced, as Jun. believes, the Eng. application of the word—to those, who endeavour to strike terror into their opponent by the noisiness of their threats. The word itself he refers to the A. S. Brægan, terrore, to terrify. Sk. on the other hand, says,—perhaps from the L. Frax; qui (sc.) fragorem magnus edit. G. Douglas writes, "with brak and boist," which, as the Glossarist seems to consider, can be merely the word Brag, diff. written: and this brings us to the A. S. Brægan, frangere, to break; Brægan, diripere, as the more probable etymology. Brægan, terrore, is Bræc-an, frangere, contundere, to break or bruise, diff. written and app. Our older Eng. writers, as well as modern speech, supply us with a word similar both in origin and usage: viz. to crack, a crack, (qv.) To brag, then, is—as above explained. Out-

BRAGGET, s. A compound drink made of honey and spices.—Grose; Whalley adds, ale. Holinshed calls it Brackwort.

Sc. Bragwort. The etymology is unknown.

BRAID, v. s. ad. To break, pull, drag, rend, or tear;—to start, leap, or spring; to rush, to burst forth, to make an interruption, or eruption, or sally, assault, onset, insurrection, revolt. "The devel hurled him down and to brayde him."—Wiclif. "Out of my swough I brayde."—Chaucer. "His swerde all naked out he braide."—Gower. "A rashe maliciose frētlicke braide."—Sir T. More.

A. S. Brægan, abreggan, ge-brægan, diripere, eximere, stringere, to tear, or drag out, or away. Bray, brayed, braid; A. S. Abregdan, a-brad-lan; (see ABRAID, BRAY, and BRAK;) app. to any frequent or sudden and violent action or motion. The ad. used by Shak. seems to denote—sudden and violent. See Dr. Jamieson, in v. Brade, who assigns (unnecessarily) various etymologies for various applications of the same word. A. De. Em- Up-

v. 586), is so called απο του βρυγναι, to wet, to moisten; because in infants, that part is wet or moist? Brægn may be formed of Be-rægn.

BRAKE, v. s. That which breaketh; (lit. and met.) sc. the strength, the spirit, the temper; that which, any thing (bridle, frame, close or narrow place,) which restrains, holds, or keeps in, confines, curbs, tames, subdues. (See the Com. on Shak.
Mess. for Mess. Act ii. sc. 1; and Nare's brake.

BRAKE, s. Any place covered with such
 -Y. undergrowth as bracken, biars,
BRACKEN, or brambles.
 Dan. Brygne. Brake or Bracken is perhaps so called, says Sk., quia fragilis est; easy to be broken. A brake, Jun. refers to the same origin.

BRAMBLE, s. A plant.

-ED. Dan. Brambar; D. Braem; A. S. Braemel,
 -Y. brambel. Sk. derives from A. S. Braemel, angust, eroclaus; because it tears or lacerates the hands with its thorns. Braemel probably is from Braemmen, frémere. See BAIMME.

 to bend.

BRAND, v. s. -NEW. To brand is to burn,
sc. a spot or mark in token of infamy.

A brand is a burning stick or torch; a spot or mark burned.

A sword is also so called, because in motion it glitters like a burning torch, like a fire-brand, (Sk.) But Hickes,—because the ancients, in fabricating swords, endeavoured to give them the appearance of flaming fire.

Brand-new,—D. Brandnieuw (Sk. observes), is by an elegant metaphor deduced à re fabril; new from the fire, from the forge.

A brand,—torris ignitus. D. & Ger. Brand, from the D. Branden; Ger. Brennen; A. S. Brennan,

BRANDISH, v. s. -ER. To wave, (sc. while held or grasped,) to move to and fro in attitude of defence or attack; to vibrate.

"From Brand, (see ante.) Anglicè,—to brandish a sword, gladium strictum vibrando coruscare facere," (Hickes, Gram. A. S. p. 192.) Jun. also thinks that brandish was first app. to the motion of a brand, and then gen. to denote—to wave, to shake. Fr. Brandir, (It. Brandire, which Men. derives from L. Vibrare), to shine or glister with a gentle shaking or soft moving.—Cot.

BRANDLE,* v. To waver, to totter.
 "Subjects cannot be too curious when the state brandles."—Earl of Northampton.

Fr. Branler, branler, brandiller. "To brandle, wag, shake, swing, totter."—Cot. Men. says, from Brandir, to wave, to shake. (See BRANDISH.)
 Bp. Taylor writes Branle.

BRANGLE,* v. To dispute, to squabble, to quarrel.

Brangill and Brangland (i. e. brangling) occur in G. Douglas, Eneados, b. ii. p. 59;
 b. x. p. 334; app. to the motion of a tree and of a spear. In b. x. p. 347, Mezentius is said "to go brangland through the field;" and here Dr. Jamieson interprets it to denote—To menace; to make a threatening appearance.—Bp. Hall. Swift.

To Brangle is interpreted by Lye,—to brandish, to shake. The Glossarist to G. Douglas thinks it is from Fr. Branler or Bransler, to move, to shake.
 Dr. Jamieson coincides in this; and if they are right, Brangle and Brangle are merely different ways of writing the same word. (See BRANDLE and BRANSEL.) But Brangle is also interpreted jurgari, altercari, to wrangle; which Sk. and Jun.
 agree is wrongle, a diminutive of wrong, the past.
p. of wring, to twist, to distort, to misrepresent.
Be-wrangle, derangle, brangle, presents a common course of corruption. See WRANGLE. Em-

BRANSEL,* s. Fr. Branler or Bransler, to brandle, (qv.) Bransle the s. Cot. says, is "a branding, &c. Also, a brawl or dance, wherein many (men and women), holding by the hands, sometimes, in a ring, and otherwhiles at length, move altogether." G. Douglas, in the Threttene Booke of Eneados uses brangil for a dance.—Spenser.

BRASS, s. The metal—may be so called
 -Y. from its colour.

BRASIER. A. S. Bras; whence perhaps (says Jun.) Fr. Bronze; It. & Sp. -o; but Tooke is of opinion that these are from the Old Eng. To bræ or brin, (A. S. Bernan, brenn-an), i. e. to burn.
 The A. S. Bras, brass, may have a similar origin, viz. A. S. Brasilan; Ger. Brasen, to burn. See
BRASE.

BRATT,* s. That which warmeth, a warm cloak or covering.—*Chaucer.

From the same source as the former BRAT. Lye says, "Bred-an, weormian," that is, to warm.

BRAVE, v. s. ad. It is evident that brave, -ING. bravery, (app. either to person or -LY. thing,) and bravado, were used to -NESS. express, loud, ostentatious brag-ERY. ging; a bragging, boastful, osten- -ADO. tatious display of finery, of dress, -o. of pride, of power, of courage, of daring. See the usages of Braw in Jamieson.

A brave, and to brave, are still so used; while brave, the ad., and bravery, the s. are employed to express—simply—courage. See BRAG, and TO BREAK.

A brag, and a brave, denote the same thing.

To brave is to set boastfully at defiance; to challenge, in a boastful, bragging, daring manner. In Taming of the Shrew,—to set off in finery.

Fr. Brave; It. & Sp. Bravo; Ger. Brav; D. Brauwe; Sw. Brav; Dan. Brav, braverer. Jun. says, that it seems to be avo too bravew, the reward of victory. BRAWL, v. s. Brawl is contracted from -ER. Brabble, (qv.) And see BRIOIL and -ING. WRAWL. As now app. it is—

To squabble, to quarrel in a loud and noisy manner, to wrangle, to rail.

BRAWL, s. A dance. See BRANSEL.

BRAWN, s. Brawn is, by transposition of -ED. the letter r, bar-en, or baw-en, i. e. -ER. boaren, and means Boar-en, boar's -Y. (subaud.) flesh.—Tooke.

-INESS. Brawn, brawny,—are also app. to that which has the strength and vigour of a boar.

BRAY, v. To pound or beat to pieces: to separate or dis sever by violent action upon the mass:—"to beat small, break into little pieces."—Cot. See BRAID.
A. S. Bray-an; Fr. Brayer, brayer.

BRAY, v. s. To break out into a loud -ER. noise or clamour; to make an up- -ING. roar; to utter aloud, harshly, dissonantly. In old authors, the horse, the elephant, as well as the ass, are said to bray. See BRAG, BRAY, (supra), and BRAID.
Fr. Brayer or Bratre.

BRAY, s. Appears to be app.—To any thing which overhangs or overlooks, as a bray or brow of a hill; a part of a fortification raised so as to overlook.

The D. have Browieren, speculati.

As Bey and Bow are the same word diff. written and app., so seem Bray and Brow. A. S. Braewe, bræwa; D. Brauwe or Browe, the edge, the brow.

BRAZE, v. To bræze,—to work in brass, -EN, ad. to cover with brass.

-EN-FACED. Brazen, (met.) is hardened, impudent, shameless. A face of glaring effrontery, or impudence.

Ger. Brasen, urere, to burn; to give a burnt or brown colour. See BRASS.

BREACH, s. A rupture; a way, passage, or opening,—broken through any thing.

(Met.) An infraction or violation of an agreement, of a duty; a destruction, a separation, a dissension.

Past tense and past p. of Ge. Brican; A. S. Brecan, bræcan, to break.

BREAD, s. Brayed corn is the first state -EN. of the process towards the loaf; the -LESS. next is dough. See DOUGH and LOAF.

Sk. believes that it is from the A. S. Bread-an, fovere, to nourish. Tooke,—that Bread is brayed grain or corn.

BREADTH, s. -LESS. The third person singular Brædeth, (A. S.) of the indicative of Brædan, dilatare; (in the North, to bræde;) to broaden, to expand, to dilate. See BROAD.

BREAK, v. s. To separate or divide into -ER. parts; to sunder, to rive, or burst -ING. asunder; to crack or split asun- -FAST, v. s. der—into parts or pieces—any thing united into one mass.

To make or cause a rupture or breach; a disruption, or breaking apart; an eruption, or breaking out; an irruption, or breaking in.

To separate, (met.) to disjoin, to dispart, to force apart; to dis sever, to interrupt, to intercept.

To break down,—to suppress, to subdue, to subject, to crush, to tame, to overpower; to bring or reduce to obedience, to poverty, to decay.

To break or infringe, to violate. Adultery, in our old writers, is called spousebreach.

To break one's mind, is to break (to broche) it open; to open it, to disclose it.

To break the fast, or to break-fast, is to separate the time of fasting, to interrupt the continuance of fasting, to discontinue fasting.

This word is of most universal application (met. or lit.) to any separation; part when made with suddenness, violence, injury. See BRAG, BRAVE, BRAT, BRAID, BROACH; also BROKE, v. and BROKEN.

BRETFUL, av. Of Bretful, Mr. Tyrw. observes that the sense is much more clear than the etymology. The breeds of a hat, in Gloucestershire, are the brims of a hat. Breeds may be that which brades, broads or broadens; and bretful may be full to the whole breadth, the whole extent or dimensions; brimful.

BREVE, ad.* A breve, brief, or breviary,

BRIBE, v. s. Bribe, that which is taken

-ING. or received, extorted or extracted;

-ER. and cons. that which is given: and

-ERY. briber has, by usage, been transferred, from the taker or extortioner, to the giver or payer; and the v. To bribe, has undergone a similar change.

To bribe, is—To give, or pay,—a fee, a perquisite; to make a donation, (extorted, required, expected, or desired,) usually as hire, for an undue or corrupt return, for undue services or favours, for undue influence, partiality, or preference; or otherwise to obtain a right wrongfully withheld or denied, or an adjudication of such right.

Fabyan,—"The more part was stolen and brybed." Berners,—"The bribours of the country often times slew them." Bible, 1551, Matt. xxiii.—"Within they were full of bribery and excesse."

Nicol interprets a bride to be panis mendicatus; and Cot. calls it "a pece, lump, or cantil of bread given to a beggar." Fr. Briber, to beg his bread; also to ravine, devour, eat greedily; Sp. Briber, to beg. Mr. Tyrw. says—To briber, is to beg, perhaps, to steal; and he cites from the Rolls of Parliament, the words "have stolen and bribed cygnets." In P. Plouhman, (p. 405,) "Bribours, pilors, (i. e. pillers,) and pikeharness," are classed together. In Lidgate (Tragedy, 152,) still more plainly—

"Who saveth a thefe when the rope is knet,
With some false turn the bridour will him quite."
Such seems indeed to have been the common usage. From the common corruption of Be-r by hasty pronunciation into Br, a very satisfactory etymology presents itself. (See B.) A bridour or briber, is a be-reaver or be-river, a be-riber or be-robber; a briber or robber: and To bride is to rob, or take away. Un—

It is, perhaps, from Brice, fragmentum.

D. Brokel, brake-lick, from broken, to break.

BRIDE, v. s. The bride is any one (sc. —AL, s. ad. woman) nourished, cherished. A —GROOM. woman newly placed under the —ALTY. protection of a husband, newly espoused or married; who has newly entered into the nuptial state.

Bridegroom is the person by whom the nourished, cherished one is taken care of, attended, served, protected. The (protecting) husband newly espoused to the bride.—*B. Jonson.

A. S. Bredan, fovere, to nourish, to cherish.—Tooke. Som. observes that Chaucer writes it Bræde, (see BAZEN.) In A. S. Bridgum; Ger. Brantigam; D. Bruede-gum; Dan. Breedgom; Sw. Brudgumme: all without the r. See GROOM.

BRIDGE, v. s. Be-ridge, bridge, (ber contracted into br), is—

That which reaches, stretches, or extends, (sc. from bank to bank, across a river, from side to side, point to point;) any thing built, raised, and stretched or extended across.

One considers the Sw. Brygga to be the dim. of Bro, pons; properly denoting allquod stratum, i. e. any thing strowed, spread, stretched. Spel., that brig or brug is so called because it is usually constructed à tabulis; brug also signifying tabulatum. Sk. suggests, A. S. Ober, over, and Rige, the back; or ig, water. It is (probably) A. S. Rige, arige, a ridge, or that which reaches; and the common prefix, be. In A. S. we find Hricg, bricg; in Sw. Ryggs, bryggs; in Ger. Ruck, bruck; in D. Rugge, brugge; in Dan. Ryg, brygge; in Eng. Ridge, bridge.

BRIDLE, v. s. Bridle, (ber into br),—-ER. That with which we ride, sc. to guide —ING. or manage the horse.

To bridle, (lit. Gow.—met. Chancer,) to hold in, to restrain, to moderate. It is also—

To hold up the head;—as a horse when he feels the bridle; when pulled up by it.

Fr. Brig-and, —andine, —antine; It. —ante, —sulino; Sp. Bregante, bergantina. Sk. thinks that, as soldiers were formerly called brigans, the true etymology is brigade, (qv.) Brigades, it may be added, were parties detached, broken away from the main body, partly for foraging and plundering.

BRIGADE, v. s. —IER. The brigade supposes a great body of troops, from which it has been detached; broken away.

The v. is in use in common speech.

It. Brigata; Fr. "Brigader, to accompany or associate one another; to troop or keep company together."—Cot. (See BRIGUEN.) Duchat thinks it is derived from the Ger. Brecken, to break. See BRIGAND.

BRIM, v. ad. -MING. To be hot, furious, violent, fierce, outrageous; vehement, rampant, prevalent.

A. S. Bræmman, (be-bræmman), furere, fremere. See BAHNE.

BRIMSTONE, s. -Y. Brinston, as written by P. Plouhman. "Sulphur, qd. Brenne-stone, lapis ardens;" burning stone, a stone that burns.—Sk. See SULPHUR, which is also so called, quia igne accenditur.

BRINDED, ad. -LED. Is not in our older lexicographers; probably it is brenned, or browned; marked or streaked with brown; and brindled is the diminutive.

BRINE, s. App. to—A biting saltness; -ISM. to the sea.

-Y. D. Bryn; A. S. Bryne. Sk. thinks, from Bryn, the salt sea. Jun. says, perhaps so called, quia pyrite, ex eo voc vapor; qui anima salugo ea, instar ignis, adurat. It may be so called because it burns or brens; and A. S. Brennan, Old Eng. Bren or Bris, present an obvious etymology.

BRING, s. To remove, or cause the removal of, any thing from one place -ING. to another, either by bearing or carrying, leading or drawing.

It is equivalent to L. Ferre, vehere, trahere, ducere, as, to bring or bear, to bring or carry, to bring or draw, to bring or lead. With Eng. pr. subjoined it is equivalent also to the compounds of those Latin words, many of which, part of the v. ducere, we have adopted in our own language. As—

To abduce, to bring or lead from.

To adduce, to bring or lead to.

To conduce, or conduct, to bring or lead with.

To deduce, to bring or lead down from.

To educate, and to educate, to bring or lead out.

To induce, to lead or bring into.

To introduce, to bring or lead within.

To obduce, to bring or lead over.

To produce, to bring or lead forth.

To reduce, to bring or lead back.

To seduce, to bring or lead away from.

To traduce, to bring or lead over or across.

Circumduction, a bringing or leading around; and

Diduction, a bringing or leading asunder, are also found.

And as in the L. the difference in the meaning depends upon the pr. pref., so in the Eng. it depends upon the pr. subjoined. The Eng. usage of the words borrowed from the L. is almost wholly metaphorical.

BRISKET, s. The breast, (qv.)

Fr. Brickel, brachet, from Brèche (a break or breach) from Brecken, to break.

BRISTLE, v. s. -Y. The s.—the stiff hair of certain animals.

To bristle,—to rise up, stand up; stiff as a bristle.

A. S. Bryst, dim. Bristl; D. Borstel; Ger. Burst-haar. Sk. suggests, from the v. To brust or bursl; because the bristle bursts through the skin.

BRITTLE, ad. -NESS. That may be (easily) broken; fragile, frail.

A. S. Brytan, frangere, comminuere. See BRICKLE.

BROACH, v. s. -ER. Broches, the s. is used in P. Plouhman, as we now use matches, a bit of wood broken or split off. As a consequent application,—

A broach is any thing which (being so broken or split off) will pierce through, stick through, penetrate. Thus a broach of eels, is a stick of eels; so many eels broched, spitted or stuck through. A spit, a pin, are also so called:—that part of certain ornaments, by which it is stuck on; and subsequently the whole ornament.

"Fr. Brocher, to spit: to broche a horse, is to spur him, to strike him with spurs, almost to stick him with spurring."—Cot.

To broach a vessel, is (perforare) to bore through, to break into, to pierce through.

BROCK, s. -ISH. Brookish, as used by Bale, seems formed from it to denote;—beastly, brutal.

A. S. Broc, a badger. Sk. suggests, from To break; because this animal breaks and bruises with most severe biting; whence we say, To bite like a badger.

BROGUE, s. Dr. Jamieson says, a coarse and slight kind of shoe made of horse leather, much used by the Highlanders, and by those who go to shoot upon the hills; and he derives it from the Ir. Gael. Brog, a shoe. But whence Brog?

BROGUE, s. A word in vulgar use, but of unknown origin. App. to the Ir. accent in pronunciation.

BROID, v. To knit, to plight, to wreath, -ER. to interweave. See BRAID. Un-ER-Y. -ERS.

BROIL, v. s. To confound, to mingle, to -ER. disturb, to trouble, to disorder, to -ING. squabble, to quarrel, to wrangle, to rail.

Noise, agitation, and confusion, are included in all the applications of the word, however written.

To broil, sc. on a gridiron, Fr. Bruler; which Men. thinks is from the Gr. Βρωζειν, spumam ejicere, (formed apparently for the purpose of the etymology from Βρωζειν,—βρωειν, to shoot or spring forth,) through a supposed L. word also, Brusare, brusitare, bruler. Le Duchat writes, Peruro, perusit, perustum, perustare, perustulare, bruler. Sk. thinks that broisiller is from bruil; but there appears not any reason to consider Broil, bruil, as two words. See BRAUL or SHABBLE. Fr. Broisiller, ambroisiller; It. Imbrogliare. BROKE, v. A broker, one who breaks -AGE. goods bought by wholesale or in -ER. large packages, who deals by -ER-AGE. retail; a retailer of goods sent or -LY. consigned to him in gross, by -Y. wholesale or in large packages; who sells as agent in parts or portions; an agent; one who acts between seller and buyer, who is employed by both parties, who makes his gains by so doing.

To broke, and a broker, were used in contempt, as to trade, and a trader are now. He is a mere trader, i. e. he regards merely his own interest; an usurious dealer, a guileful dealer or a bargainer.

Brokage,—the interdealing of a broker.

Spel. calls adrocamenium, (i. e. brokerage,) vox forensis, i. e. of the market; a mercantile word, signifying "the buying of goods by wholesale, in whole bags or packages, before they are delivered or conveyed to the mart or market; and afterwards the separating (distractio) of the same into portions or allotments." It is literally the disruptio, or breaking into such portions. Jun. suggests that broker may be so denominated from To break, as from A. S. Bryttan,—in exiguis partes dissecare.—Brytta was the name given to the person who distributed or divided into small parts.

The A. S. Bric-ean or Bruc-an; Bric-a, the occupation or exercise of a thing; Brucinge, a function, the execution of some office or charge; D. Brugcken; Ger. Branchen; Sw. Bruka, seem all to be consequential usages. See To Break.

BROKEN, pt. A tradesman is said to -LY. have broke, when he is a bank-rupt, -NESS. or in the condition of a bank-rupt.

BROOD, v. s. -Y. A brood,—that which, the number which, is bred (at once), which is nourished, cherished, fostered.

To brood,—to nourish, to cherish, to foster; to watch over, to protect, to continue in a state of care and watchfulness, as a mother over her young. See BREED.

A. S. Bradan, fever.

BROOK, v. To brook is, to be or cause to be, to render or become, submissive or subservient, (as a horse when broken, a broken spirit;) to yield or submit to, to bear or suffer; to subject, to tame; to subserve, (to preserve.) See To Break.

"Broken hole my tresses,"—keep safe the tresses of my hair. "So mote I broken mine eye;" i. e. use, enjoy them.

"No ship could brook the sea."—Stowe.

D. Brugken; A. S. "Brucan, to enjoy, to use, to occupy; also, to brook, to digest."—Som. Mr. Tyrw. says, To enjoy, to use.

BROOK, s. -Y. "The struggling water breaks out in a brook."—Beau. & F.

A. S. Broca, from the v. Brucan, frangere, to break; because the bubbling water breaks through the earth.—T. H. in Sk.

BROOM, s. -Y. App. to—The plant, and also the utensil made of its small branches.

A. S. Brom; D. Brem. Perhaps from the D. Bremmen, sonitum edere: because the seeds of this plant, when ripe, burst from the pods with a considerable noise.

BROTH, s. "The third person singular of the indicative of Briwan, coquere. That which one briweth. Hence the Old Eng. saying of a man who has killed himself with drinking, he has fairly drunk up his broth. The It. Brodo, is the past p. of the same v. That which is brewed, brod."—Tooke. The Dan. Brouter, is to brag, to crack. Fr. Brui, from Bruire, (see BRUIE), to make a noise; which Men. derives from the L. Rugire, To roar, to bellow. Ray says, To bruit, (in Shropshire, to brui); is to divulge, and spread abroad; and Tooke, that Brui means (something) spread abroad, divulged, dispersed; from the A. S. Brittan, to distribute:—but this is merely a consequential usage of the A. S. Brittan, to break, to break to pieces, and hence to disperse. See BAUTZ.

-AL-LY. ly sensual; to that which is in-

-ITY. human, savage, ferocious.

-IZE, v. L. Brutus, of unsacred etymology.

-LY. Voas. says, it may be contracted from

-NESS. Προβατον, ovile, or απο της βαπτιστης, i. e. a gravitate. The root is apparently

-IVY, v. northern. The L. Brutus, as

-ISH. the Fr. Brouter, to bruit or browse, may have been originally app. to

-ISH-LY. browsing, or grazing animals; the

-NESS. brute earth, the earth bruted, brutled, or grazed upon. (See BAUTZ.) Or rather it may have been originally used to denote, when app. to animals, noisy (Fr. Brui); the noisy, roaring, bellowing class of animals; dumb only, as to articulate speech; loud, as to inarticulate utterance.

(See BAVIN, BAUTZ.) When app. to other things,

(e. g. the earth,) used to denote some quality in common with these animals: their want of understanding, their stupidity, sluggishness, dullness, heaviness; and hence extended, both in ancient and modern usage, (met.) to that which has the distinguishing, characteristic, qualities of a brute.

BUBUKLES, s. This word is Shak.'s, or rather Fluellin's; used in describing Bardolph's nose:—"His face is all bubukles and welkes and knobs."

BUCCANEER, s. Fr. "Boucan, a wooden gridiron, whereon cannibals broyle pieces of men and other flesh."—Cot. Men considers the words Boucan, Boucaner, to be Caribbee Indian; and that hence Boucanier or Buccanier, app. to pirates or freebooters, living like wild Indian cannibals, is derived.

BUCK, s. v. The male of various animals, as, the deer, the rabbit, the goat.

A. S. Bucca; Fr. Boue; It. Bocco; Ger. D. & Sw. Bock, is an animal, striking (butting) with the horns, from Ger. Bocken, to strike.—Wach. Martinus also mentions the Ger. Bucken, Fr. Buquer, among other conjectures, (in voce Hircus.)

BUCK, v. s. -ET. A vessel for the purpose of washing,—like a hollow semi-globe, (hemi sphaerii.) Bucket is the dim.

To bucket, is to use a bucket, sc. for washing; and thus to wet, wash, or soak.

Buck, the s. is app. by Shak. both to things washed, and to the water in which they are washed.

D. Buycken; Ger. Beuchen; Fr. Buer; all, says Wach. (after Huet) from the L. Buo. Spel. guides us to the A. S. Bugan, Ger. Bengen, to arch, to bend. He explains, Bauca q. Buca; Sax. Buc; —as above.

BUCK, s. Perhaps Bug; a bug fellow is a common name in the North. (See Buo.) Or it may be a corrupt Eng. pronunciation of beaux. Bucks and belles, are beaux and belles.

BUCKLE, v. s. -ING. To buckle, is to fasten or close, as with a buckle; to keep close; to keep closely engaged in; to adhere to, as in close combat.

To be in buckle, (Spectator,) is to be close in stiff curl; met. (Churchill) stiff as such curls.

In Shak. (2 Pt. Hen. IV.) the v. Buckle is interpreted by the commentators, "to bend, to yield to pressure."

Ger. Buckel; D. Boeckel; Dan. Bukler; Fr. Boucle, from the Ger. Bug-en; A. S. Bug-an, flectere, to bend; "fibula enim flexu facillius est."

BUCKLER, v. s. To buckler, is to protect or cover with a buckler, (a kind of shield;) to guard, to defend.

Fr. Bouclier; It. Broc-chiero, -collaro; D. Bokeler. "All," says Sk. "I believe to be from the word buckle, fibula, because the shield (mediante fibula) is bound and fastened to the arm." Kilian derives Bokeler, bocken-leer, from Bock, Eng. Buck; and leer, a contraction of D. Leder, Eng. Leather, qd. corium sive pellis hirci, because shields are covered with the hides or skins of beasts, especially of bucks, (hedorum.) The L. Scutum, he observes, is αὐτοῦ τοῦ σκντῆρος, i. e. à corio, sive pelle. And the Gr. Πύλον, is app. equally to a hide or a shield.

BUD, v. s. -DING. A bud is that which is thrust or pushed forth, sc. from the stem or branch.

To bud, (met.) is to throw or thrust forth—the first emotions, the first risings, the first appearances.

To bud, in Horticulture, is to insert into one tree the bud of another.

D. Botter, trudere, trudere gemmas, gemmate. Fr. "Bouter, to thrust, put, force, push forward."
—Cot. Im-Out-

BUDGE v. s. -ER. To move, to stir, to trudge; to get out of the way.

Perhaps immediately from the Fr. "Bouger, to stir, stir, remove, part from."—Cot. Bouger, Sk. suggests, is from the It. Folgere, from the L. Folere, to roll, or turn. Men. directs us to the Ger. Wagen, be-wagen, to move; A. S. Weg-an, to wag.

BUDGE, ad. -NESS. Rigid, severe, harsh, austere.—"Slanyhurst.

Budge, Mr. Warton says, is fur; and Serenius, lambekin, pellis agnina; perhaps from Bock, which in Ger. is the name given to the ram, as well as to the goat, deer, &c. The word appears to have been app. to the dress or habit of those, from whom was expected, or who professed to preserve, great austerity of life; and thus to have acquired its application as above explained.

BUDGET, s. Cot. describes it to be—"A little coffer or trunk of wood, covered with leather, wherewith the women of old time carried their jewels, attires, and trinkets, at their saddle bows, when they rode into the country: now the gentlemen call so both any such trunk, and the box or till of their cabinets, wherein they keep their money: also a little male, pouch, or budget."

Fr. Bougette; It. Bolgia; D. Bog-ett, -et, -le. Voos. (de Vitlis, l. 1, c. 2.) thinks it is from the L. Bulga. It is more probably from the Ger. Bug-en, bog-en; A. S. Bug-an, flectere in concavum vel convexum; to bow, to bow out, to hollow out.

BUFF, v. s. To strike, to beat, to thump.

-ET, v. s. Sc. Baff, bef; Fr. Buffe, buffeter; It. -ETING. Boffetto; Sp. Bofetada. Sk. and Jun. think from Puff, to blow; in Fr. Bouffer. In Ger. Puffen is flare, flare cum sono, pulsare, flectere ut sonet; whence (Wach. continues) puff is the sound from a blow, whether of a stick or fist. In Sw. Puff is a blow. Men. and Le Duchat observe, that Soufflete and Buffete are equivalent. "Soufflete, often puffed or blown; also to cuff, box, or clap on the ear."—Cot. Re-

BUFF, s. ad. Buff is Beef, the animal,

-FALO. (qv.) it is also app. to a

-FLE. leather made of the skin of -FLE-HEAD. the animal, and to the colour of that leather.

Buffe-head,—having the head of a buffe or buffalo; a large, thick, ill-formed head.—

Sk.

BUI

To stand buff, is perhaps to stand sturdy as a buff or an ox.

Buff, buffle, or buffalo. Fr. Bufle; It. & Sp. Buffalo; D. & Ger. Buffel; L. Bubalus; Gr. Bovsalor. The Fr. Bufle (bœuf sauvage) is perhaps immediately from the Fr. Bœuf. See BEEF.

BUFFET, s. Cot. calls it—A high standing cupboard.

Stevens supposed Beef-eater to be corrupted from Buffetier, an attendant at the buffet. The French had an officer, whom they called Bugetier, whose business it was "to gather money for the judge's collations."

Fr. Buf-et; It. felle. In Low L. Bufetogium is a tax paid by tavern-keepers, pro vini bibitione. Fr. Bugette (Cot. says) was a small household wine; and Bufet may have been so called, because in it the wine or other beverage, the drinking-cups, &c. were kept:—afterwards used for other purposes.

BUFFOON, s. Fr. Bouffonier (Cot.) is -ARY. To buffoonize it, to play the fool, -ma. Jester, buffoon; basely to get a -LY living by jests or jesting.

A buffoon (Jun. says) is a shrewd and crafty court fool, a fool of pleasance, such as kings and great men love to entertain.

Fr. Bouffon; It. Buf-fone; Sp. -fon. Wach. thinks from the Fr. Bouffon; Ger. Puffen, to puff, to blow. Salmassius, because they (scurres) puffed out their cheeks in mimo to receive buffs or blows that they might sound the louder. Ferrarius, because they received the buffs or blows of others, (and for the amusement of others,) upon their cheeks puffed out. Du Cange, because they amused the spectators by buffing or cuffing each other.—See Wach. in voce Puffen, and Men. in voce Bouffon.

BUG, s. App. to—Some ugly object or -BEAR. spectre to terrify children, or any -ABO. persons easily terrified or frightened.

An ugly, noisome insect or vermin.

In Sw. Puck is diabolus; Isl. Puke, demon; Sa. Puck; Eng. Pucks or Pug. See PUCK.

BUG. Big, sometimes so written. "He is quite bug;" i.e. great, proud, swaggering,—is not an uncommon expression in the North.

BUGLE, or BULL, s. BUGLE-HORN. A crooked horn; also a kind of glass bead. See BULL.

A. S. Bul-gien, to bellow. Mr. Tyrw. says, a bugle-horn is a drinking-vessel made of horn, and that (he has been told,) in some part of the North a bull is sometimes called a bugle. The word is used in Bible, 1551, Dent. xiv. where our common Version has, "the fallow deer." Sk. thinks, that bugle-horn is Bucula cornu. Lye, that bugle is the Bomarea, and bugle-horn, the horn of the Bomarea. Jun. that bugle-horn may be derived from the Eng. To bow; A. S. Bigan or Bugan.

BUILD, s. A. S. Byldan, is to confirm, -EX. to establish, to make firm, and -ING. sure, and fast; to consolidate, to BUILT, s. strengthen; and is applicable to all other things, as well as to dwelling-places. Huts and hovels are merely things raised up. Buildings should be confirmed, established, strengthened structures.—(See

BUL

Tooke.) The D. & Ger. are used more widely; viz. to form or fashion, to express or represent the form or image; the shape.

To build is used to denote—To establish, to construct upon a basis or foundation; to base, to found; to construct (any edifice.) Over- Out- Re- Un-

A. S. Byldan; D. Beilden; Ger. Filden; Sw. Bilja.

BULB, s. -OUS. A bulb is—Any thing round; part. app. to a round root.

Gr. Βολβος; L. Bulbus; Fr. Bulbe. Lennep doubts whether the Gr. Βολβος should be deduced (through βολειν) from βαλλειν, jacere, (to throw forth,) or from δανειν, (with β prefixed,) whence, he remarks, ολλυμι, perdere, proprie volendo, precipitando, and also the L. Volvere. Ολω, he forms thus: Ολλω, ολω, ολω. The reason of the name, he is of opinion, must be sought, & rotunditate, whether acquired & volvendo, or & precipitando. See also Martinius and Voss.

BULGE, v. s. BILGE, v. Bilge is app. to—That which bulges or bellies out; to the whole expanse, or bulk of the ship's bottom. A ship is said to bilge, when, after striking upon a rock, &c. she opens her bulge or belly so as to admit the water. See BOWGE, and BULK.

"Bilge, now Bulge, the sides of a ship or any such like standing out, from Ger. Bulge, (bulgen,) or from Bauch, (venter.)"—Ruddiman. "Naturally allied to the Sw.-Go. Bulg-ia, to swell."—Jamieson.

BULK, s. That which bows, bulges, or -Y. bellies out; the greatest circumference, -INESS. ference, expanse, magnitude, size, mass or body. See BULGE.

Chaucer writes it Bowke. "Dark bulk," in Surrey, is "bigle derne," in G. Douglas. D. Bruch, venter, truncus corporis; Ger. Bauch; A. S. Buce, from A. S. Bug-an, Ger. Bug-en, to bow; arcuare in concavum vel convexum, to arch or bow, either concavely or convexly. Over-

BULL, s. A bull is app. cons. to that which -ARY. expresses something in opposition -ISH. to what is intended, wished, or felt; -ETIN. and so app. from the contrast of -IST. humble profession with despotic commands of Papal bulle.

Bulletin is a dim. of bull.

"I affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself."—Milton.—"Harmar.

Fr. Ger. & D. Bulle; Sp. Bolla; It. & Mid. L. Bulla; It has its name (says Wach.) from its seal, which was of a round shape, in many cognate languages called Boll, (in Eng. Ball), from Bol-en, to roll, to turn. Meursius gives a Bar. Gr. word, Βουλλα, sigillum, a seal. For the various kinds of bulle or seals, see Spei. in v. Bulla, Du Cange, and Men.

BULL, s. v. Bull, used as a pref. denotes BUL-CHIN. great size or strength, (characteristics of the animal;) large, ugly. Bull-beggar, T. H. (in Sk.) thinks is bold-beggar.

D. Bolle; Ger. Boll, from A. S. Bellan; Ger. Bellen, magistro, boare, to roar or bellow, as a bull, ox, or cow. See BUELE.

BULLET, s. Something rounded; a small boll or ball. See BULL. Fr. Boulet.

BUN

BULLION, s. Fr. Billon. Jun. calls it, ornamentum pectoris. Bullions on bridles, Bulle in frænia. Skelton speaks of them as ornaments to a book. Hall,—as ornaments of dress. And as app. to the metals, gold or silver, it seems merely to be a ball, mass, or lump—a piece uncoined.

BULLITION, s. See BOIL, and EBULLITION.—Bacon.

L. Bullire, ebullire; Fr. Bouillir, to boil.

BULLY, v. s. -ING. To arrogate, to threaten, to domineer, to bluster; sc. as the Pope in his bulls, or as those invested with authority by them.

Sk. has three conjectures, Burly, Bulky, and Bull-eyed. It is more probably from Bulla, the Pope's Bull, as above explained.

BUL-RUSH, s. A stronger and larger kind of rush.

BULTEL. See BOLT.

BUL-WARK, v. s. A bulwark is—A work carried round, as a defence or fortification; a defence, protection, or security.

Fr. Boulevert; It. Boicardo; Sp. Baluarte; Ger. & D. Bol-werke; Sw. -warks; Dan. -verk. Wach. thinks that it is from Bolen, jaculari, to throw. "Sk. thinks that it is from Boll, a globe, and work, (qd. a circular work.) Jun. observes, that in D. there is Bolwerk or Blockwerk, and also Block-hugs; as if orig. constructed of blocks, i. e. trunks of trees, &c.

BUM, s. (sc. of the body,) from Bottom, botm, bom.

BUM, v. s. App. to the noise of the -BLE, v. bittern; of a bee; also to the -BLING, v. noise which some things make BUMP, s. v. when fallen, or struck upon, or against, another; to the blow or stroke; to the consequence of such fall, blow, or stroke—sc. a swelling or lump.

"And as a bittore bumbleth in the mire."—Chaucer. "And as a bittour bumps within a reed." Dryden.—Sir T. More. Bum, dumble, or bump, (see BOOM and BOOM.) D. Bom-men, -bannen, resonare.

BUMBAILIFF. A Bound-bailiff.—See Blackstone, b. l. c. 9.

BUMBAST. See BOMBAST.

BUMBOAT, s. A small ship, or boat of one beam or log; a heavy kind of boat; lumpish. See BUSS.

D. Boom-schip, navigiolum ex uno ligno; Boom-kaen, scapha ex uno ligno.—Kilian.

BUMPKIN, s. BUMKINLY. App. to—A clumsy, ignorant clown.

"I know not," says Sk. "whether from the D. Boomken, arbuscula, the dim. of Boom, arbor, a beam. A foolish fellow, in Latin," he adds, "is called a stock or a log, (stipes et lignum.)" T. H. (in Sk.) thinks it is—quasi pumpkin; one who feeds on the vilest food, viz. pumpkins.

BUNCH, s. v. -Y. Perhaps the same word as Bench, any thing rising or protuberant. App. to—

BUR

A rising or swelling; to any things united or collected together, so as to resemble a heap or cluster—as a bunch of grapes, a bunch of keys.

Fr. Bigne; Gr. Bouvoe, aceruus, a heap.—Men. Serenius gives the Go. Bunka, a heap; Bunga ut, to project, to be prominent.

BUNDLE, s. v. A small part or portion, bound up.—Tooke.

A. S. Byndel, (i. e. Bondel, bond-dæl.) is compounded of two pts. bond and dæl, (deal.)

BUNG, -HOLE, s. A (round) substance,—to stop a hole in a barrel or other vessel.

The D. Bonde, homme; Fr. Bonde, bondon, may be from the A. S. Bind-an, to bind, to fasten, and thus to close or stop up. But the Eng. Bung may be from the Fr. Bigne, a bump or knob.

BUNGLE, v. s. To do or perform any -ER. thing imperfectly, awkwardly, clumsily, sily, unskilfully.

Of unknown etymology. In Fr. Bougonner.

BUNN, s. Fr. "Bignets, little round loaves or lumps made of fine meal, oyl or butter, and raisins."—Cot. See Fr. Bigne in voce BUNCH.

BUNNIANS, s. Fr. "Bigne, a bump or swelling." Cot. interprets the ad. Bigne, club, or crump-footed.

BUNT, s. v. Bunts are perhaps bent or -ER. broken bits. And if this be correct, -ING. a bunter may have been orig. app.—

To one who picks up bits of any thing about the streets or ways, and then to any low woman.

The bunt of a sail, (ni fallor,) says Sk. is the bent of a sail, that part of the sail which is pregnant with wind, which receives the wind in its full bosom.

Bunting,—the manufacture or material of which colours or coloured sails are made.

BUOY, v. s. The wood or block floating

-ANT. above the anchor, and fastened

-ANCY. to it by a cable. And thus, by

-ANTLY, consequence—

To buoy or boy is to float, to raise or rise up to the surface; to bear up, to support, to sustain, to elevate.—Coleridge.

D. Boeye; Fr. Bouée; Sp. Boya. T. H. (in Sk.) derives it from the Fr. Bois, lignum. Re-

BUR, s. "The down or hairy coat, where-with divers herbs, fruits, and flowers, are covered."—Cot.

That which sticks or adheres, as such down, rough or hairy coat does to any thing on which it falls.

Fr. Bourre, of unknown etymology.

BURBOLTS, i. e. Birdbolts. Mr. Gifford says,—Blunt, pointless arrows; for with such birds were brought down.

BURDEN, (or BURTHEN), v. s. That which -ING. is borne or carried; the weight -OUS. which is borne or carried, sustained or supported; the load -SOMENESS. (borne).

To burden, is to impose a weight or load; to load, to oppress.

BUR

Burden, in music, Fr. Bourdon; It. Bordon; also a club or staff (borne).

A. S. Byrdon, or Eyrthen, from the A. S. Byrgan, to bear, to carry; Ger. Burde; Dan. Byrde; Sw. Barda. Dis-Over-

BUREAU, s. Fr. "A thick and a coarse cloth, of a brown russet, or dark mingled colour; also the table that's within a court of audit, or of audience (belike, because 'tis usually) covered with a carpet of that cloth; also the court itself."—Cot. Also the table that folds up, at the top of a chest of drawers.

BURG, s. A burg meant formerly a fortified town.

-ESS. Som. calls it a city, a fort, a

BURGH. fortresse, a tower, a castle; and

-HER. Burg-dote—

-HOLDER. A repairing, renewing, amend-

-NOTE. ing of cities, castles, forts, and

-OMASTER. the like. See BOROUGH, and

BURGRAVE. BORSHOLDER.

Go. Bairgan; A. S. Beorgan, borgan, byrgan, to defend, to keep safe, to fortify, to strengthen; D. & Ger. Burg; Sw. & Dan. Borg; A. S. Burg, burga, byrige. Urbs, civitas, arx, castrum. Com-

BURGENET, s. A defence or protection, sc. for the head; a helmet.

Fr. Bourguinette, perhaps from the A. S. Byrgan, to protect, to defend.

BURGLAR, s. Formed from Burgi la-

-Y. tracinism; the robbing or plundering

-ER. of a house:—One who (breaks into)

-IOUS. robs or plunders a house.

BURL, v. -ER. To clear away or take off the burrs, the down or hairy coat, the shreds, knots, threads, &c.

In Flitay (D. xiv.) Mox desquamatur Cimolia—is rendered by Holland. "they fall anone to urling it with Cimolia." Sk. thinks it is from Fr. Bourre. See BUR.

BURLESQUE, v. s. ad. Cot. says, "Burlesque,—jeasting, or in jest, not serious; also mocking, flouting." "Burlesque is of two kinds; the first represents mean persons in the accoutrements of heroes; the other describes great persons, acting and speaking like the basest among the people."—Spectator.

A word recently introduced into our country.—St. Fr. Burlesque; It. -co; from Fr. Burler; It. -are; Low L. Bardara, to jest or jeer. See BURAN.

BURLETTA. From It. Burlare. A comic opera. See BURLESQUE.

BURLY, s. ad. -INESS. App. to—Any thing large, distended, unwieldy, clumsy, boisterous.

A burly man,—a large, lusty man, qd. a bear-like man; agricolæ similia.

BURN, v. s. To be, or cause to be, on -ER. fire, destroyed by fire; heated, -ING. kindled.

(Met.) To be inflamed, with passion or desire; i. e. to feel the passion of anger, love, hate, &c. to a heating or burning excess.

BUR

Go. Brianan; A. S. Bernan, byrgan; D. Beren, burnen; Ger. Brennen; Sw. Branne; Dan. Brand-er. See TO BURN. In-Un-

BURN, v. To brighten or give bright--ISH, v. s. ness, to polish: to rub off the -ISHER. rust, to polish up for use: to be or become bright, splendid, conspicuous; to shine forth.—Chaucer. Gower.

Fr. Brunir, to burnish, to furnish, to polish, and also to make brown.—Cot. It. Brun-ire; Sp. -ir; D. Bruyneren, infuscare, polire metalli. The Fr. Brunir, Jun. says, is to make brown, (i. e. to give a burned colour. See BROWN and BRONZE.) Whence To burn, (as Chaucer and Gower write,) or to burnish metal, is to rub it till it has fuscum nitorem, till it is brown and bright. Sk. says, that Brunir, to polish (sc. armour) is, he believes, from the v. To burn, because arms carefully polished shine so intensely as to appear to burn.

BURROW, v. s. A defended or protected place, (for rabbits, &c.; to which warren is synonymous.)

To burrow,—to form burrows or places of protection or security, (sc. under ground.)

A. S. Beorgan, byrgan, to defend, to protect, to strengthen. See BURGH, BAX, BURT. to love

BURSE, s. A hide or skin; a pouch or

-AR. bag; also—

-ARY. A place for money or mercantile

-ARSHIP. transactions.

Bursar, i. e. Purser, (qv.)

D. Beurs; Ger. Borse; Dan. Børse; Fr. Bourse; It. Borsa; Sp. Bolsa; L. Bursa; from the Gr. Bupara, corium, (Voss. de Vit. lib. ii. c. 2.) i. e. a hide or skin:—the material of which that now called a purse or bursa, was made. Per synecdochen (Wach. observat.) matris pro forma. See also Men. in v. Bourse. Holland renders vesica, a bursa or skin. De- Dis-

BURST, v. s. or BRUST. Seems to be peculiarly app.—when the thing broken incloses or surrounds something else; as To burst a bladder; the bottle burst. It is also used without any such restriction.

To break open or apart, to rush, to gush forth. Met. To burst with envy; the passions burst forth.

The disease peculiarly called Rupture, Boyle denominates—"burstness or rupture," (Works, vol. vi. p. 376.

A. S. Burstan, barstan, beorstan, rumpere; D. Borsten, bersten; Ger. Breiten, bersten; Sw. Brist-a; Dan. -er, to break open or asunder, rumpere, frangere.

BURTHEN. See BURDEN. Un-

BURY, v. To put into a place of pro-

-IAL. tection, safety, or defence. Hence

-Y-ER. also—to hide, to secrete, to con-

-ING. ceal; to put or keep in secrecy, or concealment.

To bury the dead,—to place or deposit in a place of security; to inter; to place in a grave, in a sepulchre.

Burial,—a defended or fortified place.—Formerly app. to the place, now to the act, of burying.

D. Berg-hen; Ger. -en; A. S. Byrgan, sepelire. Burial, A. S. Byrgel, is the dim. of Byrig or Burgh, (qv.)—See TOOKE. Re-

BUS

BUSH, s. Formerly app. to—A whole
-ED. wood, (aylva, nemus,) but now to a
-MENT. low tree or shrub with thick, small
-Y. bows or shoots—to any thing similar, as a bushy wig.

Bushment was used anciently as ambush and ambushment are now. See AMBUSH, and also BUSK.

Fr. Bois; It. Bosco; Sp. que; Ger. Busch; D. Bosch; Dan. & Sw. Buske, a wood. From Bookeiv, to feed, because there cattle feed; as nemus, from vepsiv.—Wach. and Jun. Sk. prefers to derive it from L. Arbustula. Am-Em-

BUSHEL, s. A measure of quantity, equal to eight gallons.

Fr. Botisau; Mid. L. Bussellus. Menage derives (nescio quom bene, says Sk.) from Bosse, tuber. See BOSS.

BUSK. Now written Bush. See BOOSKE.

BUSK, v. s. 1. To prepare, to make ready; 2. To tend, to direct one's course.

Busk, s. "Fr. Busque or Buste. The long, small (or sharp pointed), and hard quilted belly of a doublet." Also a piece of steel or other material, to keep the dress of the body firm to the shape.

Dr. Jamieson thinks from Ger. Butzen, bussen; D. Butzen; Sw. Buta, to adorn, decorate; and he observes that in Ger. Buts frau, is a well dressed woman; and that hence it means—as above.

BUSKET, s. A dim. of Busk. Little bushes.

BUSKIN, s. -ED. "The buskin was a kind of high shoe worn upon the stage by the actors of tragedy, in order to give them a more heroic elevation of stature."—Melmoth. Pliny.

D. Brosken, braken; Fr. Botine, brodequin; It. Borsacchino; Sp. aguel, botin. Kilian informs us that Le Duchat, in his notes on Rabelais, derives it from Gr. Bupra, a hide or skin. (See BUSSE.) Sk. and Men. may be referred to, but to little advantage. The Fr. Botine, Sp. Botin, is a small boot; a summer boot, Cot. calls it.

BUSKLE.* See BUSTLE.—*Joy. Sir T. More.

BUSS, v. s. To kiss; to touch with the lips.

It. Basciare; Fr. Baiser; Sp. Besar; D. Bessen; L. Baslare, of unknown etymology. Written by Chaucer and others, Bass.

BUSS, s. Mid. L. Bussa; D. Buise, a larger sort of ship after the likeness of a box, (which Busse also signifies) with wide hull and broad prow.—Spel. The name is still common in the north.

BUST, s. -O. The whole bulk or body of a man, from his face to his middle.—Cot.

Fr. Buste.

BUSTLE, v. s. To be active, to make -ER. haste, to move or stir about in a -ING. hurry, tumult, or confusion.

The old word To Buskie, may be from Busk, in the second usage given by Dr. Jamieson, (see BUSK;) and Bustle, a different writing of it. Sk. thinks that Bustle or Brustle is from the A. S. Brastian, creptare, to rustle,—(be-rustle.)

BUT

BUSY, v. ad. To be or cause to be busy—
-I-LESS. implies (by usage) to be or cause
-LY. to be fully occupied or employed;
-NESS. to be actively engaged; to be employed or engaged beyond due measure; to be too actively meddling.

D. Besigh; Fr. -ogne, -ogner; It. Bisognare, -are; A. S. Bygian, occupare, to occupy or employ.—Som. Em-Un-

BUT, co. pr. But denotes—Be out, without, put, or take out, except, unless.

But or But, i. e. be-out, distinguished from but, to boot, though the different manner of writing the two words is not preserved in old writers. "A. S. Butan, butan are used precisely as Sax. But, without. 'One of them shall not fall on the ground, (butan covren ader,) without your Father," (Matt. x. 29.) 'Have ye not read how the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, (and synt butan leahtra,) and are without blame?' (Matt. xii. 5.) Even where rendered besides, it has properly the same meaning. 'They that had eaten were about five thousand men, (butan wifum and cildum,) besides women and children' (Matt. xiv. 21), i. e. women and children being excepted, left out, or not included in the numeration."—Jamieson in v. Bot.

But, says Mr. Tooke, is the imperative Be-outan, of the A. S. Beon-utan, to be out. The meaning of this but, and of without, is exactly the same. Tooke observes, that not any one word in any language will answer to our Eng. But; because a similar corruption in the same instance has not happened in any other language.

Mr. Steevens acknowledges the existence of the two words but and bot. But, he observes, is the A. S. Butan—butan leas, absque falso, without a lie. In ancient writings, he adds, this pr. is comm. distinguished from the adversative co. But; the latter being usually spelt Bot.

Mr. Tyrw. observes, that this pr. occurs frequently in G. Douglas, but that he had not himself noticed it in Chaucer. He had overlooked it. In Chaucer, "I nam but a compilator;" "That I may have nat, but my meate."—Mr. Tooke remarks, that we should now say, "I am but a compilator;" "That I may have but my," &c.; and this omission of the negation is, in his opinion, one of the most blameable and corrupt abbreviations of construction in our language.

BUT, co. But denotes—Add, superadd, subjoin: put, place, give, instead of, in lieu of.

But, (boot), is the imperative bot, of the A. S. Botan, to boot, i. e. to superadd, to supply, to substitute, to atone for, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something else.—See TOOKE. Dr. Jamieson denies that there is any such word as Bot-an. The v. he says, is Bei-an. But Boetan, or Botan exists with the usual pref. ge, sc. Ge-botan. (See TO BOOR.) In Luke viii. 9 and 14, Wiclif uses but; the Mod. Ver., and. In the Ver. of the Psalms in the Book of Common Prayer, (Ps. cxv. 5, 6, 7), and is the co. used; in the Bible Ver. but. But and and are here equivalent, and but denotes—as above.

BUT, v. -ING. To but is—to be on, to touch on, the outward extremity; to be or touch upon the confines or borders; to border upon. See BUTT, (as a ram.)

To abut, (qv.) Mr. Tooke thinks is from the "A. S. Bota, the first outward extremity of any thing." The pr. Utan, out, with the pref. Be, appears to lead more obviously to this "outward extremity."

BUT, or BUTT, s. v. (as a ram.) App. to—The action of the ram in thrusting or pushing forward; of the warlike engine, so called;—to any thing hard, knobby, or obtuse, like the head of a ram; thus, the but-end, a butt or block. Also to—

Any thing projected; brought or placed forward, sc. as a mark; an object to aim at. Met. A butt for wit.

Butt's length,—the distance or shot between the butts: from the butt.

Butt, Spel. says, is the end of a thing, and Ab-butler is to thrust forth the end. (See ABUT and BUT, to shoot.) Cot., that the Fr. "Bout is the end, head, point, tip, or top, the extreme or utmost part (in length) of any thing; bouter, to thrust, put, force, push forward," sc. the end or head.

BUTCHER, v. s. To butcher, as now app.

-ING. is—

-LY. To slay or slaughter; to kill, to put

-Y. to death, to murder.

Fr. Boucher, from the L. Bucca, whence also Bouch-er and -erie; butchers, those who prepare things which serve ad buccam alendam. Of this opinion are Casen. and others. See in Men. who himself seems to prefer Bucca, a morsel; but Bucca is itself from Bucca.

BUTLER, s. Gen.—One who has the -AGE. care or management of wines and

-ERS. other liquors.

-SHIP. Fr. Bottellier, a butler, a bottle-man, a

-Y. yeoman of the bottles, a bottlemaker;

Sp. Bottiller, a bottler, (of wines or other liquors.)

BUTT, s. A vessel of large capacity; varying as to the exact number of gallons.

A. S. Butta, butta; D. Botte, butte; Ger. Bottle;

Fr. & It. Botte. In Bar. L. & Gr. Butta and

Bucca, was vinarium.—Du Cange. Wach. derives from the Ger. Beit-en, capere, to take or hold.

See BOTTLE.

BUTTER, v. s. A coagulated substance

-Y, ad. s. procured from the milk of kine.

-CUP. To butter, is to cover, rub or

-FLY. spread over—this substance.

Butter-cup,—a flower, so called, because of the colour of butter, and shape of a cup.

-SK.

Butter-fly; (A. S. Butter-flega; Ger.

-flege; D. -oliege.) Jun. thinks is so called from its buttery softness.

Buttery, Sk. thinks, may be the place where butter is kept: or gen. a repository or store-room, from the Fr. Boutier, to put.

It seems to have been a store-room for butter, bread, and some few other articles, and to have been distinguished from pantry, larder, &c.

Fr. Boutier; It. Butirro, burro; L. Bulgrum.

Flay (xviii. 8), says that Bulgrum took its name from the Gr. Boutropos, being compounded of Bout, but, and trapos, aliquid coagulatum.

BUTTOCK, s. Sk. calls it,—A remarkable projection of the muscles, subserving to an extension of the thigh.

T. H. (in Sk.) derives from Bout, (see To BUT),

and A. S. Hob; in Eng. Hough or Hock.

BUTTON, v. s. App. to—The bud of a plant; that which is thrust forth, sc. from the stem or shoot; to any thing placed upon something else, and projecting or protruding from it—as a coat button, a door button, by which the door or coat is fastened or closed.

Fr. Bouton; It. Bottoni, from Fr. Boutier; It.

Buttare, to drive forth, to thrust forth, to protrude.

See To BUTT. Un-

BUTTRESS, v. s. A buttress, says Lye, is nothing else than that which is erected on the outside of any thing, for the purpose of supporting it. See To BUTT.

BUXOM, ad. Easily bended or bowed, obe-

-LY. dient, compliant, yielding;—easily

-NESS. moved; pliant, flexible, agile, brisk, lively, jolly.

A. S. Bog-som, boc-som, buh-som; in Old Eng.

Bough-some, i. e. easily bended or bowed to one's will; obedient. See BOSOM. Un-

BUY, v. To bigg or buy, is gen. used

-ER. where money or security for money

-ING. is given in exchange for something else; and thus distinguished from bartering or exchanging goods for goods, wares for wares.

It is opposed also to the v. To sell; as to procure, acquire, or obtain by payment or purchase.

Wiclif uses the genuine Eng. compounds

agenbier and agenbying, for redeemer and redemption.

Go. Buggan; A. S. Bycgan. Over-

BUZZ, v. s. To make a humming con-

-ER. fused noise; to utter a low, continued,

-ING. uninterrupted noise in the same elevation of sound: a murmuring whisper.

Sk. thinks, a sono scutum. Jun. that it is from the Ger. Biesen, busea, fremere, stridere.

BUZZARD, s. ad. The name of—A common species of hawk.

Lye thinks it is from the v. To buzz; from the buzzing noise it utters.

BY, pr. By days and by nights,—i. e. being, biding, during days and nights.

By his first wife,—his first wife being (the bearer, the mother of her five sons.)

Death was by man,—man being the cause of death.

To slepe by the morwe or morning,— morning being, being come.

We said our sentences by rowe,—row

being (sc.) the order of our sitting and saying.

By Mary of heaven,—Mary of heaven

being (witness.)

By aught that I can see,—aught, any thing, that I can see, being (to cause me to think otherwise.)

I am well comforted by that ye are willing to go,—i. e. ye are willing to go—that being

(the case) I am well comforted.

In the expression, to pass by,—by seems superfluous, except for the sake of emphasis.

Mark vi. 48, the Com. Ver. reads,—“He would have passed by them:” Wiclif,—“He wolde passe hem:”—By denotes more emphatically the especial persons being, or who being, and thus were passed.

This pr. supplies a few compounds, as

by-past, by-gone, by-stander; i. e. past by, gone by, a stander by.

In A. S. Be, written also Bi, big; Ar. Pers. & Gr. Bi; Ger. Bei; Dan. By; prepositio late dominans (says Wach.); so much so, that according to him it is equivalent to almost every pr. in the L. language. Sk. is satisfied with prope, juxta. See A. A., and also Bz.

"By (in the A. S. written Bi, be, big) is the imperative Byth, of the A. S. e. Be-on, to be. And our ancestors wrote it indifferently either be or by. 'Damville be right ought to have the leading of the army; but by cause they be cousin-germans to the admirall thei be mistrusted,' (1568. See Lodge's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 9.) This pr. is frequently, but not always, used with an abbreviation of construction; subauditur instrument, cause, agent, &c.; whence the meaning of the omitted word has been improperly attributed to by. With (when it is the imperative of Wyrthan) is used indifferently for by (when it is the imperative of beon), and with the same subauditur and imputed meaning. As 'he was slain by a sword; or he was slain with a sword.' By was used (and not improperly, nor with a different meaning) where we now employ other *pr.*s., such as for, in, during, through."—See Tooker. Be-on and by-an differ little in their pronunciation, and as little in their usage. See Bv, infra.

BY, pref. In composition, denoting—peculiar, private.

A bye-law is the law which each bye or villa may have established for itself,—for its own peculiar and especial regulation, independent of the general laws of the state or whole community. And thus by is (gen.)—

Peculiar and especial; private, adapted or intended for private and partial ends or purposes; within our especial privacy, knowledge, or possession; accessory or collateral, not in the direct and main way. See BY THE BYE, and MAIN.

Our language abounds with words, to which Bye is written pref.

Spel. in his Icenia, or Topographical Description of Norfolk, supposes a certain district to have been colonized by the Danes; and one reason which he assigns is, that within the small compass of it, there are thirteen villages whose names end in By, a Dan. word signifying villa, seu habitatio. Hence he adds our By-law, in Dan. By-lage, from by, villa, and lage, lex; in A. S. Byan, to inhabit, to dwell.

BY AND BY, av. No attempt has yet been made to account for this phrase.

In R. Brunne,—“The chartre was read ilk point bi and bi,” the expression seems to be elliptical;—each point by (sub. point) and by (sub. point) by point and by point; each point by itself. “William had taken the homage of barons bi and bi,” of barons, bi baron, and bi baron; each baron by himself, distinctly, separately. So again, “He assayed tham bi and bi, and retrieth them ilk one.” He, (P. Edward, son of Henry III. when planning his escape from Simon de Montfort,) he assayed them (the horses) by one and by one; and tried each one again,—till they stood stone still, and were unable to pursue him, when he had mounted the last and fleetest of them. The same manner of explanation will justify Mr. Tyrwhitt's interpretation “separately, distinctly,” not only in the line “these were his words by and by,” (Chaucer, R. R. 4581,) but also in the two passages from the Canterbury Tales, to which he refers—

“Two yonge knyghtes liggyn by and by.”

“His doughter had a bed all by hireself, Right in the same chambre by and by.”

By and by, then may be, by one and by one; being one,—separately or successively after the other; distinctly, apart, both in space and time.

In—“Our houses shall by and by be thrown down upon our heads,” (Stow),—we approach to our modern usage, for there it is clearly equivalent to the old word anon; in one (sub. instant, moment, minute,) that is immediately, instantly.

BY THE BYE. In this expression the latter bye seems to be the same bye as in by-law, &c. and of course to admit a similar explanation. In Lord Bacon,—“there is upon the by to be noted,” i. e. upon the way, in passing, indirectly; this being a collateral and not the direct or main object of pursuit. In B. Jonson,—“those who have saluted poetry on the by,”—on their way, in passing; poetry being the collateral and not the direct or main object of their pursuit.

By the bye, then, is—by the way, in passing, such being a collateral and not main object. Raleigh expressly opposes bye to main. See MAIN.

BYE, v. To buy or pay for, sc. dearly, cruelly, sorely. See ASIE.

BYSS, s. -INE. “The line called byssus [is] the fine lawne or tiffanie.”—Holland. Plinie.

Gr. Bysos; L. Byssus. Of eastern origin.

C.

C and G are cognate letters. C, (says B. Jonson) is a letter which our forefathers might very well have spared in our tongue. It has no sound peculiarly its own. It has the hard sound, (or simple sound K,) when followed by a, o, u; or a consonant; as cap, cat, cut, cry: it has the soft, (or simple sound of S,) before e, i, y; as cess, cit, cynic, hence: also before h, final; as pinch, and sometimes at the beginning, as chaise: it is sometimes silent (before e, i,) as scent, sciences; also indict, victuals. In (Gr.) septic, it is hard.

C has the sound of sh, before e or i, followed by another vowel (e, or i, being silent), as conscience, ocean. It has the compound power of ts; as in rich, church, chance.

When c is the Gr. X, it is usually sounded hard, as chaos. In arch, before a vowel, or as a final syllable, it is hard; as architect, monarch: before a consonant, soft; as arch-bishop. In choir, the cho has the sound of cu, or qu.

It seems useless to affix k to the terms. ac, or ic, from the Gr. uos, and the practice is not universal; it is wholly omitted throughout this Dictionary: from words of Eng. origin, as stick, hillock, it is never withheld.

Wach. seems to have established, that the letters B, and M, signs of organic sounds, the earliest that are heard from children, are literal roots; and C, (pronounced K,) and its cognate G, (pronounced Ga,) present the same power in the Go. Auc-an, aug-ere, to ete, (ag-ere, ac-ere), and in Hig-an, G-an, Gr. ικ-ειν, ικ-ειν, to go; ge-an, to give. Hence also the prefix ge, and the suffix ig, both softened into the Eng. y; and also the Gr. ic-es. See EKE, GE, IG, IC. And hence a great variety of words, which will be found in their proper places, and are referred to this original.

C, as G also does, unites readily with a succeeding liquid, l, or r. See GZ.

CAB, s. A Hebrew measure, about three pints.

CABAL, s. v. "A hidden science of divine mysteries," says Cot. "which the Rabbies affirm was revealed, and delivered together with the law unto Moses, and from him derived, by successive relation, unto posterity: (yet is it, in truth, no better than a vain rabble of their own traditions,) or, a crew of rogues."

It appears to be app.—To a crew of rogues, because they are persons united or associated for dark and mysterious purposes; with secret and concealed designs: plotters, complotters.

From the Heb. lt. & Sp. Cabal-a; Fr. -a.

CABALLINE, ad. Of or pertaining to a horse. Beaumont,—"the caballine spring,"—alludes to the fable of Pegasus.

Gr. Καβαλλινος, a name app. to the meander sort of horses. (See CAVALCADE.) L. Caballus; It. Cavallino; Fr. Cabalin.

CABBAGE, s. v. The name was probably given to particular kinds of cole, to distinguish them from others that do not cabbage or head.

"D. Kabys kool, brassica capitata; Ger. Kabls kraut; Gal. Chous cabus; It. Cabuzzo."—Kilton. Jun. suggests, Gr. Κολων, cibus; Sk. and Lye, L. Caput, and Tooke, Gr. Καβη, food. Sk. and Lye appear to be right. Fr. Caboche, the head, is also Cabbage; It. Capuccio.

CABIN, s. v. Gower writes Caban. A cabin is any small chamber or apartment, on shipboard or elsewhere; any small place of dwelling, as a cot or tent.

D. Kaban; Fr. Caban-a; Sp. -na; It. & Mid. L. Capanna, tugurium. All, says Sk., from L. Cavanna, cavea, a hole or cavern. Salmastius and Men. contend for Gr. Karavn, a stable, præseppe; in the same application, Jun. observes, as in Horace, (Ep. xv. l. i. v. 28.)

"Scurra vagus, nec qui certum præseppe teneret."

But præseppe here seems app. to the manger; merely (i. e.) to be used satyrice pro mensa.

CABINET, s. v. Cabinet, the dim. of cabin, and app. to—

A casket, for depositing jewels, coins, &c. as well as to a small cabin, closet, cot, room, or apartment.

The persons who meet in a cabinet or chamber for council, are called The cabinet.

**Hewyt*. Fr. Cabin-et; It. -etto.

CABLE, s. -ED, ad. The large rope, to which the ship's anchor is affixed, is called the cable.

Fr. Ca-ble; D. -bel; Gr. Καμηλος or Καμιλος. Voss. observes, that if Καμηλος, a camel, is used pro rudente, (for a cable), it is either because a cable recalls to mind (referat) that huge and distorted animal; or because cables were formerly wrought of camel's hair;—but there is nothing satisfactory to be found upon the etymology of this word. CACHEXY, s. An ill habit—of body.

Fr. Ca-chexie; It. -chia; L. Cachexia; Gr. Καχεξία, (κακος, ill, and εξ, habit.)

CKACKLE, s. v. -ING. The noise of a hen after laying her egg. See GAGGLE.

D. Kackelen; Gr. Κακκαλεν—Hesychius.

CACODEMON, s. -IAL.* An evil or mischievous demon or spirit.—**Skelton*. Gr. Κακος, evil, and δαίμων, a demon.

CACO-ETHES, s. A bad habit or custom.

Fr. Cacoethe; L. Cacoethes; Gr. Kakontheia, (kakos, ill, and theos, habit.)

CACO-PHONY, s. An ill, harsh, or unpleasant sound, (in speech, in the voice.)

Gr. Kakophonia, (kakos, ill, and φωνη, voice, sound;) Sp. Caco-phonia; It. fonia; Fr. phonie.

CADAVER, s. -OUS, ad. A fallen body; a lifeless, inanimate carcass. See LICH.

**Boyle*.

L. Cadaver, from cadere, to fall; quia absque animâ corpus sese fulcire nequit.—Voss. And so the Gr. πρῶτα, from πρωτεω, to fall, (immediately from the unused πρωειν.)

CADE, s. A hollow, sc. vessel; a cask or barrel. L. Cadus; Gr. Kaōes.CADE LAMB, s. A pet lamb.

Fr. Cadel.—Sk.

CADENT,* ad. Fr. Cadence, a just falling, -ENCE, s. v. round going of words, a pro-ENCT. portionable time, or even measure, in any action or sound.—Cot.

Cadence is app. by Milton to the going down, sinking or declining of the sun: by Hammond, to the manner in which Paul falls upon certain expressions,—into a certain train of thought.—**Shak*.

L. Cadere, to fall; from Kato, that is, deorsum (Voss.); Fr. Cadem-ee; It. -aa; Sp. -ota. De-Re. See CASS.

CADET, s. A younger brother among gentlemen.—Cot.

From Capitulum, that is, petit chef. Anciently written Capdet.—Mén. and Du Cange. Du Cange (in voce Cadulus) observes, that les chefs de maison were called Copmas; that is, capita domus, heads of the house.

CADGE, v. -ER, s. To carry, to bear; to go about as carrier.

In Sc. Cache, caich, cadge, to toss, to drive, to shog. The more modern orthography is cadge. Yorkshire, Id. To carry. Hearne explains catches, causih, in R. Brunne, but it seems to signify drives. Hence Eng. Cadger, a huckster. The origin certainly is Teut. Kata-en, kele-en, course, curritare, discurrere, to run, or cause to run about; Belg. Een bal kaate-en, to toss a ball.—Jamieson in voce Cache.

CADOWE, s. Holland calls the young of the crow by this name;—Jun. the daw, and thinks the word compounded of ca and daw or dow.

A. S. Ceo, cornix; D. Ka, kae, hewwoe.

CADUKE, ad. -DUCITY. Fr. "Caduque, frail; Caduque, feeble, ruinous, ready to fall, unable to support itself.—Caducité, frailty, weakness, aged feebleness."—Cot.

Gibbon, and his castigator Whitaker, have preserved caducity.

L. Caducus, from Cadere, to fall.

CÆSURE, s. App. to—A section, or division—of a verse; of a word;—to the rest or pause upon the close of such section. Om. -URÆD. Browe.

L. Cæsura, from cæs-um, pass p. of cadere, to cut. Circum-Con-De-Ex-In-Inter-Oc-Pre-: with del-clide, fratri-clide, &c.

CAGE, v. s. A place shut in and fastened—in which birds are confined. Also a place in which malefactors are confined.

Fr. Cage; It. Gabbia; which the older etymologists, Mén. Jun. and Sk., derive from the L. Cava; but all these, together with the ancient L. Cawere, (apud veteres—cobihere, retinere, comperere; Martin.) Tooke derives from the A. S. Caggian, obscurare, to block up; and explains cage—as above. En-In-Un-

CAJOLE, v. s. -ERY. To cajole, as now used, implies an intention to delude, to overreach, to entrap by flattery, soothing, coaxing.

Fr. Cacoller, cageoller, to court a lady in jest; to prattle or jangle. (like a jay in a cage;) to babble or prate much to little purpose.—Cot; who also says that Cageoleur is one that (like a jay in a cage) jangles much, to no purpose. He evidently considers cage to be the root of cageoler, and in this he is supported by Mén.

CAITIFF, or -IVE, s. ad. "Chétif, caitive, -IVETTY. wretched, miserable, unfortunate. -IFFNESS.* nate, forlorn. Also knavish, curst, shrewd, naughty, bad, lewd."—Cot.

"He ledd caitiffie, caityf."—Wiclif.

**Chaucer. Bp. Taylor*.

Fr. Chétif; It. & Sp. Cattivo; D. Kattif. Chétif anciently signified Capitif.—Mén. From the L. Captivus. Jun. observes that this word, in its first acception, denoted, captivus, unhappy, wretched; and afterwards, bad, dishonest. Cot. fully details the various applications.

CAKE, v. s. To cake is to form into a solid mass; to clot together, to adhere closely in lumpy pieces.

A cake, (met.) in vulgar speech, is one who has the heaviness, the lumpishness of a cake.

Dan. Kage; D. Koecke; Ger. Kuch, (Jun.) from Cochen, coquere; and Cochen, (Wach.) from L. Cogere; itself of unsettled etymology. See in Voss.

CALAMANCO, s. A kind of stuff (orig. of camel's hair) formed of various materials; silk, wool, goat's hair, &c.

In the Mid. L. are found Calamancum, calamancus, calamancum; capitis integumentum, et pilis genus ex camelorum pilis confectum; a covering for the head, or kind of cap formed of camel's hair.

CALAMISTRATE,* v. -ION.* To trim the hair round a reed, rod, or similar material, and thus, to curl it.—**Burton*.

Fr. Calamistrer; to frizzle, curl, or crisp the hair.—Cot. Vibrato callido ferro, (Æn. xli. 108.) vibrato is explained by Servius, crispato calamistro. And calamistrer is a something, either made of, or in shape resembling a reed, (calamus.) with which the hair was curled, and thence derived its name. See Voss, Martinius, and Gessner.

CALAMITY, s. -Tous, ad. A calamity, primarily, is that which destroys the standing corn; then—any injury, hurt, mischief, damage, loss, misfortune.

"The word calamitas was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalks."—Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 669.

Fr. Calamité; It. -ità; L. Calamitas, proprie calamorum imminutio. Donatus (on Terence, Eun. l. i. 34.) observes, Proprie calamitatem ratioci grandinem dicunt, quod comminuat calamus, (hoc est cunivum ac segetem.) because it destroys the calamus or stalk.

CALASH, s. A carriage similar to the present headed chaise.

Fr. Calèche. Carrus, carri, carriscus, carisca, careeca, caleuca, calèche. Thus Mén.

CALCARIOUS, ad. CALCULOUS. Stony, stinky; resembling the lime stone.

L. Calc. calcis, lime; lapis coctus, from καλῆς, which denotes a stone or the fragments of stones, from which a cement or mortar is made.—Voss. And Schedius observes, that from Καλ-ειν, frangere, κατακα, is καλαος, which might give the contracted καλῆς, and thence καλῆς.

CALCINE, v. To reduce to a calx, to -ATE, v. burn to a stone, to dust, to powder. -ATION. See CALCARIOUS.

CALCOGRAPHY, or CHALCOGRAPHY, s. Graving or writing on brass.

From καλκος, brass, and γραφειν, to grave.

CALCULE, v. s. Gen.—To count, to -ATE, s. reckon, to compute.

-ATION. Tyndall, and other old writers, use To calk, for To calculate.

-OR. Fr. Calcul-er; It. -ars; Sp. -ar; L. Calculus, from Calx, calcis, a stone. (See CALCARIOUS.) Calculi were small stones used in counting, reckoning, and computing. In-Mis-

CALDRON, s. A vessel constructed to endure heat; and thus—to heat the contents.

Fr. Chaudron, from the L. Caldarium, from Caldeus, the contraction of Calidus, hot. Men. remarks, that from the Gr. θερμος, heat, is derived θερμαννεν, caldarium.

CALE. See COL.

CALEFY, v. To heat, to be, become, or -EFACTION. cause to be, hot.

-IDITY. **Brown*. †Evelyn.

-DUCT. †L. Calefacti, to be or become hot. Caleve, Voss. deduces from the Gr. καλεος, for καλεος, burning. Ex-In-calescent.

CALENDER, s. v. To roll upon or under a cylinder; and, cons.—to smoothen, to polish, to flatten the rough or rising surface.

Fr. Calendrier; Mid. L. Celendra. The origin of this word is Καλινδρος, a cylinder; because the chief power of the calendra is placed in a cylinder. —See De Camps. En-

CALENDS, s. Calendar is now app. to—-ENDAR, v. s. A book, in which are -ENDOGRAFHEE stated the days, weeks, and months, with the feasts or festivals of the church, which occur during the year.

It is also used, gen. as a guide,—to the particular time, place, or manner, of doing any thing; as a register.

To calendar, is used by Whitlock; i. e. to enter into, to record or register in, a calendar. Om. -ARY. Brown.

The first days of the month were denominated Kalends, because on those days, the nones of the month, whether they should be five or seven, (Antander), are called or proclaimed.—Far. Interest on money was usually paid on the Calends, and the book in which was kept an account of the sums due, was called Calendarium. En-Inter-calary.

CALENTURE, s. High, feverish, heat. L. Cal-ere; Sp. -entar, to heat; Calentura, heat, a fever.

CALF, s. See CALVE.

CALIBER, -VER, -BRE, s. Caliber, s. -BRE, v. app. to—The piece or gun itself; to the bore or hole of any thing; to the concave diameter, the concave size or dimensions of it; to the size or dimensions of the convex body; the ball or bullet, &c. (Met.)—

To the quality, state, or degree; i. e. the size or dimensions—of moral character, worth, or estimation.

To calibre or calibrate,—Fr. Calibrer; to form the calibre, the equal concave or convex size or dimensions.

Fr. Qualibre, Calibre; Sp. Calibre. Sk. seems to approve the etymology of Mins. who derives Caliber from the L. Equilibrium, i. e. he observes, "equal weight, a standing weight, or equal height; because the bore or hole of a piece must be even or equal, or else the piece will break, and thereupon the bore and size of a piece or gunne is called Gall. & Hiap. Calibre." See EQUILIBRATE.

CALICO, s. So called, because first imported from Calecut.

CALICULAR, **ad.* Formed like a cup, (or bowl).—**Brown*.

From L. Calix, a cup; from Gr. καλῆς; καρὰ το καλῆσθαι, to turn, to roll.

CALIGINOUS, ad. -GATION. Thickly, densely, clouded or shaded; dark.

L. Calig-are, to darken. The shade formed thickness of air, is called Caligo, because produced by the heat (calore) of the air.—Isidorus; but see Voss. and Martinius.

CALI-GRAPHY, s. -IC. Fair, beautiful writing.

From καλος, beautiful, and γραφειν, to grave or write.

CALK, v. To calk is—To cover or close -ER, s. the seam, to secure the bottom (of -ING. a ship) from leaking, by rubbing it with a substance comp. of strong, glutinous, cohesive materials.

To calk a ship, navem resarcire, from the Fr. Calage.—Sk. "Calage, the caulking of a ship; also ockam or the tow, wherewith it is caulked."—Cot. Sk. doubts whether this calage, may not be à calce, or rather à calendo, i. e. inculcando; cramming or stuffing in materials suited for excluding the water. Or more probably, he adds, from the A. S. Cæle, the keel, qd. calage or keelage. Mins. says—à cale; not, certainly, from the similarity of the materials, but of the use. Pliny describes the different sorts of calx or lime, good or bad, for a glutinous cement.

CALKING, s. A sharpened part of a horse-shoe, to secure the tread.

Perhaps from the Old Fr. Cascher, to tread. L. Calcars.

CALL, v. s. To make a noise, to speak or -ER, s. utter noisily, loudly; clamorously to -ING. proclaim.

To pronounce, to mark, signify, or denote, by name; to name, to denominate.

Used with Eng. pro. it is equivalent to certain L. compounds.

To call to, or upon—to invoke, to appeal to.

To call in, or together,—to convoke, to summon.

CAL

To call back,—to revoke, to retract.
To call forth, is, con., to cause to come forth, to cause to appear, to bring forth, to produce.

That which calls upon, demands, or requires, our care and industry, is our calling or vocation; our trade or employment.
"In the fyancells of Margaret, eldest daughter of King Henry VII. to James, king of Scotland, &c." preserved in Leland's Collectanea, caller is used as we now use challenger.

To call any one out, is still equivalent to,—to challenge.

D. Kal-ien; Dan. -der; Gr. Kale-iev. Hickeys says, "à Cimbrico, at Callia, vocare; nostrum, To call." Perhaps from A. S. Gyil-as, to yell. Mis-

CALLET, v. s. A low, lewd woman.

**Brathwaite*.

Muller impudica. "Perhaps," says Sk. "from Fr. Calotte," which Cot. explains to be, "a coiffe or half kerchief for a woman; also a little light cap or night cap, worn under a hat;"—perhaps, at some period, part. used by low, lewd and riotous characters: and thus app. to such persons.

CALLIDITY, s. Discernment, discrimination, skill.

L. Callidus; and this from Callus, from Calis or Calcare. Callus is properly that hardness of the foot which is caused by walking or treading. And Callidus, (met.) is to be wise, or skillful, or crafty by much practice or experience. "Callidus, quorum, tamquam manus opere, sic animus usu concaluit."—Cic. de Nat. Deorum, lib. 10. So far the L. etymologists. Tooke has no doubt that the A. S. Seyðian, to divide, to separate, to discern, to skill, is the true etymology.

CALLOUS, ad. Callosness is—That
-NESS. hardness, which is contracted in
-OSITY. calce, by walking or treading; afterwards extended to the hands or other parts of the body.—Voss. And then met. app.—To the hardness, numbness, insensibility of the mind. See CALLIDITY.

Fr. Call-suz; It. & Sp. -oo; L. Callus.

CALLOW, ad. Usually app. to—the smoothness and nakedness of unfeathered or unfledged birds. By Drayton—to the smoothness or softness of the down; and by Fletcher, met.—to a wing newly fledged.

A. S. "Calo, calu, calvus, glaber, depilis, bald. Kilian, kael, kaelwe, kaluwe."—Som.

CALM, ad. v. s. "Calm,—still, quiet,
-ER, s. peaceable, fair; gentle, unmoved;
-LY. without storm, without surges."—
-NESS. Cot.

-Y, ad. Fr. Calm-e; It. & Sp. -o; D. Kalm. "When I was in the ship, and no wind blew; calamus vocant Kiatri." Scal. quoted by Men.; who proposes malacus, calamus, by a transposition of letters, calmus, calme. Huet also derives the Fr. Calm, from Μαλακος, soft, gentle. Be-Un-

CALORIFIC, ad. Able to make hot; having the power to heat. See CALEFY.

L. Calor, heat.

CALTROP, or -THORP, s. Chausse-trape is explained by Cot. to be—

"A caltrop, or iron engine of war, made with four pricks or sharp points, whereof one, howsoever it is cast, ever stands upwards."

In the A. S. the Carduus stellatus, or star-thistle, is called Coltrappe. The same plant in Fr. is Chausse-trape, (Chausse, the hose,) with a manifest reason for the denomination, says Jun.

CALVE, v. Calf is app. to—The young
-ISH. of kine, and some other animals;
-ING. as the elephant, the stag; (met.)
CALF, s. to—

An ignorant, stupid person.

In Luke xv. 27, A. S. "Thin fæder of sloh an fætt celf;" in Wielik, "Thi fadir slough a fatt calf." D. Kalf; Ger. Kalb; Dan. Kale; A. S. Cealf, celf, calf; cealfan, vitulum parere. Som. explain Calfan, fetare, vitulum edere. Killan,—D. Kalven, fetare, fetum edere, fœtificare. Wsch,—Ger. Kalben, fetare, fœtificare; and remarks, that fetare, (to bear or bring forth,) is the primary and general signification; other usages are deduced from it. Milton uses the word in this general sense, for which he is ridiculed by Bentley, and justified by Pearce and Newton. See their notes. The calf of the leg, Sk. says, is cruris vitulus, i. e. crus minus, the smaller thigh.

CALVER, ad. Of unknown etymology. Mr. Gifford thinks calvered salmon differed little from what is now called pickled salmon, as the directions for preparing it are—"to boil it in vinegar with oil and spices."

CALUMNY, s. Cot. copiously sets forth

-IATE, v. the present usage—

-IATION. To calumniate,—to slander, de-

-IATOR. tract from; to reproach un-

-IATORY. justly, accuse falsely, charge

-IOUS. maliciously, appeach wrong-

-IOUS-LY. fully; to impeach the credit,

-NESS. blemish the fame, endanger the fortune of another, by forged imputations.

It. Calumniare; Sp. -iar; Fr. Calomnier; L. Calumniari, which Voss. affirms is from Calulus, the (unused) supine of Calvor, i. e. frustrari aut decipere, to frustrate or deceive. Of Calvor the etymology is unsettled.

CALYX. See CALICULAR.

CAMBRIC, s. So called from Cambray, famous for this kind of very fine white linen.

Fr. Toile de Cambray; It. Tela di Cambrat, (Jun.); D. Kammeruck; Ger. Kammerich.

CAMEL, s. Camlet is "a word," says

-ELOT, s. or Kilian, "common to the Fr.,

-LET, s. v. It, Sp., and other nations; so

-ELIN. called because it is made of the hair of the camel and the goat interwoven." Also app. to any thing waved or undulated.

Fr. Chameau; It. Camel-o; Sp. -lo; Sw. Kamel; D. Kemel; Dan. Kameel; Gr. Kamēlos. Camelus suo nomine Syriaco in Latium venit.—Var. de Leg. l. 4. Camelot, or Cameline,—Fr. Camelot; It. Camello; D. Kamelot; Sw. Kamlot, vestis undulata.

CAMERADE. See COMRADE.

CAMERATION,* s. Forming or constructing an arch: arching. See CONCAMERATE.—**Evelyn*.

CAMIS, or CAMUS, s. App. by Spenser to a (fine) outward vest. In Sp. A white linen wide loose garment.—Delphino.

Fr. Chemise; It. Camicia, camicia; Sp. Camisa; and in Bar. L. Camisia: formed (Wach.) from Hemide, vestis, tunica, from Ger. Heimen; D. Heymen; Sw. Hamma, to cover. See CAMISADO.

CAMISADO, s. Fr. Camisade, a sudden assaulting or surprisal of the enemy, (so termed because the soldiers that execute it most commonly wear shirts over their armour, or take their enemies in their shirts.—Cot. See CAMIS.

CAMOUS, ad. Fr. Camuser, to flatten, or —ED, ad. quash down the nose, to break the —LY. bridge of the nose, to make flattened.—Cot. Dr. Jamieson explains camou-nosed, hooknosed.—Tyrw. Camuse, flat.

D. Camus; It. Camuso. Sk. says, from the L. Camurus, incurvus; and this from the Gr. Καμπυλος, bent; from καμπη, καμπτεν, to bend.

CAMP, v. s. According to the etymology —ΑΙΧΗ, of Wach., Camp, in its first step, —ER. from Kam, the hand, would be—
The fight, the battle itself; then, the Campstede, or place of fighting; then, (as Cot. expresses it,) an host or army lodged (sc. prepared and awaiting the fight); and now also, the mere lodgment itself.

Campaign,—the period of encampment or of lodgment in camp; of active operations, sc. without quitting the field.

Camper, in ancient Teutonic, is a combater.—Versteegan.

A. S. Campian, præliari, bellare, belligerare, castremetari; to fight, to make or wage war; to encamp.—Sam. Ger. Kampfen; D. Kampen; Fr. Campier; It. campare; Sp. -ar; Dan. -ere. As in the Gr. (says Wach.) Μαχόμεαι, dimico, is formed from μαχη, manus, and in L. Pugnare, from pugnus; so in the Ger. from Kam, the hand or fist, is well deduced Kampfen, pugnandi et certandi significatu, in the signification of fighting or contending.

Ray says, To camp, is to play at foot-ball. Sax. Camp, is striving, and Campian, to strive, to contend. This word for this exercise, he adds, extends over Essex, as well as Norfolk and Suffolk. And see Moore's Suffolk Words.

In A. S. is also found Campstede, castra, locus prælii, the place of encamping or fighting. Jun. says, manifestly, and Sk., perhaps, from the L. Campus. Voss. presents four different etymologies of Campus, three of which he rejects; and the fourth, which he adopts from J. Scal., is απο την καμην. I. e. equorum flexu, whence the gaols (metæ ipse) were called καμπτηρες. De-Dis-En-Un-

CAMPAIGN. See CHAMPAIN: also CAMP.

CAMPHIRE, v. s. Fr. Camphre; L. —PHOR-ATE, or Camphora, from the Heb.—ATED. Voss., who calls it—

The gum of an Indian tree, like a nut.

CAN, v. To know, to feel, to see, to perceive; to understand; to know, sc. how to do anything; to be able, to have the ability or power. "Chaucer can but lewedly on metres." "He neyther canneth anye skill therof."—Sir T. More. "What knowest thou yt we know not? What knowest thou but we can the same."—Bible, 1551. Job xv.

In Sc. To ken is still in common use. (See KEN.) In Eng. Can is now used merely as a grammatical auxiliary.

Go. Kunnen; A. S. Can, cennan; Sw.—G. Kanna; D. & Ger. Kennen; Dan. Kan. Ithre says,—To experience by the senses, to feel; sensibus experiri, sentire: it is spoken of all the senses, imprimis of the smell, as the Fr. Sentir. Wach.—first, scire, nosse, (to know, to understand,) sive intellectu, sive usu et experientia: second, posse, valere, to be able; a sense (or signification), he remarks, transferred from knowledge to power. See CUNNING.

CAN. Often used for gan or began, in old writers.

CAN, or CANN, s. CANAKIN. Pliny records of the Indian reeds or canes, that "they be of such a length, that between every joint they will yield sufficient to make boats able for to receive three men apiece for to row at their ease." Less reeds or canes, then, may have furnished—

Drinking vessels, or vessels for liquors; now made of different materials.

A. S. Canna, canne, crater, a can, (Lye); Fr. Canne; Mid. L. Canna; Ger. & D. Kanne; Dan. Kande. Wach. quotes from Stillerus—Kan, any thing hollow with some degree of length; and observes, If this be true, can, i. e. vas oblongum, may be well derived from it. Men. derives the word from the Gr. Kanve, a cane or reed, and the Gr. from the Heb.; and remarks, that the word is common to the Eastern languages.

CANAL, s. Any thing hollowed out in similitude of a cane.

Fr. It. & Sp. Canale; L. Canalis. Virgil uses canalis for a trough. Properly (says Martinus), cannarum cavitates, the hollowness of canes.

CANARY, s. Wine, singing birds, and also a dance common in the Canary Isles, and thence introduced into this country.

CANCEL, v. To draw lines across, or —L-ATED, ad. over; to cross; to deface or —ER. efface, to erase, to obliterate, to blot out; and thus, to destroy or annul.

Canceleer appears to be app. by Drayton to the crossing, zigzag motion of a hawk, "when she turneth two or three times upon the wing, to recover herself before she seizeth her prey."—Gent. Recreation, quoted by Gifford.

Fr. Cancel-er, -lare; Sp. -ar; It. Scancellare. The L. Cancellus, Voss. derives from Κηκλης, which is itself from κλειειν, claudere, obserare, to enclose, sc. with rails or bars. See CHANCELLOR. Un-

CANCER, s. Cancer is — A tumour, —ATE, v. so called, because in its rise and —OUS. progress, it is said to have some supposed resemblance to the motion of the cancer; or in its appearance to the cancer itself; or, when touched, to the feel of the cancer. See CANKER.

A. S. Can-cere; Fr. -cre; It. -cro; Sp. -cer; D. Kanker.

CANDENT, ad. Heating, burning. See CANDLE. L. Candere, candens. Ac- In-

CANDID, ad. App. (met.)—Having the -ATE, v. ad. s. purity of white; — untar-
-LY. nished, unspotted, unsullied,
-NESS. sincere, innocent, upright; —
CANDOUR. undesigning.

Candour is used by Brown lit. to denote whiteness: "The candour of the pulp," sc.
of plants. Met. it is—

Purity, fairness, sincerity, in mind or deed; purity of character; honour.

A candidate was so called, because, when soliciting for office or honour, he wore a garment "more white than ordinary," (candida toga.) The Romans wore a white garment in common, (alba toga.) but, when seeking or standing for offices, it was usual "to wear it more white than ordinary, and to refresh the bright hew of it." A law was made forbidding this practice, "ne cui album
in vestimentum addere liceret."—Holland.
Liwy, p. 155.

Fr. Candid; It. -a; Sp. -o; L. Candidus.
Candidus differs from albus, inasmuch as it includes brightness; whence snow recently fallen, silver polished, are properly called candida. And candidus (Voss. thinks) is from candere, as lucidus from lucere. (See CANDLE.) Candid, in this primitive sense, is rare in English. Cowley so uses it: "The pure and candid dwellings."

CANDLE, s. That which kindles, lights, takes or holds light.

Candle is used—pref. to light, stick, &c.

Fr. Chandelle; It. & Sp. Candela; L. Candela, from candere, to burn, (Voss. as Suadela, from suadere.) But Candere is of unsettled etymology.
Candle, in A. S. Candel, is the ancient Dan. language, Kindil. And Ibre, after noticing that some derive from the L. and others from the Welsh, declares himself for the Isl. & Sw.-Go. Kinda, which at this day among our country people (he remarks) signifies, to kindle, (accendere notat.)

CANDY, v. -ING. To give certain appearances resembling those of sugar-candy; to form or congeal into (white or) glistening substances,—into icicles.

In Beau.—To cover over, to overspread, as with sugar-candy.

"Frosts which candy every green."—
Drayton. "The frost candies the grass."— Carew. "Hoary frosts candy'd all the plaines."—W. Browne. "This candied bitterest tortures with delight."—Beau.

Fr. "Se candir, to candy, to grow candid, as sugar after boiling."—Cot. The Italians (says Men.) call sugar-candy, Zucchiero di Candia; as if made and imported from Candia or Crete. If this be the origin, the usages by Drayton, Carew, and Browne will be consequential. Dis-

CANE, v. s. -Y. To can,—to make of, do any thing with, to strike or beat with, a can. See CAN, s. (the quot. from Pliny.)

Fr. Canne; It. Sp. & L. Canna, which Men. derives from the Gr. Kanna.

CANICULAR, ad. CANINE. The can- nicular days are the dog-days.

Canine,—of or pertaining to a dog.

Fr. Can-in, iculaire; It. -ino, icolare; Sp. -ino,

CANISTER, s. A basket,—so called, because made orig. of split canes or reeds.
A box, (sc. for tea, coffee, &c.)

L. Canistrum.—See FOSS.

CANKER, s. v. App.—To any thing that
-ED, ad. eats, gnaws, corrodes, con-
-EDLY. sumes, devours, or destroys.
-OUS, ad. To any thing that has the -Y, ad. malignant, corrupt, infec-
-CARDNESS. tious, virulent, envenomed,
-fresh properties of a cancer, (qv.)
Grose says, that in Gloucestershire a poisonous fungus resembling a mushroom is called canker; in some counties, the caterpillar; in Devonshire, the dog-rose, the canker-rose; and in the North, canker'd,
Sc. cankert, is cross, ill-conditioned.

Canker is Cancer, diff. written; and, so written, much more variously app. "Malum immedi-cabile, cancer," (Ovid. Met. il. 825.) is rendered cancer by Addison, and canker by Sandys.

CANNIBAL, s. ad. App. to—An eater
-LY. of human flesh.

-ISM. Cot., under the word Chien (dog), has—Appétit du chien, a most insatiate appetite;
a stomach which, though it lay in unto vomiting, still would have more. Perhaps a canine appetite, from L. Canis, a dog; though by some suspected to be a corruption of Caribai, from Caribes, the name of the people among whom cannibalism was (Hackluyt) learned to be practised. This word is not in our older lexicographers, though used by so early a writer as Hackluyt.

CANNON, s. Cot. says—"The gun
-EER, v. s. termed a cannon; also the -ADE, v. barrel of any gun; (more gen.)
-ING. any instrument, or thing, that is long and hollow, as the barrel of a gun."

Fr. Can-non; It. -none, augmentative of Canna.
—Men. Sk.; Magna canna, i. e. a great tube or pipe, from its similitude to a reed, or cane, or tube. See CANON.

CANOA, CANOE, s. A small boat. See
CAN, and part. the passage there cited from Pliny.

CANON, s. ad. A rule or law; any thing
-ESS, s. prescribed, laid down, as the
-RY. rule or law for regulation, di-
-SHIP, s. rection, government.

-IST, s. Canon is app. also to the person
-ISTER. who uses such canon or rule, -ISTIC, ad. who lays it down, who conforms
-IZE. to it. Also—

-IZ-ATION, s. 1. To the rule and law of Ec-
-ER. clesiastical Polity.

-ING. 2. To the catalogue of sacred
-IC-AL, ad. books, by which all the doc-
-ALLY. trines of the Christian Church
-ALNESS. are to be regulated.

-ALS, s. 3. To the catalogue of saints
-ATE, s. and martyrs, whose memory
-ATION. was, by Ecclesiastical canon or law, preserved in the festivals of the Church.
And from this last usage—

To canonize, is to enroll among the saints and martyrs of the Church.

Canon bit,—a smooth round bit.

Gr. Kanov; Fr. & Sp. Canon; It. canone. "The Gr. Kanov," Martinus says, "seems in the first place to be virgula cannea, a rod or cane; which is usually very straight; and its etymology, to be Kanv, canna, a cane or reed." (See CANNON, ante.) And Voss. thinks the reason plain why Canon should have its name from Canna, and from its straightness be app. to recti mensura, a measure, a rule. Un-

CANOPY, s. s. A veil or covering to exclude guests from the face. App. to—A covering extended over a throne or chair of state; over the head;—to any shade or covering.

Fr. Canopi; Gr. Kanovatos, from Kanov, a guest. (qui canonicos scalas habet.)—Lennep.

CANOROUS, ad. Sounding, (sc. musically, tunelessly,) musical, tuneful.

L. Canorus; Fr. Canore, from Can-ere, to sound, to sing.

CANT, s. s. Cant seems to have been app. -ER, s. to the—

-ICLE. Chant, i. e. the whining tone or

-INGLY. modulation of voice adopted by

-ION. beggars, with intent to coax,

-O, s. wheedle, or cajole, by pretensions

CANON. of wretchedness; then to—

-ET. The language of any cajoler, or hypocritical pretender. See Swift, A Discourse on the Mechanical Operations of the Spirit, s. 2; also Spec. No. 147.

Canicle,—a little song, a sonnet; a portion of a poem. Cantion, Canzon; It. Canzone. See CHANT, CHANSON.

T. H. (in Sk.) derives Cant, a cantando, because vagrants seek their gains from the common people, cantilando, by chanting. Lye is of the same opinion. See CHANT. Ac-De-En-or-In-Ex-Pre-Re-

CANT,* s. From Cantare—To proclaim (a public sale; to sell.)—**Swift*.

It. Incantare; Fr. Encant, or Incant, an outcry of goods.—Cot.

CANTER, s. s. -BURY. A pace of a horse.

The s. and s. Canter, though common in speech, have not been found, in any author, except in those on horsemanship. Canterbury, app. to a slow gallop, (from which Canter appears to have been corrupted,) occurs in an old book called Chaucer's Whimseys, and is likewise used so lately as by Denia. On the Prelim. to the Dunelad; both produced by Mr. Nares.—Berenger (a better horseman probably than etymologist,) is inclined to a doubt on the common reason given for the usage of this word; viz. that it is derived from the pilgrims riding at this pace to Canterbury; and he suggests L. Cantherius, a gelding, (see the word in Gesner;) horses of that kind, from the calmness of their temper, performing this soft and easy pace (now called canter) with the greatest docility; and the appellation of the animal being transferred to the pace.—See Berenger, On Horsemanship, p. 71.

CANTLE, v. s. App. gen. to—The corner or edge, piece or portion,

CANT, s. s. fragment or division.

Cantel, in Hyrde's Vives, seems to signify, (met.) to edge in; cantiled, in Hall, edged, bordered; in Dryden (Juvenal), divided, apportioned. See CANTON.

To cant, among mechanics, is to raise on the edge or corner.

Canillum velut Quantillum; id quod supra mensuram additum est.—Spel. Fr. Eschantaler, -illon; from Fr. Cant-on; It. -one, angulus; Gr. Kanov, the corner of the eye.

CANTON, s. v. Cot says, "Se Can-ize, v. tonner,"—To canton, or cantonize -MENT. it; to sever themselves from the rest of their fellows, and from the body of the state; and fortify, quarter, or erect a new state apart." To canton is now more commonly,

To quarter soldiers for a time in different parts or divisions;—To canton a town or district,—to proportion such parts or divisions; to part, to apportion, to allow.

Ger. Kant; Fr. & Sp. Cant-on; It. -one, (see CANTLE), an angle or corner. The Swiss, says Sk., so call their provinces or federate republic, qd. regionis anguli. Ibre thinks the etymology of Wach. more probable; viz. that Canton, (as app. to a district,) is used, pro pago ex centium villis composito; since we know, he adds, that Helvetia or Switzerland was divided into 100 villages. From Tacitus we also learn, (de Mor. Ger. c. 6,) that, in levying soldiers, 100 (centeni) were sent from every village, and (c. 12) that 100 companions from the commonalty were assigned to each chief. In—(En—)

CANVASS, s. A strong, coarse, kind of linen, or flaxen manufacture.

L. Can-nabis; Fr. -cous; It. -canocio; Sp. -casso; D. Kan-nas; Sw. -fasso; Dan. Canfas. All from the Gr. Kanvass, flax.—Jun.

CANVASS, s. v. To discuss, to examine, -ER, s. to explore, to scrutinize, to search -ING. or seek after; to solicit.

Fr. Canvasser, Cot explains, "to canvass, or curiously to examine, search, or sift out, the depth of a matter." Sk. says, perhaps a met. from shaking or beating kemp. See CANVASS, ante.

CAP, s. v. Cap is a covering for the head.

CAPE. Cape is the head or top of a gar-CAP-PER. ment; also a head-land. Cap-d-pié,
-A-PIE. from head to foot.

To cap, is to cover; to top, to over-top. Also—

To touch the cap,—to move or remove it, (more properly to uncap,) to lift up, to raise it.

A. S. Cappe; D. & Ger. Kappe; Dan. Cap; Fr. Cap-pe, -pe; Sp. -a A cap, cape, or cape. (See COB, COV, COIV.) From L. Caput (Sk.); Caput, from Gr. Κεφαλή, (Voss.) which Lennep thinks is from the obsolete κενέιν, whence κεκενέιν, to cover, qv. (A. S. Ge-hefan. See HEAD.)

CAPABLE, ad. In our old writers -BILITY. Capable is used to signify Ca-

-CI-OUS. capacious, i. e.—

-OUSNESS. Able to take, to hold, to receive,

-TATE, v. to contain, to comprise, to com-

-TY, s.prehend. Now more emph.—

-FY, v. Sufficiently able, able enough; able, sc. to perform or execute; to receive into the mind, to comprehend, to understand.

To capacitate or capacify, is to enable or cause to be able; to enable to take, hold, receive, contain, comprise or comprehend.

Fr. Capa-ble, -cidé; It. -ce, -cidé; Sp. Capés, Capacidá; L. Capas, from Capere, to take, to hold. A. S. Cep-an: Cep, i. e. Ce-hap; by change of the cognate letters, from Go. Ga-hab-an; A. S. Ge-habb-an, habere, cap-ere, tenere. See CAPTIOUS, CAPTIVE. CAPARISON, v. s. App. to.—The covering of a horse, or of a man; the trappings, decorations, with which he is covered.

Caparassoner,—to furnish with, provide with dress; or attire in, or put on, a caparison.—Cot.

Fr. Caparaçõh; from Cappa. See CAP.

CAPER, v. s. To leap, jump, skip, or -ER. dance; to move nimbly, wantonly, frolicsomenely, capricious-PRIOLE, s. ly. See CAPRICE.

Fr. Capri-ole; It. -ola; Sp. Cabriola, capri saltus, the goat's leap,—a leap in which the feet are moved or shaken in the air,—so called from its imitating or resembling the leap of a goat.—Sk. Out.

CAPILLARY, ad. s. -LAMENT. Hairy, resembling hair; having the fineness, smallness, delicacy of hair;—fine, small, delicate.

L. Capillus, q. capitis pilus.—Voss. after Istodorus.

CAPITAL, s. ad. Of or belonging or -ALIST. pertaining to, the head: the chief, -ALLY. the principal, the uttermost—in -ATION. size or situation, in rank, degree, in importance, in consequence: as a capital city, a capital crime. See CAPTAIN, CAPITULATE.

L. Capitatis, from Caput, the head. (See CAP.) D. Kapital: Fr. Capedal: the head or principal sum or stock. Fr. Chapiteau; It. Capitello; the capital, head or top of a pillar. De-Oc-Pre-Re-

CAPITULATE, v. To settle or arrange -ULAR, s. the heads, sc. of an agreement; -ULARLY. to propose, to enter into articles of agreement; to agree, to -ULATION. accede, to concede, to terms or -ILE, s. conditions, (of submission, surrender.)

Steevens interprets capitulate, in Hen. IV. —to make head: the common usage seems to express the speaker's intention.

Capitular, (person or thing,) of or belonging to the head, sc. of an ecclesiastical body. See CHAPTER.

The L. Capitulum, (Gr. Κεφαλαιον) Wiclif renders capitile; Tyndall, pyth; Geneva and Mod. Ver., Sum. (Heb. viii.)

L. Caput, the head. (See CAP.) Fr. Capit-uler; It. -olare; Sp. -ular. Re-

CAPON, s. -ISE, v. A fowl; cut, because it fattens more easily.

Fr. Chapon; L. Capo; Sw. Kapun; D. Kap-hoen; Ger. Kapp-han; Dan. & A. S. Capun, gallus castratus. From the D. & Ger. Kappen, to chop or cut,—Wach.; and he remarks that Martial (he believes) is the first author who uses the word capo, and that Pliny apparently avoids it as barbarous. Capus, however, is mentioned by Var. De Re Rustica. See Gesser and Voss.

CAPOUCH, s. -PUCHED, ad. A monk's cowle or hood; also the hood of a cloak.

Fr. Capuchon, from Caput.

CAPRICE, s. Fr. Caprice, "A humour, -IOUS, ad. giddy thought, fantastical com- -IOUS-LY. ceit; a sudden will, desire, or -NESS. purpose to do a thing for which one hath no (apparent) reason." -CHIO. —Cot.

Fr. Capr-ice; It. -iceto; Sp. -icho; from the L. Capere, a goat; qd. the wantonness, the whimsicalness of a goat. Sk. had seen the word only in the Eng. Diet. It is in Sherwood, though Capriciousness is not. He explains Capriccio, (so he writes it,) a fantastical humour. See CAPRA.

CAPRI-CORN, s. A constellation in the zodiac—so called.

L. Capricornus; (capri cornu, the goat's horn.)

CAPRI-FICATION, s. -FICAL. The wild fig, (ficus), Pliny says, never bringeth any fruit to maturity, but breedeth certain flies or gnats, which, having nothing to feed upon in the wild fig, fly unto the other kind, upon which they greedily nibble, and thereby let in the breath of the warm sun, and the air besides, which helps to ripen the fruit. Hence the device of bringing swarms of these gnats from the wild to the other sort of fig-tree." And this is called —caprifigation.

L. Caprificus, caprifeco.—See Voss.

CAPSTAN, s. App. to.—The cylindrical machine around which a rope or cable is wound—in raising anchors or other heavy bodies. Sp. Cabe-strante; Fr. -stante.

CAPSULE, s. A little case (in plants)— -AR, ad. which contain the seed.)

-ARY, ad. Capsulate pods are the little short -ATE, ad. seed-vessels of plants.

-ATED, ad. Capsulated, —inclosed in any thing, as a walnut is in its green husk.

L. Capsula, dim. of Capes, à cupiendo, (Voss.) i. e. from holding or containing. In Suidas, Καψα; καπη και θηκη, i. e. cista et arca, which Scheidt thinks may have its name à cavitare, from the hollowness in which any thing may be held.

CAPTAIN, s. ad. As the head (caput)

-LESS, ad. governs the other members,

-RY. so — The captain governs sol--SHIP. diers, citizens, and others.

Fr. Capi-taine; It. -tano; Sp. -tan; D. Kapiten; Mid. L. Capitanus. From the L. Caput, i. e. (says Sk.) belli seu militie caput. And Kilian, à capite.

CAPTIOUS, ad. Ready, prompt, quick,

-LY. eager,—to take offence, to take

-NESS. objection, to cavil, to quibble:

-TION. and thus (according to the usage of the s. Caption, by Chillingworth)—To outwit, to deceive.

Caption,—a taking.

"Consider seriously, with what strange captions you have gone about to delude your king and your country."—Chillingworth.

L. Capit-ens; Fr. -ens, from L. Capere, to take. The Sc. use Catchy. Re- Un-

CAPTIVE, s. v. To capture, appears to have been used, formerly, as -ANCK.* to captivate, (met.) now; i. e.—
 -ATE, s. ad.† To take, sc. as a prisoner; to -ATION. reduce to bondage, to subject,
CAPT-ATION. to subdue, to overpower, to -ION. enthrall, to enslave; and as
 -OR. now used with a subaudition,
 -URE, s. v. first, of gentle, attractive, persuasive means or qualities; and secondly, sometimes of delusive or deceitful means or appearances.

Captation, in Skelton, is used with the first subaudition. "With propre captations of benevolence," (Crowné of Lawrell.) And see CAPTIV and CAPTAIN.

The s. To capture, now of so common use in public despatches, and in our Courts of Law, appears to be quite of modern origin.—To take, sc. as a prize, as a pri-

L. Captivus, from Capere, captum, to take.

CAPUCHIN, s. Capouch, qv.

CAR, s. A vehicle that turns, or that moves by turning (sc.) on wheels.

Ger. Karr; Sw. Karra; Fr. Char. "Car, cart, chariot, and the L. Carrus, are the pt. of the A. S.
Cyran, cyran, to turn, to turn about, to turn backwards and forwards. This word was first introduced into the Roman language by Cæsar, who learned it in his wars with the Germans. Voss.
 mistakenly supposes it derived from Carrus."—
 See TOOK. And see CART.

CARABINE, or CARBINE, s. A destructive kind of gun.

Fr. Carab-in; It. & Sp. -ana; Ger. Karbier.
Proprie est interfectio, a slayer, and is derived from A. S. Cearfan, interficere, to slay.—Wach.
In A. S. Cearfan, ceorfan, acerfan, to carve, to cut, to cut to pieces, to slay, to kill.

CARACK, s. Delphino calls it—A great heavy sort of ship, the Portuguese formerly sailed in to the East Indies: it was also used by the Genoese.

Fr. Car-rague; It. -acca; Sp. -aca. Voss., à gravitate capitis, (à Kapa et hapor.) Sk. perhaps, from the L. Carrus; qd. carrus marinus.

Carack and Caravel had probably one origin, and that origin the carago with which they were loaded.

CARAT, s. A weight of four grains. App. to—an estimate of the fineness of gold:—
 met. of purity, of value.

Fr. Carat; It. -to. See MEN.

CARAVAN, s. -BARY. A Pers. and Turkish word. The Turks pronounce it Kervan, and it signifies a number of persons assembled to journey together.

Caravanserai, (Kervan, and serai, a house,) a house at which caravans sojourn.—Men.

CARAVEL, or CARVEL, s. Hackluyt appears to have deemed it, comparatively, a large vessel. Delphino calls it—

A light, round, old-fashioned ship, with a square poop, rigged like a galley, formerly used in Spain and Portugal.

Fr. Caravella; It. -vella; Sp. -bela. Men.
mys, from Carabus, a crab. Caraba, carava, caravella, caravel. See CARACK.

CARBONADO, v. s. Fr. Carbonade.—"A rasher on the coals; also a slash over the face, which fetcheth the flesh with it"—
Cot.

To carbonado, is,—To chop, cut, slice, or slash; as meat chopped or cut for cooking upon the coals.

Fr. Carbon-ade; It. -sta; from L. Carbo, carbonis, a coal.

CARBUNCLE, s. -ED, ad. Carbunculus, by Pliny, is app. to a disease that singes and burns the eillets of the burgeons or buds; he also speaks of "the hote earth, called Carbunculus, which used to burn the corne sowne thereupon."—Holland.

A Carbuncle, is a name given to a certain precious stone; and also to certain burning spots or tumours on the face; to both, from their shining or glittering like burning coals.

Fr. Carb-uncle; It. -oncolo; Sp. -oncol; D.
Karbunkel; L. Carbunculus, dim. of Carbo, carbonis, a coal; quod sit ignitus ut carbo.

CARCAN, s. -ET. A kind of chain, sc.
 for the neck, or a necklace.

Fr. Carcan; Mid. L. Carcanum. Men. says from the Gr. Kipavov, a kind of chain.

CARCASS, s. -CAS-LIKE.* App. to—a dead body; any thing decayed; in a ruinous state; the mere shell; the skeleton;
 as the carcass of a house.—Udal.

Fr. Carcass; Mid. L. Carcasium. Perhaps immediately from the Fr. Carquois; It. Carcasso, a quiver, ob similitudinem cum pharetra; sc.
 with an empty quiver.—See Jan, Men, Du Cange, and Wach.

CARCERAL,* ad. Pertaining to imprisonment.—*Fox, Martyrs.

L. Carcer, a prison; à coercendo, quod extere prohibet.—Var. Carceres (the barriers or starting post) are so called because horses are restrained (coercentur) from going beyond them, before the signal is given. Go. Karker; A. S. Carcern;
D. & Ger. Kerker; Wach. says it may be derived from the A. S. Cark, curn, care, (of which prisons are full.) In-carcerate.

CARD, v. s. The shipman's card is his -ER. chart: "Mappes and cardes, are
 -ING. maps and charts."—See Stevens on Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

Carding,—playing games of hazard with cards.

Fr. Carte; It. & Sp. Carta; L. Charta, from Xapvns, and that from xapavceiv, insculpere, to grave, to write. Dis.

CARD, v. s. -ER. To card, (sc. in Bacon and Beau. & F.) is—To mix, to mingle: "An excellent drink, to be drunk alone, or carded with some other beer," (Bacon);—also to clear or free from: "It is necessary that this book be carded and purged of certain base things," (Shelton), as by the operation of carding.

Dan. Karder; D. Kaerden, obliquo lanam de-ducere ferro.—Kilian. Fr. Card-er; It. -are;
Sp. -ar; L. Cardere, from Karpav, exapov, to shear.
Shak. says of Rich. II., "The king carded his state;" and Mr. Stevens thinks the met. is taken from mingling coarse wool with fine, and carding them together, whereby the value of the latter is diminished. To card, he adds, is used by other writers, for To mix. In Ritson's opinion, the king means that his predecessor set his consequence to hazard, played it away, (as a man loses his fortune), at cards. It seems to be used as equivalent to—To discard.

CARDIAC, ad. Cardiac is any thing
-ACAL, ad. which affects the heart;—either
-ACLE, s. disease or cure. See CORDIAL.
Fr. Cardi-aque; It. & Sp. -aco; Gr. Kardia, the heart.

CARDINAL, s. ad. "A cardinal is so -IZE, styled, because serviceable to the -SHIP, apostolic see, as an axle, or hinge, on which the whole government of the church turns; or as they have from the Pope's grant, the hinge and government of the Romish Church."—Ayliffe.

Cardinal, ad.—pre-eminent, chief, principal.

The cloak was so called, because similar to that usually worn by cardinals.

Fr. Cardinal; It. -inale; Sp. -enal; D. Kardinal; L. Cardinalis, from Cardo, a hinge, "that on which the door is turned and returned;" from the A. S. Cyran, to turn. Du Cange quotes, among others, the following verses:—

Porta suos postes sine Cardine claudere nescit,
Nec bene præter eos Pastor ovile regit.
Cardo tenet portam, nec quid valet illa remota
Cardine, sic Papa nihil valet absque viris.

Though Spel. seems to agree that the word is derived from the L. Cardo, he differs as to the cause of the application. See his Gloss. Arch., Du Cange and Men.

CARE, v. s. To care, is gen. used, as ex-
-FUL, ad. plained by Som.; i. e.—

-FUL-LY. To heed, to mind, to regard; to

-NESS, be heedful, or mindful, regard--LESS, ful or anxious. Hence,—

-LESS-LY. Care-ful, heedful, cautious. Also,

-NESS, full of care, trouble or distress.

In Ritson,—“For ever she did the little boy care,” (The Frere and the Boy),—

To distress, to trouble, to vex, to harass, to afflict with care.

And the s. is common in both applications of the v.; viz.—

Heedfulness, mindfulness, regard, attention;—solicitude, anxiety, trouble.

Go. Kara; A. S. Caru, caron. “Carion, to take care or heed, to regard, to mind, to attend.”

—Som. In A. S. are also found the compounds, Carfull, carfullness, carfullness, carleas. Jun. thinks that the word may have some affinity with the Gr. Knp, the heart, because men take especial care of those things, quæ maximè ipsi cordi sunt. See CURA. Over- Un-

CAREEN, v. To lay a vessel with her keel upwards, for the purpose of repairing, of calking her. See CALK.

Fr. Car-ène; It. -ena; Sp. -ana; L. Carina, (à currando dicta), the keel of a ship.

CAREER, v. s. Fr. Carrière, Cot. well explains,—

“An highway, a road or street; also, a career on horseback; and, (more gen.) any exercise, or place for exercise, on horseback; as a horse-race, or a place for horses to run in; and their course, running, or full speed therein.”

To career,—to move at full speed, swiftly;—also, as if in display of skill or grace.

Fr. Car-rière; It. -iera; Sp. -era; from Car- rere.—Jun. From To carry.—Sk.

CARENE, s. -RENTANE. A carene, was a fast for forty days on bread and water. A carenans or quadragens,—a Lent, or forty days of Lent; any space of forty days.

Low L. Carena, carentena, q. quarantina; a quarantine, (qv.) See in De Cange.

CARESS, v. s. To touch, to treat with gentleness or fondness, to fondle; to treat endearingly, soothingly, flatteringly.

Fr. Car-esser; It. -essare; Sp. Acariciar. Not from Kappeſeu, to soothe, nor from Kapierſen, but from the L. Carus; qd. Caritia, carities, i. e. Caritas, and thence Carissare, caresser.—Sk. And Men. says, de carissare, formed from carus. Carus, car, caricus, caricius, cariciare.

CARGO, s. -GASON, s. The load carried, the goods or wares carried, or conveyed.

Fr. Cargaison; Sp. -agen; the freight or lading of a ship; Fr. Carguer, charger; It. Caricare, to load or load. All (says Sk.) from the L. Carrus. (See CAR.) And Men. Charger, from Carriore, formed from Carricus, the dim. of Carrus. Sir Thomas North writes, Cargued. Super-

CARICATURE, s. v. -IST. These words are in common use. To charge, to overcharge; to load, to overload; and thus, to colour too highly, to exaggerate, to distort.

It. Caricatura, from Caricare, to charge, to load. See CARCO.

CARK, s. v. -ING. App. to—Anxious care anxiety, solicitude, trouble; (added or accumulated care.)

A. S. Caru, caru, care; car-ian, car-ian-ian, car-ian, be-carcan, accurate, to carke, or care for, to take care of. Car-ig, is full of care and fear; and also moaning, grieving, complaining, lamenting.—See Som.

CARLE, s. v. A carle is a robust, strong
-ISH, ad. man; a rustic, labouring man;
-OT,* uncivilized, unpollished, rude, brutal. See CHURL.

Carle-kemp is the hemp that bears the seed. See FIMBLE.—Drayton.

A. S. Carle; Ger. Karl; D. Kaerle. Carle, Karl, in the ancient language of Germany, signifies robust and strong.—Foos.

CARMINATIVE, ad. Arbuthnot calls carminatives—expellers of wind.

Fr. Carminatif; from L. Carminare, to cleanse from gross parts; or from Carmen, as if acting by charm or enchantment.

CARNAGE, s. Carnal, as app. gen., is—

CARNAL, ad. Of or pertaining to the flesh;
-AL-LY, to the lusts of the flesh;

-ITY, s. fleshly; opposed to spiritual.

-NESS, s. Carnage,—the slaughter of

-IZE, v. flesh; flesh slain or slaugh-

-IST, s. tered.

-ITE, s. Carnal is pref. to meated and

-ROUS, s. mindedness,—opposed to spi-

-OUS, s. ritual.

-OSE, s. Carnuous,—fleshly, having qua-

-OSITY, s. lities of, or resembling those

-IFY, v. of, flesh.

-IVOROUS. Carnify,—to cause to be or to become flesh,—rests on the authority of Sir

Matthew Hale, who uses it more than once.

Carnivorous,—devouring flesh. See CARNIVAL and CARNATION.

L. Caro, carnis, flesh; a carendo, eo quod carere animi, because it is without life or breath.—See Pass. Dis-Ex-In-Re-Un-

CARNATION, s. -ED.* Mr. Steevens says, carnerdine is the old term for carnation; and quotes from the old comedy, "The rosy coloured Carnerdine." Hopkins uses carnation as incarnation, "The temporal carnation of the Son of God."

Having the colour of flesh,—tinted, spotted, streaked with that colour (as the flower).—"Lovelace."

L. Caro, carnis, flesh; Fr. Incarnadine; It. Carnadino. Color carnis, colour of flesh.—Sk.

CARNIVAL, s. The time or season in which it was lawful to eat flesh, was called in Mid. L. Carnale; in Fr. Charnage. This festive season, which is part observed at Venice, continues from the Epiphany till the first day of Lent.

Fr. Carn-vent; It. -vande. Some It. writers (says Du Cange) think Carnovale so called, as if carne or carra, sala. Du Cange, (in v. Carnelocum), himself thinks, — dies istius, seu potius Dies Martii, qui Quadragesimam antecedit,—that these days were, or rather the Tuesday preceding Lent was, called carra-sal,—quidd sonat, Carra abocedit, seu tempus carne comedendi;—the days for eating flesh are passed.

CAROCHE, s. -ED, ad. A kind of car or chariot. See CAR.

Fr. Car-ross; It. -ozzo; L. Carruca, from Carrus.

CAROL, s. -ING. A kind of dance; also of song. "In the year 1521 Wynkyn de Worde printed a set of Christmas carols; these were festal chansons for enlivening the merriment of the Christmas celebrity; and not such religious songs as are current at this day with the common people under the same title, and which were substituted by those enemies of innocent and useful mirth, the Puritans."—Warton.

Fr. Carol-le; It. -a. Men. says, Choreola, a dim. of Chorea. Som. produces the word Kyriole, and thinks it probable that such a word may have been corrupted from Kypis elanson, (Lord, have mercy,) so frequently repeated in morning prayers. And hence he conjectures our Carol to be a hymn, &c. usually sung on the Nativity. Fr. Carolle is the name of a kind of dance, and so it is used in B. Gloucester.

CAROUSE, s. s. To carouse, is—To -ER. drink freely, copiously, with much -AL.* jollity.

Carrousel, (Fr. Carrousel, from It. Carro-sella, Men.), a pageant in which chariots (carresses) were much employed, is ascribed to a different source; viz. Carrosse, a chariot.—Dryden.

Fr. Carrouser; Sp. Carosa, from Ger. Gar ausa, Empty it entirely, (prorus deple vel exhauri) in a weak all out.—Sk. Lye thinks it may be from Ernst, or Ruse; and Ruse, Jun. derives from D. Rapachus, strepere, perstreper, sonore tumultu, to make a roaring noise, an uproar. Men. is to the same purport as Sk.: Ger. Garause, which signifies route vulde. See CAOUSE and ROUSE. Mr. Gifford—without any authority—asserts, that rouse was "a large glass, ('not past a pint,' as Iago says,) in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the rest of the company formed a carouse. There could be no rouse or carouse unless the glass was empty. A rouse or two, in the language of the present day, would be a bumper or two."—See Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 259, note.

CARP, v. To pull or pluck out, to catch -ER. at, (sc. met.) small faults or errors; to find fault, to detect -INGLY. or expose faults, to cavil. In our old writers,—to hold up to ridicule, to jest, to scoff at.

And it appears also to have been used as Dr. Jamieson interprets it: 1. To speak, to talk, to relate verbally or in writing; 2. To sing. And he supposes the word to have been introduced from L. Carpere, to cull, by the monkish writers. For carping, the Sc. use catchy.

Fr. Charpir; It. Carpire; L. Carpere, to shear, to crop, to carve, (perhaps from A. S. Cearf-tan, to carve,) to tear to pieces; and thus—as explained above. See CARPENTER. Dis-Ex-carp.

CARP, s. A fish.

Dan. Karpe; Sw. Karp; D. Kärper; Ger. Karpf; Fr. Carpe; It. & Sp. Carpa. Perhaps so called from its voracity, because he catches at (carpit), seizes eagerly.—Sk.

CARPENTER, s. -TRY, s. A wright, or worker in wood.

Low L. Carpentarius; Fr. Charpentier; It. Carp-entaro; Sp. intero. Men. thinks, from Carpenium; Voss., quod ligna carpit, i. e. cadit, because he cuts wood. Jun. observes, that Hesychius, Karpiv exp. κατατεiv, ferire, to strike. And Tooke remarks, that "the translation of the New Testament, which is ascribed to Wicliffe, (he alludes probably to his own MS.) proves to us that at that time, smith (sc. one who smitheth) and carpenter were synonymous."

CARPET, s. v. Carpets were formerly used as covers for tables. See B. Jonson, and Mr. Gifford's Notes. Now app. to—

A covering for the floor.

A carpet knight,—one that ever loves to be in women's chambers.—Col. Others say, that they were men learned in arts and sciences, on whom knighthood was bestowed.

D. Karpet; It. Carpetta; "Fr. Cairan, a Turke carpet; such a one as is brought from Caire in Egypt."—Col. Sk. suggests that It. Carpetta may be from Cairo, and tapets, qd. tapas Cairicus seu Memphiticus.

CARRION, s. ad. Now app. gen. to—Putrefied flesh; formerly to the mere carcass, or dead body.

A carrion crow preys upon the carcass, or carrion.

Fr. Carogne, charongne; It. Car-ogna; Sp. -on-a. All, says Sk., from L. Caro, carnis, flesh.

CARROT, s. -Y, ad. An esculent vegetable.

Fr. Carot-s; It. -s; Dut. Karote. Of unknown etymology.

CARRY, v. To convey, sc. on a turning, -IAGE, s. a wheeled vehicle; gen. To convey, -IER. vey, to bear, to remove from one -Y-ING. place to another by any means of conveyance or support; as distinguished from—to draw or drag; also simply, to support or sustain.

To bear, to deport, to conduct, to behave.

CAR

To carry in or to, is, to import; to carry out, to export; to carry over or across, to transport.

To carry, is frequently used with an ellipsis; as to carry (sub. into effect) is—to effect, to accomplish.

To carry a suit (sub. to a successful issue) is—to gain, to win it.

To carry a fort, is—to gain, to conquer it.

Carriage of the body or person,—deportment, manner of appearance in motion or rest: conduct, behaviour, management.

Fr. Chariot; Sp. Acarricar; Ger. Karren; A. S. Cyran, to turn. Men. derives the Fr. thus, Carrus, carr, caricare, chariot, charlier. For the etymology of Carrus, see CAR. Mis-Over-Ro.

CART, s. v. A turning or wheeled vehicle, —AGE. gen. employed for use in agriculture, or in matters of business, —WRIGHT. ness, rather than of pleasure.

Cart-wright,—one by whom carts are wrought or made.

Dan. Karra; Sw. Karra; D. Kar; Ger. Karr, karrn; L. Carrus, from the A. S. Cyran, to turn or return. Chaucer, (Knight's Tale,) and G. Douglas, use cart and carler, as chariot and charioteer. qv.

CARTEL, v. s. "A little paper of defiance or challenge for a single combat."—Cot.

Any paper—expressing the terms or conditions upon which any thing is done.

To chartel, in B. Jonson, is, elliptically, To challenge.

Fr. Cartel, charia, chartella, chartellum (Men.); It. Cartello.

CARTILAGE, s. A gristle or tendril of —INEOUS, ad. the ear or nose, or such a —INOUS. skin as is between the toes of geese or ducks, &c.—Cot.

Simpliciter à carne fit carnilago, hinc cartilago. —Voss. Fr. Cartilage.

CARTOON, s. The thick paper whereon painters draw sometimes.—Cot. App. emph. to the Cartoons of Raphael.

Fr. Carton; It. Cartone; from L. Charta, paper.

CARTRIDGE, s. A charge made ready for any musket or ordinance.—Florio. A full charge (Cot.) for a pistol (musket, &c.) put up within a little paper, to be the readier for use.

Fr. Carloach; It. Scartoccio; L. Charta, paper.

CARUCATE, s. A carrucate of land, CARRUGAGE, or (Spel.) is that portion which CHARUGAGE. is marked out for the labour of one plough, a plough-land. It is also called a Carue, (qv.)

L. Caruca; Fr. Caruc, (a plough), from Carrus, Voss. thinks. See CAR.

CARVE, v. To cut, (whether meat, metal, —ER. or other substance;) to grave or —ING. engrave; to cut up in parts or portions, to distribute; to allot portions; also (met.) to cut, sc. for ourselves, to choose our own portion.

D. Ker-oen; Ger. ben; A. S. Ceorfan, secare, scindere, carpere. For-Over-Under-

CARVE. Fr. Carue. See CARUCATE.

CARUNCLE, s. —ULATED. A small portion of flesh. L. Caruncula.

CAS

CASCADE, s. A fall, sc. of water; a waterfall.

Fr. Casca-de; It. ca; L. Cadere, casum, to fall.

CASE, v. s. That which takes, receives, —ING. holds, or contains, whether —HARDEN, v. arrows, (as in Chaucer and G. Douglas, Virgil, b. i.) knives, books, watches, or any thing else. And thus, the skin.

To caseharden,—to harden the case, the outside, the skin, the surface.

To case is used, in Shak, for—To uncase, to strip off the case:—"We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case him," (All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 6.)

Fr. Caisse; It. Cassa; Sp. Caza; D. Kasse, kasi; (perhaps A. S. Crocan, to cheese, to take;) L. Copea, à capiendo, says Voss.; yet he prefers Gr. καψα, which in Jennis's opinion is pro καψα, from καψω, the future of καπτω, cavitate completi, capere, to take, to hold. See CAPSULE. Dis-En-Un-

CASE, s. The state or condition, in which

CASUAL, ad. any thing may befal or happen —LY. to be; the state or condition of —TY. circumstances, actual or possible. (See CASUIST.) As it fell out, as it turned out, as it happened, as it came to pass,—are equivalent expressions.

Casual, i. e. accidental or incidental; fortuitous; unconnected with, independent of, plan, purpose, or design; not foreseen, premeditated or predetermined.

L. Cadere, casum, to fall; Fr. Cas; It. & Sp. Caso. Ac-In-Oc-cident; Cotn-cide; De-cadence, —cay, —ciduous; Oc-casion.

CASEMATE, s. Cot. calls it, a loop, or loophole in a fortified wall. And SK. is to the same purport.

Fr. Cas-emate; Sp. amata; It. amatta.—See MEN.

CASEMENT, s. A case or frame for a window.

From It. Casamenta, a building, a small house, with a slight deviation from the meaning.—Sk. Jun. says, it is also used for the D. Kasirine, jugamentum fenestree vel ostii; Fr. Chassis de fenestre; and Men. derives chassis from capas. And thus we are brought round to the Eng. Case, itself from Copea. See CASE.

CASEOUS, ad. Cheesy.

L. Caseus, a cheese.

CASH, v. s. —IER, s. Cash is now transferred by usage, from the case which holds the silver or gold, to the silver or gold itself.

Fr. Casse, Cot. says, is "a box, case, or chest; also a merchant's cash or counter." And Sherwood explains cashier, "Qui garde la casse de l'argent d'un marchand." Sir William Temple calls the Bank of Holland, "A general cash, where every man lodges his money."

Fr. Casse, caisse; It. Cassa. Hence Fr. Caissier quaisier; It. Cassiere, with us Cashier; qd. caparius, i. e. qui capasum custodit; all from the L. Copea.—Sk. and Men. See CASH.

CASH, or CASHIER, v. To annul or annu-
CASSATE,* ad. v. hilate; to render useless or —ION. unserviceable; to dismiss or discharge from service; to disband.

**Hammond*.

From the L. Casus; "from Casus is casum, whence (as Priscian teaches, lib. xi.) casum, in the same manner as from defectio, instead of defectio, we have defectus."—Voss. From the L. Casus, which signifies, vain, useless, good for nothing, says Casen. has been formed the Bar. L. v. Casus, casare; and thence the Fr. Casser, "to ease, to casser, discharge, turn out of service." It was written To cash, (Goldyng;) To casser, (Warner;) and now To quash, (qv.)

CASK, s. -ET, s. v. Certain vessels for wine and other liquors are called casks. But caskets are used for depositing letters, trinkets, jewels, &c.

Casket is the dim. of cask.

Fr. Casque or casque, Sp. Casco, Men. derives thus, Cadus, cadens, cecus, casus. Sk. says, from the L. Cadus, (see CADU.) or from the Fr. Casse; It. Cassa, capsa, qd. Cassa, capsa, cassica, vel Capsica vini. See CASU. IN—(En—)

CASK, s. CASQUET. A case, sc. for the head; an inclosure, cover or protection for the head.

Fr. Casque; Sp. -co; a helmet, or head-piece. Men. and Sk. from the L. Cassis; though the latter observes, that in Sp. Casco, (and also in Fr. Casque), testam notare; and what is cassis, but capitis testis? See the preceding CASK.

CASSOCK, s. A cassock, tunica longior, is—

A long cloak or vestment; used by a soldier or clergyman.

Fr. Jaque, casaque; It. Giacco, casacco; Sp. Jaca, casaca; Ger. Kasack, jacke; D. Kasacke, kajacke, jacke; Eng. Cassock and jack. Jun. adapts from Voss., that the parent of all these words is the Gr. Kasos, whence the L. Casa, app. gen. to any thing which covers, (sive domus est, sive vestis—Wach.); and that jack is corrupted from kajacks. (See Voss. De Vitulis Ser. lib. 3, in v. Casubula.) Voss. is supported by other learned names—See Men. and Wach. Of jack, jaque, &c. Sk. says, quod si omnia à L. Sagum. Wach. prefers to deduce jack from the Gr. Iwyn, a covering.

CAST, s. s. To cast, is—To defeat, to -EN, s. beat, to vanquish, to over-ING come, to overpower. And -LING further—-AWAY, s. ad. To decide the victory, to determine it, to declare or pronounce to be defeated or overcome; to condemn. And thus gen.—

To decide or determine; to condemn.

To cast an account,—from the old manner of calculating, (see To CALCULATE), —is, to tell the sum, to reckon, to compute.

To cast (sc.) fused metal into a mould,—is to form or fashion the mould or model; to mould or model; to fix or settle the form, the features, the parts or proportions, and even the hue, or complexion.

To cast the mind, or thoughts,—is, to reflect, meditate, consider, contrive; to project.

With Eng. prs. subjoined, it is equivalent to certain compounds of the L. Jacere, to throw.

Thrown or cast from or away from; abject.

Thrown or cast down; dejected, met.

To cast or throw out; to eject, to expel, lit. and met.

To cast or throw in; to inject, lit. and met.

To cast or throw against; to object, lit. and met.

To cast forth or forward; to project, lit. and met.

To cast back; to reject, met.

To cast under; to subject, met.

It has many consequential usages, and is employed with various subauditions; some of the former are derived from wrestling, where the party cast or thrown, is the defeated, beaten, vanquished party.

Sw. Kasta; Dan. Kaste. Itho thinks that we owe this word to the Normans, since he cannot discover that our ancestors, the Anglo-Saxons, ever used it. Fore-Mis-Over-Out-Re-Un-Up

CASTIGATE, v. To chasten, to purify, -ION. to amend, to correct, to chastise.

-OR. Fr. Chastier; It. Castigare; Sp. -ar; D.

-ORY. Kastiden, Ferottus thinks L. Castigare, to be comp. of Castum agere.

CASTLE, s. A castle (Cot.) is properly CASTELLAN. a house furnished with CASTLED. towers, encompassed by CASTLE-BUILDER. walls and ditches; and -BUILDING. strengthened by a moat or donjon in the midst.

Castle-building, met.—Raising lofty structures, forming grand projects, with no foundation to rest them upon.

CASTRAMETATION, s. Castra metare, CASTRENSIAL. tari; to measure out a camp.

CASTRATE, v. -ION, s. To cut out, to strike out, to exterminate, to expunge.

Var. thinks that castrare is manifestly from castus, quod castrando vis libidinis extinguitur.

CASTREL, s. See KESTREL.

CASUAL, ad. See CASE. Mis-

CASUIST, v. s. One learned, skilled in

-ICAL. cases, sc. of conscience: dexterous,

-RY. subtle in arguing upon them.

-ICALLY.†Milton. †Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Casu-iste; It. & Sp. -ista. See CASE.

CAT, s. Cat,—a double trivet, so called

-T-TISH, ad. because it always falls on its

-LING. feet, as the animal is said to do.

-S-PAW. Cat-call,—an instrument, to

-ERWAUL, v. imitate the call or cry of the

-CAL, s. v. animal.

Cat's-paw,—(common in vulgar speech, but not in writing.)—the tool, the instrument; derived probably from the fable, in which the Ape employs the Cat to pick the chestnuts from the hot coals with her paw, while he is quietly cracking them.

Catipan,—to turn catipan, Sk. interprets deficere, transigere, αποστειν, to fall off, to apostatize. "There is a cunning, which we in England call, the turning of the cat in pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him."—Bacon.

Cat-stick,—Mr. Gifford believes to be what is now called buck-stick, used by children in the game of tip-cat, or kitt-cat. See Catipan and Cat-stick in Nares.

* Dryden.

Fr. Chat; It. Gatto; Sp. Gato; Mid. Gr. Kattre; Mid. L. Catus, catto, cattus; A. S. Cat; D. & Dan. Kat; Ger. Katze; Sw. Katt, katta. Catto, fells, a cat, is as old as Martial, (lib. xiii. ep. 69.) Wach. observes that this word is derived by many learned men from the Ger. Wachlen, (also written Ge-wachlen), to watch; whence the Fr. Guetier, to watch; and from guetier, he adds, Du Cange, and Sk. have not hesitated to deduce cat. Others refer to L. Catus, acutum videns, sharp-sighted.

CATA-BAPTIST, s. An abuser or profaner of baptism.

Gr. Kata, against, and βαπτίζ-ειν, to baptize.

CATA-CHRESTICAL, ad. -LY. Fr. Catachrèse, "the abuse, or necessary use of one word for lack of another more proper."

—Cot. Gr. Kαταχρησις, L. Catachresis.

CATA-CLYSM, s. A deluge.

Gr. Κατακλυσμος, diluvium, (kata, and κλύειν, abluere, diluere, to wash away.)

CATA-COMBS, s. Hollow places, against —(sc.) the sides of caverns, for depositing the bodies of the dead.

Fr. Catacombæ; It. -ba; (kata, and κμβος, a hollow.)

CATA-COUSTIC, s. See ACOUSTIC.

CATA-DUPE, s. App. to certain falls of the Nile; and also to those who live near them.

Fr. Catadupe; (kata, and δουπος, sonitus rei alius, the sound of any thing dashed.—Lennepe.) Used by Homer to express the crash of falling trees.

CATA-LEPSY, s. Fr. Catalepsie. See EPILEPSY.

CATA-LOGUE, s. v. A collection, sc. of names or descriptions, or both; an enumeration, a record of them.

Gr. Καταλογος; L. Catalogus; Fr. -gue; It. & Sp. -go, (kata, and λεγειν, to gather, to collect.)

CATA-PHRACT, s. "Men of armes (cataphracti equites), harnessed all over with good corselets, and bard about with guards of steele; about whom also there went thin plated hoopes, made fit and handsome for the bending of their bodies, and running all over their limmes; so that which way soever they had need to stirre and moove their joynts, the apparrell or habiliment would agree thereto, the joyning thereof was so meet, and served so well every way."—Holland, Ammianus.

It. Cata-palla; Sp. -pales; Gr. Καταφρακτος, καταφρασσειν, (from kata, and φρασσειν, to block up), to protect, to fortify. Undique armis munitus.

CATA-PLASM, s. App. medically—To substances formed or moulded into one mass; a poultice or plaster.

Fr. Cataplas-me; It. & Sp. -ma; Gr. Καταπλασμα, (kato, and πλασσειν, to form or mould.)

CATA-PULT, s. An engine from which, orig., darts, (tela,) subsequently stones and other hard and heavy missiles, were thrown.

Fr. Catapulte; It. Sp. & L. Catapulta; Gr. Καταπυλτης, (kata, and πωλλειν, to shake, to brandish, to hurl.)

CATA-RACT, s. App. to—The dash of a waterfall; to the waterfall itself. Also app. to a disease of the eye, (q. kata-ρacton, confounding the sight.)

Fr. Catar-acte; Sp. -alas; Gr. Καταρακτης, praeruptus, ac praecipit in flumine locus.—Foss. Καταρασσειν, (kata, and ρασσειν, tundere, collidere, to beat or dash.)

CATARRH, s. A defluxion. The ads.

-AL. are used by medical writers.

-OUS. Fr. Catar-rhe; It. & Sp. -ro; Gr. Καταρρην, (kata, and ρην, to flow.)

CATA-STROPHE, s. A turning about; a revolution; gen. app. to the final turn or change of events, the change which produces the final event.

Fr. & Sp. Catastro-phe; It. -fe; Gr. Καταστροφή, (kata, and στρεφειν, to turn.)

CATCH, v. s. To catch seems, by usage, to -ER, s. comprise the force of—to stop and -FOLL. to hold; it implies that the thing -WORD. caught is in motion, and is not merely stopped but held. To stop a ball is not to catch it; though stopped, it may not be held. To hold a ball is not to catch it; the motion of it is neither expressed nor implied.

To catch, (sub. in a trap or snare,) is to entrap, to ensnare.

To catch hold, is a familiar expression, and implies that the thing caught is to be held from moving.

To catch may sometimes be supplied by—to seize, to grasp; and is sometimes used as equivalent to—merely, to overtake. Also to have or use the sudden motion of one who catches, or tries to catch any thing; to snatch, to jerk.

In Sw. Katea is—Instrumentum piscatorium.—Ihre. Jun. says, akin to D. Ketsen, to chase. And he adds, Katexein, (to detain, to obtain, to occupy,) borrows its tenses from the unused theme Kate-xein, whence the Eng. Catch has been contracted. The D. Ketsen, sectari, is the A.S. Gyt-is-an, petere, appetere; and this is formed upon the v. Gyt-is-an, to get. We say, A catch, a get, a gain.

CATE-CHISE, v. To catechise, primarily,

-ISATION. is to sound against, (sc. the

-ISER, s. ears of those whom we wish

-ISING. to teach, i. e. to teach or in-

-ISM, s. struct orally, to give oral in-

-IST. struction.) It is then app.

-ISTICAL. thus—

-ISTICALLY. 1. To teach that, which re-

-ETIC, ad. quires to be repeated again

-ETICAL. and again, to those who require

-UMEN. to be taught again and again,

-UMENIST. to the very echo; to have their instruction sounded and resounded into their ears.

2. To teach the first elements or rudiments of any art or science, and part of the Christian religion.

3. To catechize, i. e. cona. To question, (as children usually are, when taught the Catechism of their religion,) to examine.

Catechumen, pt. pass. Κατηχουμενος: one receiving oral instruction; instruction in the rudiments (of religion).

Fr. Catech-iser; It. -issare; Sp. -isar; Gr. Κατηχων, catere, incutere; from kata, and ηχω, echo, sonus repercutus, (from αγειν, frangere).—Learn. Un-

CATEGORY, s. In Logic,—substance, -IC-AL quality, quantity, relation, time, -ALLY place, action, passion, position, -ALNESS, and habit, are called the categories; qd. a collection, a classification of all "the objects of human thought."

* Marvell.

Gr. Κατηγορια, from kata and αγειν, (from αγειν, docere,) to bring together; to collect into one.

CATENATION, s. A conjunction or connexion; like that of the links of a chain. See CHAIN.

L. Catenas; Gr. Καθμα, montis descendens, Καθμα, (kata and ιαμα,) demitto, descendo. Con-

CATER, v. a. To cater, gen. is—To buy CATE, s. or sell, to purchase or provide; -ERER to furnish or supply, food, enter- -ERESS, tainment, &c.

D. Kater. Sk. remarks, that there are some who write Acates (see ACHATES); and if this, he adds, can be right, I should deduce the word from the Fr. Achéter, achet, or achapt, emtio, from the v. Achepier, acheler, emere. Achepier, however, he derives from the Mid. L. Adcaplare. But in A. S. Cæpian, cæcpian, is "emere, vendere, mercatam facere, to buy and sell, to traffic, whence our Chapman."—Som.

CATER-COUSIN. Quatre cousin.

CATERPILLAR, s. A grub, a plant.

Jun. writes Cartepillar, or Cartepillar, perhaps from the D. Kerten, karten, circumtendere, quod herbas, et fruges, atrodendo circumtendat, because it shears herbs and fruits, by eating and devouring. T. H. (in Sk.) thinks it is chair pelisse, i. e. capio pilosa. Mina. and Sk. chatter-prime, so called, ab hirsutis istius animalis, felis simil. Under the word Cater, cates; Jun. says, Hence it is manifest why volvox, vel convolvulus, is in Eng. called caterpillar, because it destroys the food of man and beast, as it springs from the earth.

CATHARTICAL, ad. -TICS. Purifying or purging, cleansing.

Gr. Καθαρειν, from kata and αιρειν, tollere; whence Καθαρισμ denotes—placid tollere, nempe curare, and thus, To purge, to cleanse.

CATHEDRAL, s. ad. -DRATED. * The seat; the seat of episcopal authority.

* Whitelock.

Cathedral church.—Fr. Eglise cathédrale; It. Chiesa cattedrale; Sp. Iglesia catedral; D. Kathedrael kerk, from the Gr. Καθεδρα, (kata, and εδρα, a seat, from εδω, to sit.) So called (says Jun.) ab episcopali cathedra; in the same sense in which the Saviour of the world employs It (Matt. xxiii. 2): "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat;" ἐκ τῆς Μωϋσῆος καθέδρας.

CATHOLIC, s. ad. Catholic,—all, the -LY. whole, universal; less strictly, —NESS. general, common. Catholic laws -AL, ad. (Ray) are general laws. -ISM, s. Fr. Catholizer (Cot. says) is To catholicize it, to play the catholic, to become a catholic.

"1st, The term Catholic Church denotes the whole number of those who shall finally attain unto salvation.—2dly, The Christian Church only, as distinguished from that of the Jews and patriarchs of old.—3dly, That part of the Universal Church of Christ, which in the present age is now living upon earth.—4thly, That part of the Universal Church of Christ, which in the present generation is visible upon earth, in an outward profession of the belief of the Gospels, and in a visible external communion of the word and sacraments.—The Church of Rome pretends herself to be—This Whole Catholic Church, exclusive of all other societies of Christians."—Clarke.

Fr. Catholique; It. & Sp. Catolico; D. Katholisch; Gr. Καθολικος, (kata, and δλος, all), the whole, universal. Mis-

CATOPTRICS, s. Vision by reflection.

Gr. Κατοπτρικη, κατοπτρον, a mirror, (kata, and οπτειν, to look at or against.)

CATTLE, s. Now app. to—Kine, horses, and some other animals, appropriated to the use of man.

In D. Chattels, bona mobilia, and cattle, pecus, are called by the same name, Katelen, kaicelen. Spel. says, all goods movable or immovable: yet properly that kind of goods which consists in animals, a quorum capitibus, res ipse, were as some times called capita, at others, capitatia; by syncope, capatia and catatia, whence our Law term Cattalia, in Eng. Chattels. The early inhabitants of the earth, he adds, estimated their wealth from the number of their animals. Sk. derives from capita, qd. capitalia, because they belong by law ad caput, i. e. personam.

CAVALCADE, s. App. to—A number of persons proceeding together on horseback. See CAVALIER.

Fr. Caval-cade; It. -cata, from the L. Caballus; Gr. Καβαλλος, a name app. to the meaner sort of horses, from the Dor. Καβαλλειν, for καταβαλλειν, to throw or cast down.—Voss.

CAVALIER, s. ad. A horseman, one who -ING, ad. rides or is on horseback. Then -ISH. app. cons. to— -LY. One, who has the gallant spirit -O. and manners of men having the

CAVALRY, rank of horseman.

Cavalier, ad.—Gallant, brave, high-spirited, haughty, disdainful.

Cavalry, s.—Fr. Cavallerie, horsemanship, also horsemen.—Cot. App. to—military companies of horsemen. See CAVALCADE.

Fr. Chevalier, caval-ier; It. -iere; Sp. -iero; immediately from the Fr. Cheval; It. & Sp. Cavalla; L. Caballus.

CAUDAL, ad. -DATE. Having a tail, or something terminating like, or otherwise resembling, a tail.

L. Cauda, a tail. Of unknown etymology.

CAUDLE, v. s. A warm drink—of eggs, wine, bread, sugar, and spices.

Fr. Chadeau, from Chaud, L. Calidus, warm.—Sk.

CAVE, v. s. Any thing hollow; a hollow place, for men, or other animals, to take shelter or refuge.

-ERNED, ad. fuge.

-ERNOUS. To cave, — to hollow: "The moulder'd earth had cav'd the bank."—Spenser. Also, to enter into, to dwell in, caves.—Shak.

Fr. Cave; It. Cava; Sp. Cueva, cava; L. Carus. Var. and Festus think, a chao dictum. See CHAOS. Con-Ex-En-In-

CAVIL, v. s. To cavil is — To guard against imaginary or trifling risks or difficulties; to invent trifling difficulties; to raise captious objections, objections merely verbal; — to carp, to wrangle.

-ATORY, ad. † Ayliffe. † Milton. † Prynne.

Fr. Cavil-ler; It. -lare; Sp. -ar; L. Cavillor, from Cavere. Cavere propriè est jurisconsultorum; Cavillari est leguleiorum ac rabularum forensium. — Voss. Cavere, is to be wary, to be circumspect, to provide against risks or contingencies. Cavillari, to cavil, as above explained.

CAUL, s. Caul is app.—To that wherein the bowels are wrapped; and also to a part of the head-dress or cap, which incloses the head.

Sherwood writes, Caul or Kell,—wherein the bowels are wrapped. Bullokar. Kell; "the caule about the paunch of a hart or stagge." The Geneva Bible (Hoses): "I will break the caule of their heart." Perhaps a misprint, as in ten other instances it is Kali or Kai, and once Caile. The Septuagint, κατακτείνω, (from κατ, and κτείνω, to shut up, to close, to inclose.) The L. Vulg. Interiora. Jun. says, perhaps the same with Cowle, (qv.) Sk. from the A. S. Cylla, uter, a bag. In Ger. Kell-en is cavare, to hollow, which, Wach. thinks, is from the Gr. καίλω, hollow.

CAULI-FLOWER, or COLE-FLOWER, s. A kind of kale, (qv.) bearing a large white head, or, as Evelyn calls it, a pome.

CAUPONIZE, v. To procure victuals, to provide and supply with articles of food, drink, &c.; — to act as suttler or victualler.

* Warburton.

L. Caupo, a suttler, a victualler.

CAUSE, v. s. To cause, as used by Spenser, -ABLE, ad. (F. Q. b. iii. c. 9.) is merely to -AL, ad. give causes or reasons (in excuse), to excuse or make excuses. -ALITY. Cause may be described to be— -ALLY. A general term, denoting the case, the state or condition, of circumstances, of things, preceding, preventing, premoving, -ATION. pre-acting, to or towards, a -ATIVE. change of case, state, or condition of circumstances; an -ATOR. acting, moving to, effecting, producing; an agent effecting; the feeling moving the agent; that which—the reason, the will, which—moves, induces, prevails, determines; the origin or source. The cause or case in Law, the plaintiff's case or cause, are terms used indiscriminately. The cause of a person or party, is the case, the state or condition of things, or circumstances, in which he is, or endeavours to be.

"According to Aristotle, a cause, or τὸ αἰτιον, is of four kinds: 1st, the material, which denotes the relation in which marble stands to the statue that is formed of it.—2d, The formal, which denotes the cause of every thing being precisely what it is, according to the Peripatetic doctrine, that every phenomena in nature is a consequence of the operation of the two principles, matter and form.—3d, The efficient, or that from which effects proceed;—and 4th, The final, which expresses the purpose or object intended to be accomplished by these effects."—Scot. Elements of Intell. Philosophy.

* Sir P. Sidney.

L. Causa. Perottus (see Martin, in v. Causa), enumerates many proposed etymologies. 1. Some think it is so called, a Chao, detracta aspiratione, because Chaos was the first cause of all things. 2. Others, from the Gr. Kavēis, which signifies heat or burning, because a cause is that which kindles and inflames us (accendit inflammaturque) to action. 3. Some, a caevendo, because it is that quæ cavet, that any thing should be done, or not be done. 4. Some, a caus; — and this Martin himself prefers as the most simple, ut primo sit (causa, sc.) quod contigit, accidit. Occasio, (of obvious etymology,) he observes, is also used pro causâ et origine. Isidorus says also, (see Voss.) causâ sit, quicquid cecidit, id est, accidit. Voss, is in favour of caiso, seu quaiso, as the ancients wrote, for quæso. And causiv, he remarks, (whence causa, causa), is nothing more than quæso, seu petero. — See Martin, and Voss; and for the various usages of causa, see Gessner. Ac-Con-Ex-Re-Un-

CAUSEY, s. -WAY. App. to—A way, a path, a road, prepared, hardened: formed of stones, or other consolidated substance.

D. Kautelje, kauersijde. Via strata.—Kilian. Fr. Chausée; It. Calzata; Sp. Calzada; Mid. L. Calceata. Via calce strata.—Sk. Spel. observes, Every way—calceata est, but not calceata: is trodden, but not paved. It is not, therefore, called a calceando, but a calceando, because it is fortified with stones or some other hard substance, quasi calce, against the injuries of waggons and passengers. Som., a calce, because they are rendered firm with stones, which the Fr. call Chaus, lime.

CAUSTIC. See CAUTERY, infra. En-

CAUTEL, s. Warburton observes, that -OUS, ad. cautel signifies only "a prudent -OUS-LY. foresight, or caution; but passing -NESS. through Fr. hands it lost its -TY.* innocence, and now signifies, fraud, deceit." And Mr. Gifford, "Our older writers seem to have included in this word not only the sense of wariness, but also something artful and insidious ingrafted upon it."

CAUTION, v. s. To caution another is,— —AL. to tell him to be cautious, provident, circumspect, wary; to —TIOUS. tell him to secure himself, or to —TIOUS-LY. take measures for his security —NESS. or safety. To apprise or warn

CAUTY, ad.* him of his danger; and—simply—to give notice or warning; though with a subaudition of danger. See CAUTEL.

**Mir. for Mag.*

L. Cavus, cautum; It. & Sp. Cauto. Var. says, a cavo, and the reason seems to be, that men, in early ages, were said cavere (to be cautious against) evils and dangers, heat and cold, &c. when they betook themselves in cavos suos recessus, et his sese tuerentur: into their hollow retreats, and secured or protected themselves there. CAW, s. v. Also written Kaw, (qv.) The cry of the different species of crow. Vox a sono ficta.

CEASE, v. s. To leave, to quit, to dis—LESS. continue, to desist or forbear to —LESSLY. do or from doing any thing; to —ING. leave or depart from; to end or put an end to; to stay, to stop or put a stop to.

Fr. Cesse; Sp. -ar; It. & L. Cessare, from Cedere, or rather the supine, Cessum. Cessare is cedere à labore, to go away from labour. Un-

CEASURE. See CÆSURE.

CECITY, s. CECUTENITY. Blindness. Fr. Cécité; L. Cæcitas, blindness; (Cæcus, blind.) Of uncertain etymology. Martinus observes, cæcus sane est ejus etymology.

CEDAR, s. The tree so called. Evelyn —LIKE. uses cedry, as the ad.; but Milton, CEDARE, cedarna.

Fr. Cédre; It. & Sp. Cedra; D. Ceder-boom; A. S. -beom; L. Cedrus; Gr. Kedron. Perhaps from ka-eiv, urere, to burn.—Foss. and Martinus.

CEDE, v. To go away from, to quit or CESSION. forsake, to yield or give up, to —BLE. resign.

—IBILITY. Cession,—A going away from, quitting or forsaking, yielding, giving up, resigning. Yielding or giving way, sc. to pressure, to any external force.

Fr. & Sp. Céder; It. & L. Ced-ere, to go, to go away. Cede appears to be of very modern introduction. The comps. are numerous: Ac- Ante-Ces- De- Ex- Inter- Pre- Pro- Re- Retro- Se- Sub- (sc:) Sur- Of these Ex- Pro- and Suc- are written improperly, ceed.

CEDUOUS, ad. Fit for cutting or felling. L. Cedus, from cad-ere, to cut, to cut down.

CEIL, v. -ING. Ceiling seems to have been app. gen. to any work in wood or timber, whether roof, sides, or floor: it is still app. to the planking of a ship. More com. to—

The cover of the top of a room or apartment; beneath an upper flooring or outer roof.

In neither Sk. nor Jun. Barrett has "Stieling, planking or boarding—also materiaris crustatio." In the Bible, 1531, it is written Syll; in the Geneva, 1561, Sile; (once in the margin Cieled, and in the text, Cieling;) in Barker, 1583, Siel. Min. says, "to siele, v. to wainscot." Som., that A. S. Syl, is "basia, limen, the ground-post, a sill, sell, or ground-sill. Also, columna, a pillar. Hercules syla, Hercules' pillars." In Sw. Syll, according to Ihre, is—the foundation of any thing; whence he adds, in Ulpilas, Sulan, galsan, fundare, to found, or lay the foundation. Jun. in his Gloss. Goth. suggests that Syl may be from Gr. Σύλον, signum, or from βλν, any wooden material fit for building. In Bible 1551, (2 Chron. iii. 5,) "he syled with fyre tree," is in the Septuagint, ἐξολωρε ὕλον καύματος. In Jer. xli. 14, "the sylynges maketh he of ceders," is ἐξολωμενα εν κέδρον. Dr. Jamieson suggests D. Siele, Indusium, subuculum. The Old Eng., he says, is a canopy: "A cyll of a cloth of gold."—Loisand. Though Cot. explains Fr. Ciel, to signify heaven, and also a canopy, and the inner roof of a room of state, &c. he discountenances the supposition that they are the same word, by observing that they have different plurals; the first having ciens, and the second ciels. North writes Seeling.

CELATURE, s. A carving or engraving.

L. Calare, calatum, to cut, to carve, to grave, to engrave.

CELEBRATE, v. To call, to declare, —ING. to proclaim, to make known or —ION. renowned; to spread the praise, —ER. fame, or reputation. Also— —BRITY. To treat as worthy of honour, —BRIOUS.* with public ceremony, with so— —BRE,* ad. lemn rites.—**Crammer*. †K. Hen. —BRABLE.† VIII. †Chaucer.

Fr. Célébrer; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Celebrare, celebratum; Gr. Κλε-ειν, dicere, prædicare. Re-Un.

CELERITY, s. App. to the motion of any thing driven on, forced or struck on:—Speed, swiftness, velocity.

Fr. Célérité; L. Celer, from Κελλ-ειν, impellere, to drive on, urge on, impel.

CELESTIFY,* v. The ad. in application, —TIAL, ad. s. equivalent to the Eng.—

—TIOUS.† Heavenly; having the qualities of the heavens; of the inhabitants of heaven.—Brown. †Boyle.

Fr. Célest-é, -tal; It. & Sp. -ale; L. Cælum, Gr. Κοιλον, i. e. cavum, hollow.—Foss.

CELIBATE, s. -ACY. Celibate was app. as Celibacy now is, to—

The state of being unmarried; or of— One who has not—one who is without—the nuptial bed; who is single, solitary, without a wife, unmarried. In English Law, the male is called a bachelor; the female, a spinster.

Fr. Célib-é, -ale; It. & Sp. -e, -alo; from L. Celebs. Α κειω, vel κοιτη, of λεγω, est κοινη; quæ ei λέγουσιν κοινή γαμήνη, deest lectus nuptialis, because the nuptial bed is wanting to him.—Voss. And to the same purport is Scaliger, (ad Festum.)—See Martinius.

CELL, s. v. A place of concealment, of -AL, s. secrecy, of retirement, of se-
-ARAGE, s. clusion, of store; a secret or -ARER, s. retired apartment, or habitaa retreat.

Fr. Cellule; Sp. Celula; It. & L. Cella, & celendo. Festus.—Cella, quod ea celantur, quæ velimus esse occulta; because in it those things may be concealed, which we wish to be hidden; to be out of sight.

CELSITUDE, s. Fr. Celsitude, highness, excellency, (terms conferred on princes.)—Cot. *Chaucer, &c.
L. Celsus, high, lofty.

CEMENT, v. s. An adhesive, sticking, fastening, binding compost, of sand, lime,
or other materials.

Fr. Cément or Ciment, cimenter; It. Cemento; L. Cementum, so called because cæsum, i. e. cut, sc. from larger stones; and app. (see Voss.) to those small stones or pieces or fragments of stones, which were used for filling up, stowing, cramming, together with other materials.

CEMETERY, s. -ITERIAL. The place of burial.

Fr. Cimetière; It. ero; Sp. Cementerio; L. Cementarium. Κοιμητήριον, qd. dormitorium, a place to sleep in, (from κοιμᾶν, to sleep.) App. by Christians, to whom death is but a sleep, dormitio, (Voss.)—as above.

CENATION, s. -TORY, ad. "Cenatory convention,"—a meeting for supping or taking supper together, or in common.

L. Cæna, a supper; perhaps from Gr. Κοινῶν, common,—a common meal.

CENO-BY, s. A common life, or mode of -BITES. life; a life under common rules
-BIT-IC. and rites.

-ICAL. Gr. Κοινοβιον, from Κοινος, common, and βιος, life.

CENO-TAPH, s. An empty tomb;— erected in honour of one to whom the rites of burial had been performed elsewhere; or of one, to whom no rites of burial had been performed at all.

Fr. Cénolaphe; Gr. Κενοτάφιον, from κενοῦ, empty, and ταφος, a tomb.

CENSE, s. Any thing burned; any per-
-ER. fumed, aromatic, odoriferous thing,
-ING. burned, sc. in divine honour.

Fr. En-cens, censer; It. Incenso; Sp. Encienso. Jun. says, that Thus was, by the writers of the middle age, called Incensum; Sk. adds, quia (sc.) incenditur, hoc est, adoleatur; because it was burnt. En-In-Re-

CENSE, s. Cense is used as equivalent
-ION. to—

-UAL, ad. Rate, tax, assessment.

From the L. Censere, of unknown etymology. (A. S. Cennan?) Festus; censere nunc significat putare, nunc suadere, nunc discernere. And then, censio, estimatio. And Var.; censor ad cuius censionem, id est, arbitrium, censetur populus, i. e. a censor; one at whose arbitrement, or adjudication, the people were rated, taxed, or assessed. See CENSOR.

CENSOR, s. The popular usage (of cen- -IAL. soriosis) is deduced from that
-IAN. part of the censor's office, by -IOUS. which he "had authority to -IOUS-LY. degrade any senator, who did
-NESS. not worthily behave him-
-SHIP. self"—North. See CENSURE.

CENSURE, s. v. A censorious man is one dis--ABLE. posed to detect, and expose
-ABLENESS. faults; to pass severe judg-
-ER. ments; to degrade.

-ING. Censure,—censoris officium, vel etiam opus; i. e. animadversio, repre-hensio.—Gessner. In our old writers, to censure is merely—

To think, to form an opinion, to judge, to adjudge; and the s.—An opinion, a judgment. Now, the v. is,—

To judge unfavourably, to condemn, to reprehend, to blame.

CENTAUR, s. -Y. The Centaur, says
Voss. were certain inhabitants of Thessaly, the first people who were carried by bulls;
and because they were accustomed to goad
the bulls, (κεντρεῖν ταύρους,) they had their name thence. Palsphatus says that these Thessalians pursued on horseback certain wild bulls, and threw their spears or javelins at them; which gives the same etymology, though a different reason for it.

The herb is said to be so called, because Chiron, the Centaur, cured a wound in his foot with it.

CENTENARY, s. A hundred; a hun--ENNIAL. dredth. See CENTURION.

-ILOQUY. Fr. Centén-aire; It. ario; Sp. or;
L. Centenarius, from Centum, a hundred; Gr.
'Εκατόν, from 'Εκατ, proci; qd. remotissimum in calculating,) et inde eximie centum—Lemma.

Centiloquy, from Centum, and loqui, to speak, to discourse.

CENTINEL, v. s. -TRY. More properly written Sentinel, (qv.)

CENTO, s. Gr. Κεντρώον, orig. a needle, and in a secondary sense, a garment of patchwork, (sewed together by needles;) hence the word is met. app. to a poem comp. of verses or parts of verses taken and put together from other authors.

CENTRE, v. s. That point from which -AL. the circumference is everywhere
-ALLY. equidistant.

-ALITY. Centri-fugal,—flying from the

CENTUPLE, v. ad. -ICATE, v. To fold a hundred times; to repeat a hundred times.

L. Centu-plex, -plicatus, from Centum, (see CENTENARY), a hundred, and plicare, to fold.

CENTURION, s. -URY. So called from the number of soldiers, (centum, a hundred,) over which he was appointed. North uses Centener, from the Fr.

A century, is a hundred—of years, of men, of any thing. See CENTENARY.

Centuriator and centurist were names given to historians, who arranged their narratives into periods of centuries, or a hundred years.

CERE, s. To cere, is to wax, to smear or —ATE cover with wax; to close or fasten —EONS up, as with wax.

—CLOTH. L. Cera, wax; Gr. Κηρός, of uncertain —MENT. etymology. See SINCERE.

Cere-cloth, also written Sear-cloth. In A. S. Sere-cloth, is "a sere cloth, a cloth to wind or bind up a sore;" and Ser-cloth, is, "Ceratum, a Sear-cloth."—Som. Lye thinks the former is the original word. Sk. gives both, without deciding in favour of either. The D. call a Sear-cloth,—Een wachte kleed, a wax cloth. Jun. calls it medicamentum, consisting of oils, gums, and liquid mixed with wax. The Fr. Cérot, (Gr. Κηρόν; L. Ceratum;) Cot. calls, "a Sear-cloth or plaster made of wax, gum, or other cleaving simples." By cerements, Heath understands—the waxed winding-sheet, in which the corpse was inclosed, and sewed up in order to preserve it.

CEREALIOUS, ad. Of or pertaining to corn.

L. Cerealis, from Ceres; which Voss. thinks is from the ancient Cereus, quod creo significabat: quasi frugum creatrix, the creatress of the fruits of the earth. Var. and others think—à gerendo; (g changed into c.)

CEREBEL, s. The hinder part of the head: of the brain.

L. Cerebellum, from the Gr. Κεφα, caput, the head; Fr. Cérébelle.

CEREMONY, s. Ceremony is now app.

—DOUSLY. sacred rites or observances; in social or civil intercourse. Also—to the religious, sacred, rite or observance itself.

"I never stood on ceremonies," in Shak.'s Julius Cæsar, is explained by Mr. Steevens—"I never paid a ceremonious or superstitious regard to prodigies or omens." "Decked with ceremonies,"—i. e. ceremoniously, (sc.) with Cæsar's trophies.

Fr. Cérémonie—ie; It. & Sp. —ia; L. Cerimonia, ritus sanctus. Of the various etymologies, which Voss. repeats, he thinks that of Scal., though not free from doubt, the most probable. Scal. supposes the word to be so called from the ancient Cerne, that is, sanctus; unde in Sallustii carmine, cerne manus, i. e. sanctus bonusque. CESSE, s. Ont of all cesse,—Cot. says, sans cesse, ex-cess-ively, immoderate, out of all cesse and cry.

CESSION, s. See CEDE. De—Dis—

CEST, s. A girdle or zone.

L. Cestus; Gr. Κεστός. Cingulum acui plectum, and so called à κεῖταιν, i. e. pungere, quia acule compunctionibus elaboratur; because worked by the prickings of a needle. L. Cestus, is most com. used.

CETACEOUS, ad. Of the kind or class of whale.

L. Cete, (of uncertain origin,) a whale.

CHAFE, v. s. To warm, or cause to be —ER. warm;—Sk. says, by rubbing or —ING. friction; and also, (translato longius sensu,) to chafe, is used for—To kindle with anger.—And so it is now used—

To warm, heat, or inflame; to kindle, sc. with rubbing, friction, or attrition; (to rub,) and (met.) to warm, to kindle, with vexation, with anger.

Chaffer is used by Baker (Chronicle) simply for—A vessel; a dish or bowl.

To chafe or warm, so perfumes,—to incense; to perfume.

Fr. Chausfer, from Calfare, formed by contraction from Calfacere.—Men. En—In—

CHAFF, s. The husk or cover of corn--LESS. seed.

-Y. Met. chaff, or refuse,—that is to say, as things which are purged out and refused, when a thing is tried and made perfect.

A. S. Craf; D. Kaf; Ger. Kaf. Sk. and Lye think, from A. S. Caf, light, swift; because chaff, on account of its lightness, is moved swiftly in the air. Wach. prefers Ger. Kaw, hollow, empty, light;—est enim folliculus sine grano.

CHAFER, v. s. As now used—Those, -ING. who do not give the price asked, or -Y. who do not take that offered, but make repeated offers or repeated refusals, with a view to greater gains, are said to chaffer; so also to cheepen.

Lye (in Jun.) has no doubt,—from the Alam. Chapfaren, emere. In Go. Kaupon; A. S. Ceapan, cypian; Ger. Kaufen, to traffic, to cheap, to buy or sell. In Luke xix. 13.—Go. Kaupoth; A. S. Ceapstath; Wiclif, Chafare ye.

CHAGRIN, v. s. Not in our old dictionaries. Cot. explains it,—“To vex, disquiet, grieve, trouble, perplex, fill with care, heaviness, melancholy, anguish.”

Fr. Chagriner, the origin of which Men. confesses to be entirely unknown to him; he suggests, however, Carchinus, qui signifie un cancer, mauvaise humeur,—a cancer or ill humour.

CHAIN, v. s. -LESS.* A connected series of rings or links. App. met.—To a connexion of ideas or arguments; to any connected succession or series.

To chain, is to fasten, bind, or confine with a chain; to reduce to the state or condition of those chained; and, hence, to enslave, to enthral.—*Byron.

Chain is written pref. to—shot, pump, &c. Fr. Chain; Sp. Cadena; It. & L. Catena; Gr. Kathua, monile dependens, from kathiesthai, demittere, descendere. Gesner explains Catena,—vinculum ex ferreis annulis, a ligature of iron rings. Martilius,—connexus annulorum, i. e. as above. En- or In- Inter- Un-

CHAIR, s. v. A chair, Fr. Chaire, is a species of seat. It is not a fixed, but a movable seat, turned about and returned at pleasure; and from that circumstance it has its denomination. It is a chaer-seat.

Chair is used in old writers as we now use car, or chariot, (qqv.)

To chair, is a common expression used at elections for members of parliament, when the triumphant candidate is carried about in a chair.

From A. S. Cyran, acyran, to turn, to turn about, to turn backwards and forwards. See CHA. A.

CHAISE, s. App. to—A light carriage drawn by one horse or more.

Fr. Chaise, for Chaire, says Duchat, by the change of s into r, common in our language.

CHALDRON, s. A large measure, part. of coals, containing 2000 pounds. I know not whether from Fr. Chauderon, caldarium, so many coals as are sufficient for heating (calfaciendo) a large cauldron!—Sk.

CHALICE, s. -ED, ad. A cup—used in religious rites.

Fr. Calice; Sp. -iz; L. Calix; Gr. Kalyx, καλα το κελιεσθαι, from its roundness.

CHALK, v. s. To chalk, is to cover, or -Y. spread over with chalk; to mark -STONE. out a tract or course, as if with chalk.

L. Calc, calcis, from Gr. καλξ, which denotes a stone or the fragments of stone, of which cement or mortar is made. Scheidius observes, that from Κλαειν, frangere, pr. p. αελασας, is αλακος, which might give the contracted αλεξ, καλξ. See CALCAREOUS.

CHALLENGE, v. s. “To claim, challenge, lenge, demand, make title unto; -ER. also to challenge, accuse, appeach, complain, charge with, call in question for an offence, crime, or trespass.”—Cot.

D. Kalangerien; Fr. Chalanger, calanger. Chalanger or Chalenger, Men. thinks is derived from Calumnier, from L. Calumniari. Wiclif renders calumniam sustineret, he might be challengid,—calumniator, challenge thaili;—neque calumniam faciat, nether make ye fals challenge. Mis-

CHALYBEAN, ad. Chalybe, a kind of very hard iron, received its name from the Chalybians, a nation of Pontus or Scythia.—Voss. And see Virg. Geo. i. 58.

Fr. Chalibe.

CHAMBER, v. s. Any arch, or vault; -ER. any hollow, or cave or cavity; -ING. a protected, or secluded, or -LAIN. retired room or apartment; -LAINSHIP. whether for lodgment or council, private deliberation or converse—as a bed-chamber, a council-chamber.

To chamber, is merely, to enclose, shut up. A chamberer is app. by Shak. to those whose pleasures are in chambers; who are lascivious, wanton, intriguing. And so also chambering in the Bible. Chamber is much used pref., as chamber-maid. See CHAMFER.

Fr. Chambre; It. & Sp. Camera; Ger. & D. Kamer; Dan. mer; L. Camera; Gr. Καμαρα, forma, lectum arcuatum, opus fornicatum, aut similia structura. An arched covering, a vault, or similar structure. This, says Wach., is the first signification of the word, which afterwards was app. privately, to all (enclosed) parts or apartments of a house (cellas, conacula, dormitoria,) and publicly, ad conclavia rationum, et tribunalia principum.

CHAMELEON, s. Pliny calls it a kind of crocodile. The modern animal is a kind of lizard of a very harmless character.

Gr. Χαμαλεων, from χαμα, humis; and λεων, leo; humilis, sive pumilus leo: a low or little lion—creeping on the ground. Χαμαι, (Voss. remarks,) in composition, diminishes.

CHAMFER, v. s. To form or cut furrows, grooves, channels, wrinkles; to furrow, to groove.

Fr. “Chanfrain,—a chanfering, or a channel, furrow, hollow gutter, or streak, in stone-work.” &c.—Cot. From Fr. Chambré, cambré, curvatus, fornicatus, striatus, sulcatus, curved, vaulted, furrowed.—Sk. And thus of the same origin as chamber, though so diff. app.

CHAMLET, s. -ING. A kind of stuff made of camel's hair; a stuff made to resemble it. Chamleting, is app. to the waving pattern or figures upon it. See CAMEL.

CHAMOIZED, ad. Made of the hair of the Chamois. A word coined by Shelton.

CHAMP, v. -ER. To champ seems to be distinguished from to chaw; the latter being app. to the grinding action of the chaws or jaws; the former to the compression of the teeth, unaccompanied by the grinding motion of the jaw.

I know not, says Sk. whether from the Fr. Champier, depassere, vel depassi, (as Cot. explains it, to run, feed, graze or pasture in fields,) or from the Gr. Κατρεω, to devour greedily. χ

CHAMPAIN, s. or CHAMPAIGN, s. ad. A plain field, large plain, wide and level piece of ground.—Cot.

Champion ground, says Sk. from Fr. Champagne; It. Campagna, locus campestris, seu agris planities; an open plain. From L. Campus. See CAMP.

CHAMPERTY, s. -TOR. "Champerty, (campi partitio), is a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire, to divide the land or other matter sued for between them, if they prevail at law; whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense."—Blackstone.

Fr. Cham-partier, to divide a field into even or due parts.—Cot.

CHAMPION, v. s. "One that fights a -ness public combat in his own or another man's quarrel."—Cot.

To champion, (Shak.)—to challenge.

Fr. Champions; It. Campione.

CHANCE, v. s. ad. To befall, to happen, -ABLE to occur, sc. without design. See -ABLE. ESCHEAT.

-FUL. G. Douglas renders, Zephyris felicitibus, "to the chancy winds."

Chance is used elliptically for perchance, or by chance.

Chance, ("high arbiter," as Milton calls him,) and his twin brother "Accident," are merely the participles of Echeoir, cheoir, and cadere. To say, "It befel me by chance or by accident," is absurdly saying, "It fell by falling."—See Tooke. Mis-Be.

CHANCEL, s. A part of a church, so called, because formerly separated from the rest of the church, (a cancellis), by bars or lattice-work.—Sk.

From the Franco-Norm. Chancel; L. Cancelli. See CANCEL and CHANCELLOR.

CHANCELLOR, s. A name app. to -CELLERY. various officers, civil and ecclesiastical; e.g. Lord High

-CHERY. Chancellor; Chancellor of the Exchequer, of a University, Diocese, &c.

St. Edward Coke says, Our Lord Chancellor has his name from the highest point of his jurisdiction; viz. à cancellando; that is, from cancelling the king's letters patent, by drawing strokes through it like a lattice. But it is well known, as Hobbs observes, that Cancellarius was a great officer under the Roman empire, whereof this island was once a member; and that the office came into this kingdom, either with, or in imitation of, the Roman government.—Hobbs's Dialogue on the Common Law of England. This officer appears at first to have been a mere clerk, appointed to receive petitions addressed to the emperor, and to breviate the matter of them; and because he sat, (for whatever purpose,) within a room partitioned off by certain bars or lattice-work, cancelli, he was called Cancellarius.—See Spei. and Men., Jun. and Sk. Chancery seems to be an abbreviation of Chancellery.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, properly CHAUD-MEDLEY, s. Chance-medley,—a casual affray. Chaud-medley,—an affray in heat of blood or passion.—Blackstone.

Fr. Chaudemelle, caude melle; Mid. L. Calida melleia. (See Du Cange.) Chau or Caude, from Caldus or Calidus, hot, and melle, a squabble, a conflict, from melere, to mix.

CHANDLER, s. The word is not now -LY. limited to a maker and seller of

-Y. candles, but is app. to dealers

CHANDRY, s. in various articles of household consumption. Also to dealers in corn, as a corn-chandler.

Fr. Chandeller, qd. Candelarius.—Sk. "Chandeller, a candlestick; also a chandler, a candle-maker."—Cot. "A chandler,—a candlestick. Sheffield."—Rag.

CHANGE, v. s. To move from place to -ER. place; to cause to be otherwise -ABLE. or different from what it was; -ABLENESS. different in place, form, or -ING. colour,—in any mode or manner; to alter, to vary; to ex- -FUL. change, or give one thing for -LESS. another. -LING.

Changeling, s. in Spenser,—one left in change for another. An idiot is also so named.

Fr. Changer; It. Cangiare; formed, says Men., from Cambiare; and Cambiare from the L. Cambiare, and this from the Gr. Καμννεν, nectere, to bend. Counter-Ex-Inter-Over-Un-

CHANNEL, v. s. To hollow out; to cut out hollow tracts or courses,—in the earth, in rocks, &c. See CANAL and KENNEL.

Fr. & Sp. Can-al; It. -ale; L. Canalis.

CHANT, v. s. Chantry,—the place in -ER. which they chant. In Chaucer,—

-ERSHIP. an endowment for the payment of

-ICLEER. a priest, to sing mass agreeably

-MENT. to the appointment of the foun-

-RESS. der.—Tyrw.

-RY. Chant is more part. app. to—

CHANSON. The musical modulation of voice in the recitation either of prose or verse, used in the cathedral service.

Chanticleer,—avis seu gallus clarum canens,—a bird that chants clearly.—Sk.

Chauntement,—as we now use incantation.

—R. Gloucester and Chaucer. See CANT.

Chanson,—a song.

Fr. Chanter; L. Cantare, to sing. En- or In-

CHAOS, s. -OTIC. A huge, confused, or disorderly heap; a measureless, shapeless mass.

Chaos, properly, is a vast gap, vastus hiatus; but afterwards, rudis indigestaque moles, from the ancient Xa-eiv, to gape, to open.

CHA

CHAP, v. s. -LESS. To chap is to open; and is app. part. when the cold breaks the continuity of the skin; causes gaps, openings, or separations in it.

Chap, s.—App. to those parts of the face, which, by their separation, open (sc.) the mouth. Also the chops or chaps of a river, of the British Channel, &c. where the mouth or entrance opens between the opposite banks or shores into the river or channel.

From A. S. Yppan, ge-yppan, to open, to gape. Gap and chap vary only by pronouncing ch in the one, and g in the other. Under—

CHAPE, s. Fr. Chappe, the chape, or -EAU. locket of a scabbard.—Cot.

-LESS. Fr. Chapeau,—a hat, hood, or bonnet, for the head. See CAP.

CHAPEL, v. s. A chest, a repository,

-ELRY. sc. in which the reliques of the
-LAIN. martyrs were preserved; then
-LAIN-CY. any building, in which the ca--SHIP. pella (chests) of reliques were -RIES. laid; and again, any sacred place
-LET, s. or place of prayer.

Those, Spel. adds, were first called Capelani or Chaplains, who had the care of these capella of reliques; then those, who had the care of the sacred place where these capella were placed or deposited; and at length, all who ministered in sacred offices; clerici, nempe, et sacerdotes.

Fr. Chapelle; It. Capella; Sp. -illa: D. Kapelle. Spel. appears to have traced this word most satisfactorily. He derives it à Cloeroneano capedi, (see CAPSULE), et Pliniano capellit; = c eliminato. Capella, pro cistâ, scrinio seu repositoryo.—Gloss. Archæol.; and see Men. and Du Cange.

CHAPLET, s. A garland or wreath for the head. Fr. Chaplet, from L. Caput.

CHAP-MAN, s. Any one who traffics, -WOMAN. bargains, buys, or sells.

-MAN-HOOD. Chap is sometimes in common speech used alone; and is also app. to—One who is peculiar in his dealings, in his conduct.

A. S. Ceapman; D. Koopman; Ger. Kaufman, from A. S. Cyppan, (to traffic, bargain, buy, or sell;); and man. See CHEAP.

CHAPTER, v. s. -HOUSE. App. to—The divisions of a book into heads, or principal subjects; to an assembly of heads or chiefs of the church.

The v. is used by Dryden as the Fr. Chapitre, to school, to correct, to reprove; i. s. to act the part, to perform the part or office, of the heads or chiefs of the church.

Fr. Chapitre; It. Capitolo; Low L. Capitulum, from Caput, the head. See CAPITULATE.

CHAR, ad. -COAL. Char-coal is wood or other substance turned coal by fire.

In Chapman's Odyssey, b. iii., we find,—“Then Nestor broil'd them on the cole-turn'd wood.” See CAR, AJAR.

From A. S. Cyran, acyran, to turn, to turn about, turn backwards and forwards.—Tooke.

CHEAP, v. s. ad. To cheap, or cheapen, -EN, v. is—to buy or bargain (subaud. -ENER. well); to buy at a low price; at a -LY. lower price than first asked; to -NESS. lower the price or value, to bid or offer a lower price than asked, (to chaffer.)

Cheaping,—the place for buying and selling: the market or market place. "Thei camen to the cheping of Appius."—Wiclif.

"Good-cheap or bad-cheap,—i. e. well or ill-bargained, bought or sold; such were formerly the modes of expression. The modern fashion uses the word only for good-cheap; and therefore omits the epithet good as unnecessary."—Tooke.

A. S. Cyppan, to traffic, bargain, buy, or sell; D. Koopen; Ger. Kaufen. See CHAPMAN.

CHEAT, v. s. To cheat is to defraud; to -ER. effect or obtain by outwitting, -ABLENESS. "deceiving, deluding, or imposing upon."—Hammond.

Escheats (qv.) were a great source of power and revenue to our early kings; and escheatours, from the nature of their office, were exposed to many strong temptations: various acts of Parliament were passed to protect the people from their frauds and extortions; grievous complaints, it appears, having been made to the king of them and "their evil behaviour;"—many of them were said to "be insufficient and of light conscience, and to set their office to farm unto oppressors of the people."—See Rastall, Collection of Statutes, (Escheators.) Mr. Stevens, in a note upon Hen. IV. (after quoting from Mihl Munchance, and from Lord Coke's Charge at Norwich, 1607, certain passages to the purpose) observes, "Hence perhaps the derivation of the v. To cheat, which I do not recollect to have met with amongst our most ancient writers."—See note 4, on 2 Ft. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4. (a tame cheater.)

CHECK, v. s. To check or chequer is,—CHEQUER, v. s. To form into parts or divisions of different colours, -CHAMBER. like those of a chess board; -MEN. and thus lit and met—

To variegate, to diversify, to intermix.

The court of Chequer, or Exchequer, (shaccharium) is so called,— "from the chequed cloth resembling a chess board, which covers the table there; and on which, when certain of the king's accounts are made up, the sums are marked and scored with counters."—Blackstone, b. iii. c. 4.

To check an account, may be deduced immediately from the King's Court of Chequer or Exchequer, "the primary and original business of which is to call the king's debtors to account." And thus—

To check an account, is to examine it, to compare it with vouchers or documents.

Chess seems to have been immemorially known in Hindūstan by the name of Chatur-anga, that is, the four angas or members of an army, (sc. elephants, horses, chariots, and foot soldiers) Chaturanga was corrupted by the old Persians into Chattrang: the Arabs, who had neither the initial nor the final letter of that word, further altered it into Shattranj, which was adopted into the Mod. Pers., and at length into the dialects of India, and, by successive changes, has been transformed into eschere, shacchi, eches, ches, and, by a whimsical concurrence of circumstances, has given birth to the Eng. word Check, and even a name to the Exchequer of Great Britain. See Sir William Jones, on the Indian Game of Chess. Counter-

CHECK, v. s. To check the course, career, -FUL. or progress of any thing, is, -LESS. to stop, repress, moderate, re-MATE, v. s. strain it; as of a horse—by the bit; of our own passions—by self-command, self-government; of the passions of others—by reproof, by rebuke. And hence—to repress, to rebuke.

This application seems derived from that move at the game of chess, by which the King is put in check.

In Falconry, when the hawk stops his flight in pursuit of game to follow other prey, he is said to check. See TO CHECK, ante. Un-

CHECK, s. -ED. Is app. to the opposite sides of a cavity or aperture, as the cheeks are of the mouth. Thus a door-check; the cheeks of a grate or stove.

A. S. Ceac; D. Kaecke; A. S. Ceac-ban, cheek-bone. Jun. suggests, from the Gr. Καίειν, āinderē, conferere, comminere; since we crush and tear to pieces our food with our cheeks. It is perhaps formed of Chaw or chew, and ic, (i. e. cke), thus—Chewic, chewke, cheek.

CHEER, s. v. Sometimes Chear. The

-ER. Fr. Chère, Cot. explains,— "the -FUL. face, visage, countenance, fa- -FULLY. vour, look, aspect." Cheer is -FULNESS. now app. to— -ILY. That which acts, has an effect -ISHNESS. upon the face, the countenance; -LESS. —which enlivens, gladdens, ex- -LY, ad. av. bilarates, heartens;—which in- -LINESS. spires with mirth or gaiety, -Y, ad. with life, spirit, vivacity;—with courage, with fortitude: to—vivacity, gladness, mirth, spirit, courage; to the countenance which manifests the inward feelings; to the food, or entertainment which causes them. See CHERISH.

Fr. Chère; It. Cera; Sp. Xera. Sk. and Jun. think, from the Gr. Χαίρειν, gaudere. Men. and Du Cange say, from Cara, the visage, which they suppose to be derived from the Gr. Καρά, caput. Hispani et provinciales nostri, (observes the latter,) even now use Cara, pro vultu et facie. Dante,—

Cora. Is ancient Flemish also Cerre, vultus; to which the Old Eng. Cheere seems perfectly similar. En-Us-Up.

CHEESE, s. "Cheese made of cow's -CAKE milk, and the same pressed with the -Y hand."—Holland. Suetonius. Also of the milk of other animals.

Cheese-cake,—a cake made of curds (as cheese is) and other ingredients.

A. S. Cese; It. Cascio; Sp. Queso; L. Casus. Of the L. Casus, various etymologies have been proposed. Var.—Casus, à coacto lacte, ut coactus dictus, (lib. iv.) And—sic e lacte coacto, casus nomenclatur, (lib. v.) Jul. Scal.—à casus, (De Causa. lib. i. c. 34.) The language of Columella, (manu pressus,) and Suetonius, and also of Virgil, (pressi capta lactis,) cited by Voss. confirm the etymology of Var.

CHELE, s. A. S. Celan, to keel or cool; to chill.

CHERISH, v. From Cheer, (qv.) in -ER, its consequential usage, — To -ING, hearten, to encourage, to foster, -MENT,* to nourish, to protect. -FRANCE,† Spenser writes Cherry. *Spenser. †Chaucer.

CHERRY, s. ad. Cherry—the name of a fruit—is used pref. to denote the delicate rosiness of the fruit; as cherry-lip, cherry-cheek, &c.

Fr. Chéri-se, the fruit; -ier, the tree. It. Ciraglio and gio; L. Cera-sum, -ius; Gr. Kerasos. Of uncertain origin. Lennep says, Nescio an à Kerasos, corpora, to pluck.

CHERSONESE, s. Insular land; or land in form or state of an island; but united by a narrow neck to the main land. A peninsula.

Gr. Χερσονήσος, χερσονήσος, from χερρος or χερως, land, and νήσος, an island.

CHERUB, s. A celestial spirit, which, in -IC, the Hierarchy, is the first after -ICAL, the Seraphims.—Men. App. -IN, ad. s. (hyperb.) to—An infant of exquisite beauty and innocence.

Fr. Chérub-in; It. -ino; Sp. -in, from the Heb.

CHERUP, v. s. -ING. A word formed from the sound.—Jas. & Sk. See CHIRP.

CHESS, s. See CHECK. In some of our old authors written Chests.

CHEST,* s. Mischief.—*Chaucer. Gower.

Mr. Tyrw. interprets, Debate. In Cot. Chestivild, curstness, knavery, shrewdness, is from Cheestif, or Chéif. L. e. Callif, (qv.) and chest may have been adopted from Cheestif. The editor of P. Plouhman renders Cheste, chastening; it is more probably this word, denoting gen.—as above.

CHEST, s. v. -ING. A coffin was so called: now usually app. to—

A larger bin or box; a collection of boxes (sc. drawers); that part of the body that incases or incloses the lungs, the heart, &c.

L. Cista; Gr. Kista, so called, says Lennep, à κεῖν, movere in ambitu. Martin thinks, κερα to κεῖσθαι, because any thing may be hid in it. But it is also found in the A. S. Cyst; in Sw. Kista; Ger. Kaste; Dan. Kiste, of which the northern etymologists give no satisfactory account. Perhaps Cis-an, to cheese, to take; and con, to hold or contain; Cis- or cys-an, cys-ed, cyst.

CHEST-NUT, s. ad. The fruit of the tree, formerly called Chessen (Cot.) or Chestain, (Berners.) Both fruit and tree are now written Chest-nut.

Fr. Chastaigne; It. Cast-ugna; Sp. -ana; L. Castanea. It is, says Voss. from Castana, or Castanea, a city of Thessaly, where there is great abundance of them; but Pliny says, "the first chestnuts were knowne to grow about Sardinia, and from thence were brought, and therefore the Greekes call them Sardinian nuts," (l. xv. c. 33.)

CHEVALIER, s. -ROUS. "Fr. Chévalier, signifies properly a horseman; one that rides, or is on horseback; but part. and most com. a knight or cavalier."—Cot. See CAVALIER and CHIVALRY.

CHEVE, or CHIEVE, v. To bring to an CHIEVANCE. end, to accomplish, to finish; CHEVISANCE. and cons. to acquire, to obtain; to procure, to gain. "Ill mote he cheve."—Chaucer.

To bring to an end or close; to finish, to end, to conclude—sc. an agreement, a bargain; to agree together, to combine, to accord.

Chévisaunce is used as equivalent to achievement; also to an agreement, a bargain, a purchase, a gain.

These words are common in our old writers, from Chaucer to Spenser.

Fr. Chever, achever, to bring to a head, or an end. See CHIEF. A—

CHEVEREL, ad. s. "Thy chevrill conscience," (Shak.)—i. e. stretching, pliant, like kid-leather.

Fr. Chèvre, capra; Fr. Chevèreux; It. Ciaverello; L. Capreolus.

CHEVRON, s. -ED, ad. A transverse beam or rafter of a house is so called from some likeness to a kid or goat; which I (says Sk.) am stupid enough not to understand.

Chevroned,—transversed like beams or rafters.

Fr. Chevron, a kid, from Chèvre, capra.

CHEW, v. See CHAW.

CHICANE, v. s. To invent subtrefuges, -ER. artful pretexts; to wrangle, or dispute sophistically, litigiously, with -ERY. intent to evade or postpone a judgment or decision.

Fr. Chicaner. Men. without deciding, produces the Gr. Χίκανος, a Sicilian, and Δικανος, litium sectator, a contriver of litigation. The former, because the Sicilians were notorious for their treachery, and skill in deception. Wach. gives the same origin (sc. Χίκανος) to the Fr. Sicanewr, or, as they now write it, Chicanewr; and to the Ger. Schwicken, decipere, deducere, depravare; A. S. Swican, to betray, to deceive, to seduce. The editor of Men. is inclined to consider the A. S. Swican as the true etymology. See BZ-SWICK.

CHICHE, s. App. to—Gaping greediness, CHINCHE. or covetousness, hungriness, voracity; and hence to—

-ERY. Niggardliness, pinching sparingness, or parsimony.

A chichiface, — (Fr. Chiche-face), now written and pronounced chitty-face, is—A niggard, one having a niggardly, pinched, starved face; a pined, puny face.

Fr. Chiche, chicherie; which Duchat concludes to be from the L. Siccus, dry. It (Chinche, chiche) seems to be formed from the A. S. Cinan, to chine or chink, to open, to gape. See CHINK.

CHICK, v. s. -EN. App. to—The young of various birds, met. to a young person.

Chuc, says Jun. is the call of the cock to the hens, when he has found a grain of corn. Wach. also thinks the A. S. Cicen; D. Kicken; Ger. Kucklein; and Eng. Chicken, are from the same source, viz. the call of the cock. The interchange of c q & k and ch, is continual in our old language.

CHIDE, v. s. To censure harshly, to re-
-ER. buke, to reprove, to blame, to
-ING. quarrel with, to rail, to brawl.

-INGLY. *Chaucer.

-STER.* A. S. Cidan, contendere, rixari, objur-

-ERESS.* gare, increpare, to contend, to strive, to chide, to brawl.—Som.

CHIEF, ad. s. av. Capital, principal:

-DOM. having the upper part, the eminent or conspicuous station, the

-LY. overlooking, management, guidance, or conduct.

-SHIP. Chief is still used in composition, in Mischief, and formerly

-TAIN. in Bonchief, (qv.)

-SHIP. *Whitgift. *Hollinshed.

-TY.* Fr. Chef; It. Capo; L. Caput, the head. See CREVE, and ACHIEVE.

-FERY.†

CHIERTEE, * s. Charity, love.
*Chaucer.

CHIL-BLAIN, v. s. Blains, (qv.) supposed to arise from chill or cold.

CHILD, v. s. Child,—any thing begotten,

-AGE. born, or brought forth—esp. of

-ING. woman born; any one having the qualities of a child, (a. g.)

-HOOD. its weakness, ignorance, innocence, docility;—offspring; de-

-ISH. scendants gen. in near or remote succession; (met.) offspring, produce.

-ISH-LY. Childer-mass,—in commemoration of the murder of the chil-

-NESS. dren, (the Innocents.)

-LY. Mr. Steevens, in his note on the Shepherd's exclamation in Winter's Tale, "A boy, or child, I wonder,"—observes, that

-NESS. "in some of our inland counties, a female infant, in contradistinction to a male one, is still termed among the peasantry, a child."

-ER-MASS. On the other hand, G. Douglas renders Puer Ascanius, "Ascanus the chylde."

-RENLESS.* Surrey,— "the childe Inlue." And the word is app. in our old writers of ballads or romances, to—any youth, or boy, whether knight or squire, or page. In R. Gloucester, Loty's son is called "Child Waweyn," who is made knyght. In Chaucer, (Flower and Leaf,) the attendants upon the knights, "with crownes of laurer grene," are distinguished by the name of childe: "And every childe ware of leaves grene, a fresh chapelet upon his haire bright." In Spenser, ser, Prince Arthur, a knight complete, is called "the noble childe," (Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8. § 15.)

Jun. remarks, that the v. To child, occurs passim in Wiclif's Eng. Ver. of the Bible, (i. e. O. T.) "And Eve childed," &c. It is used by Chaucer, Gower, Latimer, and Spenser.

Child is much used pref.—as child-birth, child-bed, &c.—*Drant.

A. S. Cild; D. & Ger. Kind; from past p. Cenned, (natus, genitus, born, begotten,) of the A. S. Cennan; Ger. Kennen, parere, gignere, to bear, bring forth, to beget; Wach. observes, that n, in ore Saxonic, is easily changed into t; and concludes, that childe, (ch for k), and kind have the same origin. Un-

CHILIAD, s. -IAST. The Millenarians were called Chiliasts.

Gr. Χίλιαι, one thousand.

CHILI-FICATION.* See CHYLE.

*Brown.

CHILL, v. s. ad. Met. it is—To dispirit,

-NESS. to discourage, to dishearten; to

-LY, ad. av. deject, to depress, to damp.

-LINESS. A. S. Celan, algere, refrigerare, to cool, or cause to be cold. See COOL. Un-

CHIMÆRA, s. -ERICAL, ad. App. to—Any capricious fancy, any wild imagination.

L. Chimæra; Gr. Χίμαιρα, from χίμαρος, a goat.

CHIME, v. s. -ING. App. gen.—To be, or cause to be, in the same tone or tune; in unison, in consonance; to attune, to harmonize, to correspond or agree, or coincide with.

T. H. happily and ingeniously, (ut solet, says Sk.) derives from the It. Chimare; (L. Chimæra, to call,) because that sound (sc. the chime of bells) calls or summons to church. Jun. suspects that the expression formerly was a cimbal or cimble of bells, (see CYMBAL), whence cime or chime was formed.

CHIMERE, s. The Fr. Chamarre is said by Cot. to be "A loose and light gown (and less properly a cloak) that may be worn scarf-wise."

Fr. Chamarre, chamarre; It. Zimarra; Sp. Chamarra, or -ro; D. Sam-are; Sw. -aria. Dr. Jamieson suggests that this term had its origin from a superior kind of cloth, made of fine goat's wool, and called by the Latins, Cymatilis, from Gr. Κύμα, a wave, because it was waved. See CYMAR.

CHIMNEY, s. -LESS. The gullet, which discharges the smoke above the roof: a pipe, or conduit.

Fr. Cheminée; Sp. -enes; It. Cammino; L. Caminus; Gr. Καμινος, απο του καμινος, to burn, or απο του καμινωτος, burning heat. Caminus anciently denoted a furnace, but is now used pro gule, quæ fumum extra tectum emittit:—as above.—Foss.

CHIN, s. -NED. App. to—The central part, or part below the mouth of the opening jaw, or jaw that descends to effect an opening or yawning of the mouth.

Go. Kinnus; A. S. Cinnus; D. Kinnus; Ger. Kinn, from the A. S. Cinan, (Ger. Gienem), hiare, debiscere, to gape, to chine, chink, or rive.—Som. So called, (Sk.) because when the chis is drawn down, the mouth is opened.

CHINCHE. See CHICHE.

CHINE, s. s. -BONE. The back-bone, ridge of the back.

Fr. Echine; It. Schiena; the chine. Echiner.—to chine, divide, or break the back of, (Cot.) probably from the A. S. Cinax, to chine, chink or rive. Spencer has the expression, "It chyn'd his back."

CHINK, v. s. -Y. To gape or chap, as the earth doth in dry weather; to chine, chink, or rive.—Som.

The s. is not of common occurrence.
A. S. Cinax. See CHINE.

CHINK, v. s. App. to—That which the greedy or covetous are eager to get, and the niggardly to keep: to—coin, or money: and thence to—the sound of it in the bag, or when told: and further, to—any sound similar to that of metallic pieces in collision.

Pueris, vox à sono ficta.—Sk. It seems to be formed from Chinck, greediness, niggardiness, (see CHICKER), and to be app. as above explained.

CHINTZ, s. A word of modern introduction into the Eng. language from the Hindustanee.

CHIOPPINE, s. Steevens calls it—A high shoe, or rather a clog, worn by the Italians. Mina.—A high cork shoe.

Sp. Chapin, which Delpino says is Ar.

CHIP, v. s. To cut or hew into small -PING pieces.

-FY. D. & Ger. Kappen, cndere, secare, to chip or chop. See TO CHOP.

CHIRK, v. -ING. D. Circken, to chirp: "A. S. Ceorcian, crepitare, garrare, to chatter; also, stridere, to crash, to gnash, to creak, to make a noise, to charke, or, (as in Chaucer's language,) to chirke."—Som.

**Chaucer*.

CHIRM, s. s.† Chirk, chirm, chirp, must have the same origin, and differ little in their application. Bp. Hall writes Chire.

**Pharr*. †Bacon.

Jan. has Chierre, gemere instar turturum; and is the D. Kerieu, kerien, kerien, is, gemere instar turturis sive columbae, to murmur like a dove. A. S. Ceorcian, ceorcian, queri, to complain. Dr. Jamieson refers to D. Kermen, lamentari; and observes, that app. to birds, it denotes the mournful sound emitted by them, esp. when collected together before a storm: and also their chirping. In Hall, it seems to be app. to the low note of chawing with sensual gratification. In Bacon's Ham. VII., "With the churme," is in the L. Ver. can chora.

CHIROGRAPH, s. -ER. A writing or graving with the hand. The words are confined almost entirely to legal usage.

From the Gr. Χειρ, the hand, and γραφειν, to write.

CHIROLOGY, s. Conversation by—di-MANCY. vination from inspection of—-MAN-CER. the hands.

-TICAL. From the Gr. Χειρ, the hand; λογον, logon, to tell, to talk; and μαννισσας, to reveal.

CHIRO-NOMY, s. -IC. The art of moving the hands, (in oratory, dancing, &c.)

L. Chironomia; Gr. Χειρονομία, to regulate the hands; from χειρ, the hand, and νομειν, regere, to rule, to regulate.

CHIRP, v. s. -ING. Jun. and Sk. think, a sono ficta. Perhaps corrupted from Chirk, (qv. and Chirm.)

CHIR-URGEON, s. Now written Sur-BONLY. geom. One who works with the -ERY. hand, performs manual operations, -ICAL. sc. in the art of healing.

Fr. Chirurgien; It. Chirurgiano; Sp. -ujano; Gr. Χειρουργος, (Χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.)

CHISEL, v. s. A tool in Carpentry and Masonry.

Fr. Cisaille, cisell, ciseau; It. Cisello; Sp. Sinzel. Jun. says, from Ξειν, scindere, to sever, or cut off; Sk. from Scindere, scisso, qd. scissillum.

CHIT, s. -CHAT. See CHAT. Also app. to—A child.

Chit-chat,—childish chat or prattle; small talk.

T. H. (in Sk.) conjectures Chit to be so named q. kitten, a little cat; and the expression—a little puss,—app. to a lively, pert child, seems to be of similar import with—a little chit.

CHITTERLING, s. A gut, an intestine. Also a frill.

Sk. derives from Ger. Kutlein, intestina. Wach. interprets Kutlein, exta secare, to cut the intestines; and derives it from Kutten, secare, to cut.

CHITTY-FACE. See CHICHE.

CHIVALRY, s. Chevalier,—a horseman; -ROUS. cons.—a knight, (eques.)

-ROUSLY. Chivalerie,—knighthood; the rank or order of knights; the enterprizes, hazards, exploits, of knights; their valour, heroism, gallantry.

It. Ca-valleria; Sp. -balleria; Fr. Chevalerie, from Cheval, a horse. See CAVALIER and CHEVALIER.

CHIVER, v. Now written Shiver, (qv.) **Chaucer*. Gower.

CHOCK, v. Fr. Chocquer, to give a Shock, (qv.)—**Turberville*. Fuller.

CHOCLEARY, ad. Wreathed.

**Brown*.

L. Cochlea; Gr. Χοχλίας, a cockle; from χοχλεις, i. e. γυρ, gyrare, to form gyres or circuits; because the shell of a cockle is tortilla et turbinata, is wreathed round.—See Voss.

CHOCOLATE, s. ad. So called because made of the cacao-nut.

Fr. Choco-lat; Sp. -lats; It. Cioccolato.

CHOICE. See CHOOSE.

CHOIR, s. CHORISTER. App. not only to the singers, but also to the part of the church in which they are placed. See QUIRE.

Fr. Cho-eur; Sp. -ro; It. Coro; L. Chorus; Gr. Χορον, a multitude of singers and dancers, and therefore of rejoicers, from χορειν, to rejoice, (Martin.); A. S. Cyrr-an, vertice.

CHOKE, v. s. To suffocate, to strangle; to stop up the course or passage,—to obstruct, or block up, so as to prevent the issue or progress, rise or growth.

Lye gives A. S. Acrocan, suffocare; he and Somn., Acrocod, suffocatus; but no authority. Sk. has no doubt that such a word formerly existed.

CHOLER, s. The bile or choler is supposed to have an effect upon the temper. My choler rose, is equivalent to—My anger, wrath, indignation rose. And hence choler is app. to—Angriness of mind; anger, wrath.

Fr. Cholère; It. Sp. & L. Colera; Gr. Χολη, from the unused χολειν, fundere.

CHOOSE, or CHUSE, v. Anciently written,

-ER. To chese. Choice, anciently

-ING. written chose.—To take, to take

-INGLY. out, to pick out; to take, pick,

CHOICE, ad. s. or cull out, one thing before

-LESS. another, in preference to another;

-LY. other; to select or elect; to

-NESS. prefer.

Fr. Choisir; Ger. & D. Kiesem; A. S. Ceosan, ciesan, eligere, to take out, or elect. Fore-Mis-Re-Un-

CHOP, v. s. To chop, is—To cut by blows, -PER. by striking,—not by pressure, nor -HOUSE. by drawing backwards and forwards, as with a saw; to cut into chips, bits or pieces; to strike at with a chopper, or any thing cutting.

D. Kappen, concidere, concidere minutim, to cut into small pieces; Fr. Chopper, which Jun and others derive from Kopp-iv, scindere, secare; Voss., from Mid. L. Capulare, to strike with a sword, to cut. Capulare, from capulus, the hilt or hold of a sword, a capiendo, quia ibi capitur, because by it the sword is held.

CHOP, s. i. e. Chap:—Chaps and chap-chops. fallen. See CHAP.

CHOP-FALLEN.

CHOP, v. s. To chop in or out,—seems to be—to strike in or out suddenly,—with the quickness, suddenness of a blow or stroke; to take, to snatch.

Thus also, to chop logic,—“to answer a snappish quid, with a knappish quo,” as Holinshed expresses it.

CHOP, v. -PING. “To chop and change,” means “to bargain and change,” from A. S. Ceapan, to cheap, traffic, bargain, buy or sell.

A chopping wind or sea,—a changing wind or sea.

CHOPPED, pt. -PY. Chapped, chappy. See CHAP.

CHOPPING, ad. A chubby, lusty, plump, fat, sc. child; perhaps chappy or choppy, having large chops or chaps.)

CHORD, v. s. A musical instrument, the strings of which were made of dried and twisted gut or intestine.

Gr. Χορδῶν, intestinum, and hence Chorda, i. e. fides, ex intestino contorto, et arefacto.—Lennepe. To the same purport is Voss., sc. because they (the chords or strings of a musical instrument) were usually made of the smaller intestines of animals. See CORD.

CHORO-GRAPHER, s. One who delineates or describes a region or -PHY. country; a particular region.

-PHIC-AL. Gr. Χωρα, spatium, a region or

-ALLY. country; and γραφειν, to grave, to delineate, to describe.

CHORUS, s. App. to—A number of singers, singing in concert. An -RALLY. harmonious company.

Choral, s. is used by Fox as choir is commonly used. See CHOIR.

Gr. Χωρος; L. Chorus.

CHOUGH, s. The name by which the common Jackdaw (Corvus monedula) is sometimes called in England. The Cornish Chough is the Red-legged Crow, (Corvus graculus.)

A. S. Cao; Fr. Choucas. Sk. derives from the sound which the bird utters.

CHOULE,* s. Usually written Jowl, (qv.) *Brown.

CHOUSE, v. s. To deprive of by a trick, a cheat, a fraud.

Ihre and Serenius both refer to Sw. Kissa, which the first interprets fascinare, and the latter nugari. Sk. and Jun. conceive, that To chouse and To cozen, have the same origin. (See To COZEN.) They deduce To cozen from D. Kozen or koosen, which Kilian interprets, blandiri, adulari. T. H. (in Sk.) thinks the word is taken from Turkish Chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish emperor; and Mr. Gifford confirms this conjecture. A messenger, or chiaus, (written by Hackluyt chasa.) from the Grand Signior, in 1609, committed a gross fraud upon the Turkish and Persian merchants resident in England, by cheating them out of 4000*l*. Hence, from the notoriety of the circumstance, to chiaus, chause, or chouse, was to do as this chiaus did,—sc. to cheat, to defraud. (See Gifford's B. Jonson, iv. 27.) Butler, a man of undoubted learning, perhaps coined “calded,” as a matchword to choused. Chouse, the s., however, is app. not to him who chouses, but to him who is choused.

CHRISM, s. ad. Various written,—Chrisome, creasome, chrism. App. to—The sacred oil, which was formerly used in the administration of baptism; also to the cloth, with which the infant was, at or immediately after baptism, covered. A chrisome child is a child in its chrisome cloth.—See Stevens's Shak., Hen. V. Act. ii. sc. 3. n. 4.

Fr. Chres-me; It. Ana; from Gr. Χρῆμα, an ointment, (χρῆν, to anoint.)

CHRISTEN, v. Fr. Chrestienner, (It. Battezzare; Sp. Baptizar.)

-ENDOM. to perform the rite or ceremony of baptizing.

-TIAN, s. ad. Christendom, is used by old

-TIAN-ISM. writers as we now use Christianity; and Christianity, ss

Om. CHOFFER, -ING. Locke.

CHROMATIC, ad. -AL. App. in painting, and also (met.) in music. "I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chromatique or colouring. Operum colores is the very word which Horace uses to signify words and elegant expressions."—Dryden.

Gr. Χρῆμα, colour.

CHRONIC, ad. -AL. Temporary, or returning at a certain time.

Gr. Χρονος, time; Fr. Chronique.

CHRONICLE, v. s. "General or yearly -EL. relations of the chief matters, acted -IST. or happening in a country."—Cot.

To chronicle, is—to arrange, to narrate, to record, events, in the order of their succession, in the order of time.

Gr. Χρονος, time; It. & Sp. Cronica; Fr. Chronique.

CHRONO-GRAM, s. Chronology and -MATICAL. Chronography are equivalent.

-MATIST. Chronology,—a discourse on the

-GRAPHER. knowledge or science of time;

-GRAPHY. on the period, order, succession, of events, in time.

-LOGY. Chronometer,—an instrument

-LOSER. to measure time; the minutes

-LOG-IC. and hours of time.

-ICAL. Chronogram, app. to—writings

-ICALLY. expressing the time: e. g. on

-LOHST. medals, the year in which they

-METE. were coined.

Fr. Chrono-graphie, -logie; Sp. graphia, -logia; It. Cronologia. Chronogram, from Χρονος, time, and γραφμα, from γραφειν, to write. Chronology, from Χρονος, and λογειν, to discourse. Chronometer, from Χρονος, and μετροειν, to measure. On. -MATICALLY. Wood.

CHRYSO-LITE, s. "The golden colour in the topaze, gave it the name of chryso-lith."—Holland. Plinie.

From Gr. Χρυσος, golden, and λιθος, a stone.

CHUBB, s. A fish.

-BY. Chubby,—large, plump, fat.

-FACED. Chubb, the fish, Sk. thinks is so called from its head, (sc. the size of it,) in A. S. Cop, (hence, perhaps. Chubby; or otherwise, from Chappy) See CHOPPING.

CHUCK, v. s. CHUCKLE, v. Chuck, (Jun.) is the call of the cock to the hens, when he has found a grain of corn. See CHICK.

To chuck, (if not to chock, qv.) is also to strike under the chin, so as to produce a sound from the collision of the upper and lower jaw, similar to that of the cock: to strike, to toss, to cast, to throw.

To chuck, v.—to chock, to shock, to cast or throw, by a short motion, (a mere shake.)

Also to make a chucking or chuckling noise; in derision, mockery or triumph. And thus we also use—to crow over.

CHUET, s. Mr. Steevens, in his note upon the expression of Prince Henry, "Peace, chuet, peace," observes, that in an old Book of Cookery, printed in 1596, he found a receipt to make chewets, which, from their ingredients, seem to have been fat greasy puddings; and to these, he adds, it is highly probable that the Prince alludes. The word is probably from the v. To cheu.

CHUFF, s. -Y. A selfish, coarse, ill-humoured fellow.

Chuffy,—gross, coarse.

I know not, says Sk., whether from A. S. Cyff; Ger. Kuffe, a cask or barrel, by a metaphor sufficiently elegant; part. if, as I suspect, it was primarily spoken of a clown, large and burly, given both to gluttony and drunkenness. Chough seems to include within it the signification of huff, i. e. heaved, raised, swollen, sc. with anger, vexation; from A. S. Heofan, to raise: heof, with the usual prefix ge, would give ge-heof; and by the change of g into c, ceof, cuff, cyf, the large vessel; and by softening the c into ch, would be formed chuff, the burly, swollen man; swollen either with gluttony and guzzling, or with ill tempers.

CHUMP, s. Any thing champed; a piece, a lump.

CHURCH, v. s. "A church is a religious

-ING. assembly, or the large fair build-

-LIKE. ing where they meet; and some-

-DOM. times the same word means a -SHIP. synod of Bishops or Presbyters;

and in some places it is the Pope and a General Council."—Watts. Logic.

The thanksgiving of women after childbirth is commonly called, the churching of women.

Church is much used pref.

Dan. Kirke; Sw. Kyrka; D. Kerke; Ger. Kirche; from Gr. Κυριακή, (sc. οικία), Dominica domus, the house of the Lord. Dis-Un.

CHURL, s. A churl or carl is a robust,

-ISH. strong man; a rustic, labouring

-ISH-LY. man; uncivilized, unpolished,

-NESS. rude, brutal, ill-humoured, selfish.

A. S. Ceorle; Ger. Kerl; D. Kaerle; perhaps compounded of ce (as) and er—cor; and the dim. el thus, Ke-er-el, Kerl. See EAL.

CHURN, v. s. -ING. A vessel in which, by constant turning of milk, butter is made.

D. Karn, kärner; Dan. Kiærne; Sw. Kerna. From A. S. Cyrran, ceran; Ger. Kehren; D. Keeren; vertere, revertere, to move backwards and forwards. Chyren, chyren, churn, is the past p. of Cyrran; and so called (Sk.) because to separate the butter, the staff is sharply turned about.

CHYLE, s. Cot. calls it, the white juice

-OUS. of digested meat: the matter

-IFACT-ION. whereof our blood is made.

-IVE. The word, he adds, originally

-ORY. signifies, a juice concocted by heat unto a consistence, that holds both of moisture and dryness.

Chilification, and Chilifactive, are used by medical writers; and Arbuthnot calls the vessels which make chyle—chylopoetick.

It. Chilo; Sp. Chilo; Fr. Chyle, chylote; L. Chylus; Gr. Χυλος, from χυειν, to pour, because the moisture, which substances pour forth, whether it be by bruising, chopping or other means, is so called. From the same origin is Chyme, Gr. Χυμος, moisture or juice.

CHYMIST, s. Chy- or Chemistry,— -ISTRY. science; by which the nature
-IC, ad. s. and properties of matter are -ICAL. investigated and ascertained.
-ICALLY. **Burton*.

-ISTICAL.* Fr. Chymique; Sp. -co; It. Chimico.
Perhaps from χυμα, from χεειν, to pour; for he, says Voss, who pours or mixes metals, changes them and converts the baser to the purer. Al-

CICATRICE, or CICATRIX, s. A scar,— -IZE, v. (a mark.—Shak.)

-IZ-ATION. Fr. & It. Cicatrice. Scheidius thinks
-ING. it may be from Gr. Κικαειν, the re-duplicate form of καειν, whence καειν, were.
Martin., from Cæco, because the cicatrix cæcet, that is, closes the open wound.

CICERONE, It. s. A name given to a guide to works of art, gen. of curious research;—qd. As eloquent on these subjects as Cicero himself could have been.

CICERONIANISM, s. An imitation or servile following of the style or phraseology of Cicero.

CICURATE,* v. -ION.† To tame, to train.—**Brown*. †Ray.

L. Cicur, (of uncertain etymology,) tame.

CIDER, s. A liquor made of apples.

The L. Sicera, Gr. Ζικερα, is rendered by Wiclif—sydyr; the A. S. Ver.—beor; and the Mod. Ver.—strong drink.

Fr. Cidre; Sp. -ra; It. Si-cera; D. & Ger.
-der; Sw. Cider. Goldast (in Wach.) thinks from Heb Sedar, to inebriate. The D. & Ger. Sieden, bullire, ebullire, to boil, to bubble, seems to present another etymology; since from the bubbling, sparkling nature of the liquor, the application of the term (as above) is sufficiently accounted for.

CIERGE, s. Fr. Cierge, which Cot. calls,
A big wax candle; Tyrw., wax-tapers.

CILIARY,* ad. App. to the hair of the eye-lid, or the eye-lash.—Ray.

L. Cilium, the lid of the eye. It is probable that cilia are so called because they continually move. (Cillens,—cillens antiquis sit movere.—
Voss.) Super-

CILICIOUS,* ad. Hairy.—**Brown*.

In Cilicia a cloth was manufactured of goats'
hair, called cilicium.

CIMETER, s. Cot. calls it "a scymitar or smyster; a kind of short and crooked sword, much in use among the Turks."
Its crookedness consists in its being bent backwards.

Fr. Cim-sterra; Sp. -alarra. See SCYMITAR.

CINCTURE, s. Any thing that girds, or surrounds, or incloses; a girdle, an inclosure.

L. Cingere, cinctum, to gird. Pre- Pro- Sub-(Suo-) Un-

CINDER, s. The reliques or refuse of burned coal; of any thing burnt.

Fr. Cen-dre; It. -re, from L. Cinere, the ablative of Cinis.—Men. Voss., and after him Scheidius think from κοιν, which not only is app.
to dust, but also to ashes; and is so called, perhaps,—à levitate qua movetur, from καειν, move, dross.

But Sk. prefers A. S. Sinder, which
Som. interprets Sindere, dross, the scum of metal tried by the fire. And Sinder, Sk. adds, is perhaps derived from A. S. Syndrian, to sunder, to separate; because the dross is separated from the metal, and is, as it were, ejus recrementum, seu potius secrementum. Hence cinders, reliquie carbonis exusti,—parum deflexo sensu. Feltham uses Cynder, as a v. In-cinerate.

CINEREOUS, ad. -RITIOUS. Used in works of Natural History.

Of any ashy colour; of an ashy substance. See CINDER.

CINNAMON, s. A spice. Voss. thinks so called because it emits the odour of the Amomum.

Gr. Κινναμωμον; L. Cinnamo-mum; Fr. -me;
It. & Sp. -mo.

CINQUE-PACE, s. -PORTS. Cinque-pace is the name of a dance, which Sir John Davies describes, and calls a Galliard: "a swift and wandering dance."

"The Cinque-ports, or five most important havens, viz. Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Hastings, Hyde."—Blackstone.

Fr. Cinque; L. Quingus, five.

Or from Kiev, ire, vaders, because they come to the same society or assembly. Martin. prefers ciere, that is, vocare, the word being app. to those, who are called to the same place. Con-

CIVET, s. Civet—is an unctuous substance secreted in a bag near the tail of a quadruped, the Fiverra zibetha of Linneus, a native of the Brazils, the Coast of Guinea, and the East Indies.

Fr. Civet; animal odoriferant, from Ar. Zehed; scum, froth.—Mém.

CIVIC, ad. —AL. Civic crowns,—crowns for peaceful services to the city or state; opposed to military.

L. Civicus, from Civis. See CITY.

CIVIL, ad. Of or belonging or pertaining —LY. to a city or state; to the policy —ITY. or government of a city or state; —IAN. having the habits, or manners, —ISE, v. or dispositions acquired by living —ISATION. together in the same city or state. —ISER. Urbane, polished, or polite; hu-—IST. mane, gentle, complying; poli—tic; grave, serious. Opposed to those who live in a state of natural wildness and rudeness; also opposed to military; to ecclesiastical; and, in Law, to criminal. Civil war is war between citizens or subjects of the same city or state.

CLAM, or CLEM, v. CLAMMY. To stick, to fasten together; to make, keep, or hold fast or tight together; to constringe, or constrain, or constrict.

Clammy,—sticky, glutinous; of an adhesive dampness.

"My intrails were clemm'd with keeping a perpetual fast."—Massinger.

D. Klam, clamp, tenax; Ger. Klemmen, constringere, to hold tight; Dan. Klammer; A. S. Clam, a band; and the A. S. v. Clamian, linire, oblinire, to anoint, to smear over, to clamme. Offamare, to harden or stiffen.—Som. Clamm'd, in Gloucestershire, (Grose) means to be choked up, as the mill is clemm'd up; and in the north, starved. Ray,—"Clem'd or clam'd, starved; because by famine, the guts and bowels are, as it were, clemmed or stuck together. Sometimes it signifies thirsty; and we know in thirst the mouth is very often clammy." P. Ploughman applies it to the sensation of cold. The A. S. Clam-ian is formed from Ge-timan, gliman, by change of g into c, and of the vowel i into e or a,—clam-an, clemian. See TO LIME.

CLAMBER, v. See TO CLIMB.

CLEAR, v. s. ad. av. To proclaim, sc. as

-ANCE. victor, is the primary meaning.

-ER. And thus to clear is—

-ING. To make, or cause to be, known;

-LY. to confer renown, render famous,

-NESS. illustrious, or conspicuous; to withdraw or free from obscurity, secrecy, loneliness, darkness; to make or cause to be plain, evident, perspicuous;—to free from disgrace or infamy, from imputation of crime,—and thus to vindicate or justify;

to show or prove to be fair, sincere, or honest;—to remove or free from any thing that overshadows or overclouds, that hinders or stands in the way, obstructs or impedes, embarrasses or encumbers, or endangers;

to free from loss, injury, or danger.

Clerk is app. gen. to—One employed in learning, in learned occupations, or in doing that, performing those offices, which require some learning or scholarship.

From L. Clericus. See CLERUS. Un-

CLEVER, ad. A clever man, is—one who -LY makes an active, alert, adroit, -ness ready, use of the means in his power; who handles his tools with skill, dexterity, and despatch. The word is not app. to the higher order of ability.

It. conjectures, from Fr. Leger; L. Leviter. It may, by a common course of corruption, have been turned from A. S. Ge-leaf-an, gleaf, cleaf-an, vivus, animatus. Lye has Ge-leafast, animatus, animatus, lively; and from this meaning, the word may have been app.—as above.

CLEW, s. Also written Clue.

A. S. Cleowe, clive, "Sphere, any thing that is round, a sphere. It. Glomus, a clew or bottom of thread, a ball, pellet, or other like round thing."—Som.

As the clue unwoven will serve for a guide, Beau. & F. have formed the v. To clue; to guide, to direct.

D. Klouwen, in globi formam fila convolvere, to roll up, sc. thread into a globular form.—Kilian. Un-

CLICK, v. -ET. Appear to have been merely app. to—Any fastening, which was accompanied by a clicking, snapping noise. See To CLACK.

Click, (Grose), in Cumberland and Northumberland, is, to catch or snatch away. Lye thinks from the A. S. Ge-læccan, prehendere, to clutch, (whence to latch.)

A. S. Climan; D. Klemmen, klimmen; Ger. Klimmer, scandere. Wach. add., perhaps from κλίμα, gradus, vel hoc ab illo. Out-Over-

CLIME, s. App. to—Regions which differ -ATE, v. s. in temperature from others. -ATURE.* The v. is used in Shak.—“Whilst you do climate here,” i. e. while you stay, remain, or dwell in this climate.

*Shak.

Fr. Cli-mat; It. & Sp. -ma; Gr. Κλίμα; L. Clima, inclinatio seu declinatio cœli, from κλίνειν to incline, or bend.

CLINCH, v. s. or CLENCH, v. CLINCHER. To clench the hand, is to bend the fingers inward to the palm. And cons. to clench or clinch is—

To fasten or fix, to confirm, to strengthen, to corroborate. A nail is not clenched, unless it passes through, and is then bent, turned or twisted back.

Clench, the s. is app. to a species of a wit; which Dryden perhaps intends to describe “as wresting and torturing a word into another meaning.”

In Ger. Lenken is flectere, vertere (and Lye) A. S. Ge-blenc-ed, tortus; which, by a common process of corruption, would become glenc-ed, clenc-ed, clenched. Un-

CLING, v. The usual application now is—To cling or shrink up, as a loose vest, driven by the wind, round the limbs; to cleave or adhere, to hold fast round, to intwine, infold, or embrace.

Mr. Steevens has furnished a number of passages, for the use, he says, of the future lexicographer, all of which come within the explanation of Som., or the consequential—to intwine, infold, embrace. And see Clung, in Jamieson.

A. S. “Cling-an, marcere, to wither, to pine, to faint; to cling or shrink up.”—Som. P. Plouhman says, “When thou clingest for droughth.” See in v. CLAM.

CLOD, v. s. A lump or mass cleaved, or -DY. separated from a larger mass, or -POLE, or material substance.

-T-POLE. To clod,—to form into lumps or masses—cleaved or separated from a larger mass: also, to break the clods or lumps, (with rakes or harrows, Holland.)

A clod-pole,—a block-head; a lumpish head.

D. Klotteren, coagulare; klotte, gleba, massa. It is perhaps from A. S. Cloef-an, to cleave; formed thus, past p.—Cloesen, cleaved, clod, clod, or clot. See CLot.

CLOG, v. s. To clog, is to load, to bur-G-ING. then; and is so used, without any -Y. subaud. by Ray, (to clog with a weight.) It is now gen. used with a subaud. of hinderance or obstruction; and thus, cons. To clog is—

To hinder, obstruct, impede, embarrass, or encumber.

Sk. thinks, perhaps from Log, truncus. It may be from the Go. Lag-yan; A. S. Leegan, ge-leegan, ponere, to lay. CLOSE, v. ad. s. av. To bring as near as -ING. possible; to join together, to con-LY. join, to unite; to bring so near -NESS. that no further approximation or -URE. progress can be made; to bring to an end; to end, to finish. To bring so near as to prevent ingress or egress; to confine, to keep confined or secret; to shut up, to block up.

A close is a piece of ground inclosed or surrounded by fence or hedge.

Close is much used pref.

L. Clausus, the past p. of claudere, to be, or cause to be, so near as to touch; It. Chiusere; Fr. Clore. The v. is formed from the ad. Dis-En-In-Inter-Fore-Re-Un- See CLAUDE.

CLO

CLOSET, v. s. -UET. A small close or enclosure; a small place (private apartment) closed.

Close, a dim. of Close, (qv.); and Closetist, a dim. of Closet.

CLOT, v. s. To clod or clot,—to form into -ING lumps or masses cleaved, (cloved, -ER. s. clow'd, clod, clot), or separated -Y. from a larger mass, or material substance. (See CLOD and CLOUT.) Gen.—

To form into lumps; to coagulate; to be or become thick or gross.

Clot-pole, (met.) See CLOD-POLE.

CLOTHE, or CLOATH, v. Clothes (used CLOTH, s. only in the plural) is app. to the -IES coverings or vestures, which are -ING worn on the body.

Clot,—to the material of which certain clothes are usually made.

To cloath or clothe, (met.) is used, when some purpose or design is meant to be covered or concealed: to dress, to invest.

A. S. Clæd, ge-clæd, i. e. clothed or clothed,—the past p. has been preserved, though the v. is lost. Also, Clæth, pannus; Clætha, vestimenta; Sw. & Dan. Klæde; Ger. Kleid; Dut. Kleyde, vestis; and also D. Kleyden; Dan. Klæder, vestire. See CLAD. Un—

CLOUD, v. s. To cover; to throw into

-Y. shade, gloom, obscurity, or dark-

-ELY. ness; to obscure, to darken.

-INESS. Cloud is much used pref.

-LESS. Tooke thinks Cloud is formed thus, "Ge-hlod, ge-hlond, gloud, cloud; Ge-hlod is the regular past tense and past p. of ge-hlidan, to hide, cover." "For the same reason," he adds, "the L. word Nubes was formed from nubere; which means to cover." "Quia cælus nubis, i. e. operit, says Var." He should have said Voss, though Var. is to the same purport. Be- Dis- Es- Inter- Out- Over- Un— See LIN.

CLOVE, s. Gen.—apart, split or severed.

"The garlick head is covered and clad all over with certain very fine and thin pellicles or membranes, which may be parted and divided one from another; under which you will see it compact and joined (as it were) together of many cloves in manner of kernils."—Holland. Plinie.

Cloves of garlic; from Cleofan, to cleave.—Lye. See CLOVEN.

CLOVE, s. A kind of spice.

Fr. Cla de Girofle; It. Chiudo di Girofano; Sp. Clavo de Especies. So called from its manifest resemblance to a nail, (Clavus, qd. Clavus Caryophylli.) In D. it is called Naeghel; in Ger. Neigel.

CLOVEN, pt. Cloven, is the past tense and past p. of Cleave, (qv.) It is used pref. to foot, hoof, &c. Un—

CLOVER, s. -ED. A plant.

Clover or Clavær. A. S. Clæfre wyrt, trifolium; Sw. Clavær; D. Klaver; Ger. Klee. "So called," says Ihre, "from the remarkable cleff, cleft, or furrow of the leaves." And (Wach.) "quasi folium trifidum à klæfen, findere." A. S. Clæf-an, to cleave; Ger. Klob-en; Sw. Clifven.

CLOUGH, s. "A clough or clough, is a kind of breach or valley down a slope

CLU

The past p. of A. S. Clæfan, findere, to cleave; clouwe, clough, cleaved or divided.

CLOUT, v. s. To clout, is to put on or -ED, ad. cover with clouts, pieces, or -ERLY. patches; to patch, to botch.

Also—

To clout, or to give a clout,—to strike, to give a blow. The meaning perhaps is,—to strike or hit, as with a clod or clat, with any thing bumpish; or, according to the proverb cited in Beau. & F. to beat to clouts. We still have the same expression, —to beat to pieces.

Clouted, in Bible, 1551, (2 Sam. xxii.) is in our Common Ver. wounded.

Clouterly, perhaps, is—like any thing clouted, patched or botched, i. e. clumsy; or otherwise, it may be clouterly, i. e. clownishly. See CLOWN.

Clout, (the s. past p. of Clæfan, findere, to cleave,—Clouwed, clow'd, clout,—cleaved, or divided into small pieces.—See Tooke. "Clouted cream," he adds. "is so called for the same reason." See also CLOD and CLOT. Dis—

CLOWN, v. s. A clown, lown, or lowt,—a

-ISH. low-lived, rude, ill-bred, churlish

-ISHNESS. fellow.

-AGE. To clown, is to act like a clown.

-ERY.† **B. Jonson*. †Drayton.

Sk. thinks Clown, without doubt, contracted from Colonus. It is more probably of the same origin with Lown and Lowt. Low is the past p. of lic-gan, jacere, cubare; of which was formed the v. To low; or to make low; past p. lowen, low'n, lown; low-ed, low'd, lowt. Ge-lic-gan, gives regularly ge-hlowen, gelown, glown, clown.

CLOY, v. To cloy, (in Speed,) is evi-

-ING. dently to choke or clog up,—

-LESS. ("To cloy the harbour by sinking

-MENT.* ships laden with stones,")—To cloy, as app. to the appetite, is to choke or clog up the active powers of the palate: to pall, to satiate, to glut or surfeit them. All the other usages seem deduced, cons. from To clog, to glut or surfeit; as to cloy with tears,—to glut with, to steep in tears; to cloy with woes,—to glut or surfeit with woes.

"Cloys his beak," (Shak. Cymbeline),

Tyrw., Farmer, and Steevens, agree, means "Claws his beak."—**Shak*.

CLUB, v. s. App. to—a piece of wood or -B-ED, ad. other substance, of sufficient

-ISH. dimensions for the hand to grasp at one end, and thickening at the other.

Clubbish, (met.)—blockish, stubborn.

Ger. Klob; Sw. Klubb, which Wach. thinks is from Ger. Kloppen, ferire, pulsare; A. S. Clæppan. Ihre, from Klump, massa.

CLUB, v. s. -BIST. To club, is to contribute a share or portion.

A club,—an assembly of persons, contributing each his share or portion.

The word is not very old, but very common in the time of the Spectator, Tatler, &c.

From A. S. cleofan, cleofan, findere, to divide; because the expenses are divided into shares or portions.—Sk.

CLUCK, v. To cluck, is—to click, clock, or cluck. See CLOCK.

D. Klökken; Ger. Gluckhen; Dan. Kluk-ker; Sw. -ka; Fr. Clucher, clouser.

CLUM, s. A note of silence.

A. S. Clumdan, mussitare, murmurare, to mutter or murmur; st. tegere, operire, to cover, to hide, to keep close or secret. Hence Chaucer uses clum, pro silentio notā.—Som.

CLUMP, s. -ER, v. A clump is now app. to—

A number or quantity,—e. g. of trees placed close together.

Ger. Klump; Sw. Klump; D. Klomp, massa. Wach. thinks, from Kleben, adherere, or Loben, coagulari. From A. S. Ge-lum-an, to connect, to keep or hold together, (by pronunciation of gel, as gl), we have Glum-an, past p. Glum-ed, (and by change of g into c), clum-ed or clumb-ed, clumpt, clump.

CLUMSY, ad. Unhandy, awkward, heavy, -ILY. massive, unwieldy.

-INESS. Probably of the same origin as clump, and formed immediately from it. Grose says, clumps, clumpet, i. e. clumsy, idle, lazy, unhandy.

CLUSTER, v. s. To be, or cause to be close together; to keep close together; to assemble or collect close together.

A. S. Cluster or Clyster, racemus; D. Kluster, which Jun. thinks is from D. & Ger. Klüssen, adherere; to adhere or stick together; probably to close, to be or become close.

CLUTCH, v. s. To take, catch or seize, to grasp or gripe.

Clutches, i. e. clutchers, (gatchers), the past p. of Ge-taccan, capere, arripere, to take, catch, or seize hold of.—See TOOKE. Upon this past p. the v. To clutch, is formed. Un-

CLUTTER, v. s. Sometimes Clatter, and sometimes Clotter, are so written. See CLATTER and CLOT.

CLYSTER, s. -IZE, v. "The like desire, namely of clysters, we learned first of a fowle in Egypt, which is called the Ibis (or the blacke storke.) This bird having a crooked and a hooked bill, useth it instead of a syringe or pipe, to squirt water into that part, whereby it is most kind and hol-some to void the doung and excrements of meat, and so purgeth and cleanseth her body."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Clystè-r, -iser; It. -o; Gr. Κλυστήρ, from κλύειν, to wash or cleanse by washing.

CO, pref. L. Com, i. e. Cum; Gr. Συν; denotes—junction, adjunction, union. We have many words from the L. with this prefix; and many of our own formation. The etymology of the word to which Co is pref. must be looked for under that word. Written Col- Com- Cor- before l, m, r.

CO-ACERVATE, ad. v. -ION. To bring together, to gather, to collect into one heap or mass.

Sp. Coacervar; Fr. -ation, a heaping together. —Cot.

COACH, v. s. Coach and Couch are probably the same words; the former app. to a movable or wheeled carriage, adapted for a lying or recumbent position; the latter for a stationary repository.

The Fr. have Coché and Carosse; It. Cocchie and Carozza; Sp. Cóche and Caroga; D. Koche, -ie, -wagen, and Karosse. T. H. derives Coach from Fr. Car-rosse; It. -occia, and these from L. Carucca. (See CAROCHE.) Mina. and Men. from Hungaria, Kotczy; Wach. from the obsolete Ger. Kutten, tegere, qd. vehiculum cameratum. Lye observes that the ancient D. Koesters, is cubere, to lie down. Coach, and Carocha, are distinguished by Stow, as carriages, differing either in form or size; and are, no doubt, different words. Fr. Co-arctare; It. arctare; L. Co-arctare. See Arctus, in Voss.

COARSE, ad. Anciently written Course or Cours.

-NESS. Used as equivalent to—Rough, rude, gross.

Course stitch may be running stitch; from the L. Cursum, Fr. Coursee. Jun. suggests—cursorily; cursum, obiter; ut proprie denotet pannum festu- nander et minore cum cura elaboratum; cloth wrought hastily, in running stitch, and with little care.

COAST, s. s. -ER. The s. is app. to—The side, the edge, or margin, border, limit, or boundary; a district. B. Jonson uses coast or coasts for the ribs of a ship. The v. To go near to, to the side of, to approach.

To go, or continue in motion by or upon the side of, the edge, or margin, the border, limit or boundary.

Fr. Coste; Sp. It. & L. Costa, a rib, a side. Ac- De-

COAT, s. s. -ING. Coat, according to Wach. is,—that which covers the human, or any other body; as the coat of a horse, a coat of masonry, a coat of plaster. See Cot.

Coat-cards, vulgarly so called, are properly coat-cards. Massinger, indeed, uses coat, with a suband of cards.

Fr. Cotte; It. Ja; Ger. Kull, from Kullen, to wash.—Wach. Scal. and Men. think Coat corrupted from L. Crocuta, Gr. Krocawrot, which Gauer says, was, Vestis mullebris croci coloris.

CO-AUGMENT, v. -ATION. Also written Coaugment.

To enlarge, to increase, to make greater, to grow or become greater. Fr. Coaugmenté.

COC

COAX, s. s. -ER. To coax, is to practise the arts of the cogiones, or cogs-men;—to persuade by fictitious appeals to humanity or kindness; by ascribing, to those to whom they address themselves, extreme humanity or kindness; by false pretences of need;—to persuade by arts of flattery.

"A cokes is taken by all our old writers for a simpleton, a noddy, an easy gull."—Gifford. B. Jonson. A cokes is one who has been coaxed, or who is easily coaxed or gulled, or deluded. Coaxer, though common in familiar speech, app. e. g. to children—is not so in writing.

Coccio, cogcio, cottio, Spel. says, were a kind of beggars, who, by their cries, tears, and similar impostures, extorted alms. It appears from some old statutes made against vagabonds, &c. "that shipmen pretending losses of their shippes, &c." were no uncommon class of beggars, practising (see Lye in Jun.) the arts ascribed by Spel. to the cogiones. These cogiones were no doubt the cogmen, who navigated a kind of small ship, called cogs (cogones), common upon the coast of York-shire. "Cogge, if I conjecture rightly," Lye sub- joins, "has been changed by the moderns into cokes." See Coo.

COB, s. Any thing round; a round stone. -WEB, s. ad. In A. S. the spider is called -WEBBED. Atter-coppa, qd. poison-head. "Cob-coals, large pit-coals; cob-stones, large stones."—Grose.

Cobby, or copy, Brocket says, is "stout, hearty, lively;" it is also heady or head- strong.

A cob,—a horse who has his cobs. And see Cor.

"Cob, (Belg. Kop.) is head. Our old writers used the word as a distinctive mark of bulk; thus cob-loaf was the largest loaf of the batch, cob-apple, cob-ant, &c. were respectively the largest apples and nuts of the crop. But cob was more comm. app. to fishes, and of these chiefly to the red and white herring, whence it became a cant term for the whole fish."—Gifford. B. Jonson. "Cob-awen is simply a swan of the largest size."—Id. It is app. by Udal and Fox to those who were distinguished for the largeness of their possessions—of their wealth:—"The rich cobs of this world." "The great cobs were behind."

From the D. Kop-webbe, we have Eng. Cob-web. Kop, in D. being the name given to the spider; perhaps (says Sk.) from the A. S. Coppa, apex, fastigium, culmen, because they build and weave in culminibus medium. More probably from their shape resembling the head.

COBBLE, v. s. Usually app. to—Coarse -ER. and clumsy work; to coarse mend- -ING. ing.

Sk. thinks, from the Ger. & D. Koppelen, copu- lare, nectere, to join or knit together. Hence, also, he adds, the Dan. Kobbler, calcareo resarcire, to mend shoes.

COBBLE, s. A round stone, from Cob. Mr. Grose says, "Cobble, a pebble; to cobble with stones, to throw stones at any thing. Northumb. Also, round coals. Derb." Also, a kind of boat.

COCHLEARY, ad. -LEOUS. Spiral; in the form of a screw.

L. Cochlea, a snail, from Kochleis, that is, γυρίζειν, gyrare, quia cochlea testa est torillis tur- binataque.—Voss.

COC

COCK, s. v. The name is given to—The -ADE. males of various kinds of birds,
 -ADED. esp. to the male of the domestic
 -ING. fowl: in its met. application—to -AL. any person or thing having any
 -EREL. distinguishing quality of that
 -SURE. bird; any designed or accidental
 -ISH.* resemblance to him; viz. his
 -ISHL.* daringness or quarrelsomeness; his self-sufficiency and rashness; his bold and erect attitude; his position or action of offence or defence, of challenge or defiance, of exultation or triumph. Thus the cock of the club, in the Spectator, by pre-eminence; cock being commonly used, as Sk. remarks, pro victore. The cock of the conduit, — because (says Sk.) it used to be constructed in formā cristæ galli. So also the weather-cock; the cock of a hat, the cock of a gun; and further—cock-ade.
Talis is rendered by Holland, “with cockal bones;” but why they are so called is not ascertained.—See Sk., Nares, &c.

Cock-shut time is supposed by Whalley and Gifford to be twilight, from the method practised to catch woodcocks at the time of twilight, in a net called a cock-shut. Mins.
 (in ed. 1617) has twi-light or cock-shut time, but omits it, ed. 1627. Other commentators differ. See their notes on Rich. III.—**Lord Cobham*.

A. S. Koce; D. Kock.—In Go. Hana; A. S. & Ger. Han; Dan. Hane, (whence Eng. Han.) is app. to the cock. Some derive from the Gr.
Kokku, cantare ut gallus. But most probably, as Sk. and Lye think, so called a sono seu cantu, quem edit.

COCK, (of Hay,) s. T. H. (in Sk.) thinks
 -ED. is a cop of hay; by which name (he -ER. observes) it is still called in Kent.

COCK, s. Cock-boat is Cog-boat, (Jun.);
 -BOAT. and Cock-swain, a petty officer in -SWAIN. a cog. See Coo.
 Fr. Coquet; It. Cocca.

COCKATRICE, s. Fr. Coquatrix; D.
Kocketrüs; from Kock, (the bird,) and
 A. S. Atter, an adder; from the fabled generation of this serpent from the egg of a cock.

COCKER, v. -ING. To cocker may have been primarily app. to the indulgence of the appetite. And thus, gen. to cocker is—
 To pamper, to indulge, cherish, make much of; and to encourage, to inspirit.

The D. have, as Jun. has noticed, Kokerillen, celebrare hilaria; they have also Kokelen, nutrire, ceu fovere culina, formed from their v. Koken,
coquere.

COCKLE, (in Corn,) s. A. S. Coccel, a plant, which Sk. thinks is from Ceoacan, to choke, because it chokes the corn.

COCKLE, v. s. -ER. To be or cause to be in a winding or spiral form; in a wreathed, curled, ruffled, form; to curl, to ruffle, or rumple; to rise or raise unsteadily, irregularly,—with sudden jerks.

L. Cochlea. See COCHLEARY.

COE

COCKNEY, s. ad. A name given de-derisively to a native of London.

A great deal to little purpose has been written about this word. Hall uses it as a v.—“To cockney up with dainties.” T. H., sagaciously as he is wont, (Sk. observes,) derives from Fr. Accoquinier.
 Cot. says, “s’accoquinier, to wax as lizzie, become as idle, grow as slothful, as a beggar,” (coquin.)
Coguin is perhaps of the same origin as Cocione.
 See COAX.

COCTION. See CONCOCTION.

L. Coquere, coctum, to boil. Con- De- Ex- In-

COD, v. s. -GER. Sk. thinks the fish is so called, (ab aliquā peræ seu marsupii similitudine,) from some resemblance to a bag or pouch.

The shell, the case—of the pea and other seeds, &c.

Codger, may be a bagger; one who labours to fill his bag or purse; or the same word as Cadger, (qv.)

A pillow or cushion is so called in the North of England.—Brockett.

A. S. Codde; D. Kodde; Ger. Koden; Sw.
Kudde. Perhaps from Ger. Kutten, claudere.
 Som. says, “Codde—pera, marsupium, mantica, a bagge, a wallet, a pock, ii, testiculorum sacculus, et testiculus ipse.” (Matt. x. 10; Mark vi. 8, et al., Hippo, is in the A. S. Ver. of the Gospels, Codd;
 in Eng. Scrip.)

CODDLE, v. To warm, to entender by warmth, by nourishing or nursing; to keep warm or in a state of warmth.

Probably Caudle. Fr. Chadeau, from Chaud, in L. Calidus, warm. The Old Fr. Cadeler, to cocker, pamper, fettle, cherish, make much of, (Cot.) is perhaps of the same origin. Sk. says, Coddle, qd.
 coculare.

CODE, s. App. to—A collection of the -ICIL. various tables of the law, and to a
 -IX. digested body of law.

L. Codex, formed from Caudex, the trunk of a tree; and Caudex, from candere, to cut, to hew, because cut into many thick tables or tablets. Seneca, (de Brevitate Vitæ, c. xlii.)—Plurium tabularum contextus, caudex apud antiquos vocabatur, unde publice tabulæ codices dicuntur.

CODLING, s. Sk. thinks that codling was a kind of early sour apple, which required codling before it could be eaten.

In A. S. Cod-appel is said by Som. to be a quince or quince-pear. Gifford,—“that codling is a mere dim. of cod, and means an involucre or kele, and was used by our old writers for that early state of vegetation, when the fruit, after shaking off the blossom, began to assume a globular or determinate form. Codlings, in Ford, were hot peas.”—Gifford. B. Jonson.

CO-EFFICACY, s. United or adjoined
 -FICIENT. ability to effect, ability or power

COFFEE, s. A plant; also its fruit; and a beverage from the fruit, prepared by heat. Fr. It. & Sp. Caffè. Cakouah, according to Gesand, is to leathe; this orig. is app. to wine, an excess of which produces leathing; afterwards, to other liquors. Dr. Douglass gives another etym. The original Ar., he says, is Cakouah, pron. Cakoh, from Cakent, strength or vigour. It was formerly written Cofa, and Cofpfe.

COFFER, s. v. -ERS. Now chiefly confined in its application to the chest or box, in which gold, jewels, or other precious things are preserved or kept.

Fr. Coffre; Sp. Coffre. Coffe and Coffin, though a diff. app. are the same word, diff. written. (See COFFIN.) "A great coffer of cypres, into whiche they did putt the bones of them that were dead."—Nicoll.

COG

COFFIN, s. v. Formerly also app. to "the raised crust, or cavities of pies." See the annotations upon B. Jonson, ("coffin'd in crust,") and Shak. ("a custard coffin.") Now app. to—

A chest or box, constructed for the reception of the dead.

Fr. Coffin. In Sc. Caip is a coffin. Knox repeatedly uses a cope of lead for a leaden coffin, which, Dr. Jamieson remarks, seems to confirm Sk.'s etymon of the Eng. Coffin, from the A. S. Cofa, cofa, caves; but, he adds, it appears doubtful whether both cope and caip do not simply signify a covering, from A. S. Coppe, the top of any thing. (See COIF, COPE.) To this it may be added, that Wiclif renders the L. Cophinos, coffyns. In the Mod. Ver. it is baskets; Gr. Kaphiro. Un—

CO-FOUNDER,* s. A fellow-founder. —**Camden.*

COG,* s. A small boat, constructed to hold or contain (fish within it). See COAX.

**Chaucer.*

Sw. Kogg; D. Kogge; Fr. Coquet; Low L. Cogo. The Ger. Kauch (Wach.) is a hollow vessel of whatever use or kind. In Sc. Cog, coag, coig, cogue. The Eng. Keg, (in which fish or liquors are shut in and confined,) is no doubt the same word, from the A. S. Caggian, to shut in or confine, to keep or hold within it, to contain.

COG, v. The cog, or tooth of a wheel, is —G-ERY. that which fastens or secures it, —ING. sc. in its regular motion. To cog a wheel, is to fix such cogs; to cog a die, is to load it, so as to secure its fall; and hence, (or perhaps from the frauds of cogmen, see Cog, ante, and COAX,) to cog is met.—

To defraud, to delude, to deceive, to falsify.

Thre suspects Kagg (i. e. Kegg) and Kogg as above, and also Kugg, (i. e. the cog of a wheel,) to be from the same root.

CO-GENIAL. See CONGENIAL.

CO-GENT, ad. Having the force of things —LY. brought together or collected, of —GENCY. things united; having united strength; powerful, forcible, compulsive. Met. in argument or reasoning,—convincing.

 him transmitted to his posterity.—Gesner.

CO-GOVERNOR, s. A fellow-governor.

CO-HABIT, v. To have, hold, or keep,
 -ANT, s. a dwelling or abiding place; to
 -ATION. dwell or abide, together with.
 -ER.

CO-HEIR, s. -ESS. One who inherits in conjunction with another or others; one who in such conjunction takes, or is entitled to take, property of a person deceased; one, in the words of Blackstone, upon whom the law casts the estate immediately on the death of the ancestor, (Com. ii. 201.)

CO-HELPER, s. A fellow-helper or assister.

CO-HERE, v. To hold or keep close or

CO-HIBITOR,* s. A restrainer.—* E. Hall.
 Fr. Cohi-ber; Sp. -bir; L. Cohibere, to hold or keep together; to withhold to restrain.

CO-HOBATE, v. -TION. Cohobation, (Locke) is the pouring of the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again.
 Fr. Cohober, perhaps formed from the Gr. Xoiv, to pour.

CO-HORT, s. A band, or united body of soldiers.

Fr. & Sp. Co-horte; It. -orte; L. Co-hors.
 Voas: and others say, from Gr. Xopros, septum, (aspire, to enclose or enfold.)

COIF, v. s. -FURE. A coife,—A cover for the head; for part of the head (the shaven part). See COFFIN.

See QVOIR. Fr. Coife; It. Coffia; Mid. L.
Cuphla; D. Huve; Ger. Haube. Voas. (de Vitlis), from Ger. Heben, (A. S. Heaf-an), levare, tollere is alium, to heave, to raise on high. The common prefix Ge or Co, will give Ge or Co-heaf-an; by contraction Cheaf-an, (i. e. Keaf, in Gr. Kep-ah, L. Cap-ut.) Wach. gives, Haube, crista, which was subsequently applied ad mitras, and to other coverings of the head. Belge, he adds, diout kuif and kuif promiscu; for k and t are interchangeable in all dialects, (kuif is tr-kuif.) The Fr. Coverir, to cover, presents a very simple immediate etym. See COVER. Un-

COIGN, or COIN, s. Also written Quoizne.

An angle, a nook or corner,

Fr. Coign; L. Cuneus, a wedge. See COIN.

COIL, v. To gather together; to twine or roll into spires or circles, into rings.

The Fr. Cueller; It. Cogliere, to gather; from the L. Colligere, is the common etymology. It may be connected with, to coll, to embrace.

COIL, v. s. To make any bubbling, bustling, confused, stir, or noise.

The Ger. Kollern, sen kollern, increpare, oburgare; and this from the s. Keller, qd. to seize any one by the collar, is the etym. usually accepted from Sk. Lye thinks the s. Coil may be from the preceding verb; and app. a olep-ite, qui fit glomerando. The D. and Ger. Quellen, and wellen, (A. S. Weallan, weallan, and Eng.
Well.) are ebullire, to spring out as a well or spring; and then astutare, arere. Som. says, "Weallan, to be very angry, to be rough and troublous, to rage; it, to break or burst out, to seethe, to boil." The cons. usage (placed first by Som.) is obvious from the primitive, and very well accounts for quoile, (as Lye in Jun. writes the verb) coyle or coil, as applied in Eng.

COIN, v. s. An iron seal with which

-AGE. metal is stamped (cusidur); so called

CO-INHERITANCE, -TOR. One who inherits, is heir with, one or more, others.

CO-INQUINATE, v. To make common.

L. Con, and inquinare; Fr. Continguer, to co-inquinare, pollute, soyle, defile; also to defame.
 —Col.

CO-JOIN, v. Conjoin, so written in Shak.

COISTRELL, s. A kestrel or kastrel, (qv.) so written in Shak.

COIT, v. s. -ING. The primitive meaning will be, (according to Dr. Jamieson),—

To toss, to throw, to cast. And a coit or quoit,—any thing tossed, thrown, or cast.
 But more probably this is merely cons.
 usage.

The word Coit or Quoit, seems to be to hit or cut; the object of the thrower being to cut into the ground as close to the pin as he can.

See QUOTE. Dr. Jamieson thinks that To coll, is to butt, to jostle; and derives the word from the lat. Colla, violently jectare.

COTITION, s. -TURE. Cotition, a going or moving to or towards—in unison.

L. Co, and ire, ire, to go together, to move in unison. Cotition occurs several times in Warner's African's England.

-ING. Fr. Coller, accoller, to embrace, coll, or clip about the neck.—Col. L. Collum, qd. collare, i.e. collum brachii ligare, seu vincire.—Sk. It is also written Accoll, (qv.) See COLLAR.

COL-LAPSE, v. To fall together: gen. app. when things so fall through disease. And then (met.)—

To decay, to fall into ruin, to wither. L. Com, and lapsus; past p. of labi, to fall.

COLLAR, v. s. -ED, adj. To collar, is to seize by the collar, sc. of the coat, &c. i.e. the part which is round, or which surrounds the neck; to roll up—into the shape of the neck.

Sp. Collar, cuello; It. Col-lare, -lo; Fr. -lier, col; from L. Collum; which lhrs considers akin to the A. S. Ger. D. & Sw. Hals; Alom. Halsian; D. & Ger. Halsen, amplexi, to embrace; Fr. Coller, to embrace about the neck. The prefix Co is necessary to complete the etym. of lhrs. See COLL.

COL-LATE, v. To bring together, to -ING. bring into a state for examination and comparison, and thus, to compare; also to bring -ION. s. s. together or collect,—to confer.

Philosophy (says Cicero) consists ex collatione rationum, (Tusc. iv. 38.) and by our early writers, collation is applied to—

Discourses, comparing or examining one thing by another,—to a conference.

A collection of various articles for repeat or refreshment is also called a collation. Also when each individual confers or collates his share.

L. Collatus, called the past p. of Con-ferre, Fr. Colla-tionner; It. -zionare, to collate (a book).

COL-LECT, v. s. To gather, or put to -EDLY. gether; to bring, or bear into

-EDNESS. one place; one mass, or heap, -IBLE. or sum.

-ION. To gather, or bring together, -IVE. things dispersed; (met.) as to

-IVELY. collect the thoughts; resume

-OR. command over them; to collect

-ORY. one thought from or in conse-

-ORSHIP. quence of another; to infer one from another; to confer, to compare.

"[They] are generally so exactly suited to them [the epistle and gospel] that some think they take their name from being collected out of those parts of Holy Writ. But the use of the word in the Bible and the Fathers, being applied to denote the gathering together of the people in religious assemblies, thence some ritualists say, The collects are prayers made among the people collected or gathered together. Others think they are named collects because of their comprehensive brevity, because the priest in them sums up the desires of the people in a little room. I may add in this variety my own conjecture, that these prayers have been named collects from their being used so near the time of making the collection before the Holy Communion."—Comber; A Companion to the Temple.

COLT, v. s. The young male of the horse -ISH. is called a colt; and it is cons. -ISHLY. app. to—

That which has the frolicsomeness, wantonness, wildness, or other distinguishing quality of that animal.

"From Decker's Bellman's Night Walks, &c. 1616, it appears (Mr. Steevens says) that the technical term for any inn-keeper or hackney-man who had been cheated of horses, was a colt." Hence To colt, is—to befool, to trick.

Here seems to consider the A. S. and Eng. Collt, the Sw. Kallt, and Eng. Child, A. S. Cild, i. e. any thing borne or begotten, to be the same word diff. written and app. See CHILD.

COLUMBARY, s. A place, a house, for doves or pigeons.

L. Columbaria, sc. domus.—The bird is said to be called Columba, from its swimming or floating motion, (Gr. Κολυμβαν, to swim.)

COLUMBINE, s. Fr. Columbin, — A plant, so called (Sk.) because the flowers appear to represent the form or figure (columbarum) of doves.

COLUMN, s. It is app. to any thing -AR. which stands as columns do, —firmly, -ARY. regularly, side by side, as the co-ED. lumnus of a page, a column of troops, "Pillars which we likewise call columnes, for the word among artificers is almost naturalized." — Walton.

Fr. Co-lonne; It. Jonna; Sp. Jumna; L. Columna. So called because they (columnae) are supports (culminis) to the top or roof.—Festus. And Columina, so called because the ancients covered their buildings with straw or thatch, (culmina.) Inter-

COLUMES, s. Circles drawn through the poles, cutting the equinoctial into equal parts, the sodiac into unequal.

L. Colerti; Gr. Κολοῦροι, curtailed. So called, (Voss.) as if κολοι την οραν, cauda mutili; because part of them is invisible to us, and of such part they seem to be (mutili) deprived or destitute.

COMART, s. Is the reading of the quarto Shak. 1604. The folio has com'ment, which has been rejected by the editors, because it "makes a tautology;" though comart is confessedly a word not found elsewhere.

CO-MATE, s. A mate or fellow in union with others.

COMATE, ad. Hairy.—Fairfax.

L. Coma, the hair.

COMB, v. s. To comb (or kemb) is to -AR. draw a comb through the hair or -ISA. wool, so as to separate, and dis-LESS. entangle it.

A. S. Comb, pecten; D. Kammen, kammen; Gr. Kammen, pectinare; D. & Dan. Kam; Ger. Kamm, pecten. Jun. thinks that comb (crista avium) is so called, ἀκμωσ, akmos, curvatura; and that comb, for the hair, is so used from its likeness dentate serrataque crista gallinaceae. Wach., that the ancient Ger. Kam, manus, (whence hau, and then hand.) was the primitive word, and has descended to us,—app. to things, which have inclines (incisuras) similar to the hand, pectini, cristae, &c. Un-

COMB, s. Fr. Combe; A. S. Comb,—a valley enclosed on either side with hills.—Som.—W. Browne.

COMBAT, v. s. To fight, to battle; to -ANT, s. ad. be or cause to be in fight or -ER. battle; to engage in battle, to -ERIE, s. strive, to struggle with or a -CY, † gainst, to contend or contest, to -TENSY, † conflict.—Hen. VIII. † Warner.

Fr. Com-bat, battre; It. -battere; from con, and battere, (Sk.) to fight, to strike; and battere, from A. S. Batta, fustis—Spel. Of this, the A. S. Beast-en, to beat, supplies the root. See BATTLE. Inter-

COMBER, or CUMBER, v. s. To over--ANCE. load, to oppress with a load or -MENT. burthen, with toil or trouble, -OUS. with vexation; to embarrass, to -SOME. harass.

-*SOME*LY. Sw. Kysmer; D. Kom-meren, -beren; Ger. Kummern; Fr. Encombrer; It. Ingombrare, qd. (Sk. thinks) incumulare, that is cumulo rerum impedire. Dis-En-Un-

COMBINE, v. To join, unite, connect, -ABLE. or fasten two (binos) together, as -ATE, ad. we now use the word To couple. -ATION. Now app. gen.—

To join, to connect, to counite, to coalesce.

Fr. Com-biner; Sp. -binar; It. & L. Combinare, barbarum pro ungere, connectere. — Voss. de Vitula, lv. 4. "Bina jumenta jungere." — See Martin. "Combinaige," Cot. says, "is a coupling, uniting, or joining of pairs." In-Re-Un-

COM-BURGER, s. -SHIP. A fellow burgher.

COMBUSTIBLE, s. ad. A combustible -IBILITY. is—any thing that may be burnt; -ION. gen. app. to things easily ignited -BUST, s. or set on fire; and which also spread their fire so as to communicate it rapidly to other materials.

Combustion,—the heat, noise, and confusion of a fire or conflagration; met.—the heat, noise, and confusion of violent passions.—Chaucer. Burton.

Et uro, et buero dixere, says Voss. Buro, he derives from the Gr. ὑρῶ; and uro, from the Heb. See FIAS. In-

COME, v. s. Come is a complex term, -ER. expressing a particular species of -ING. motion. We see a thing in motion; -MING. the distance lessens, the thing approaches, and it comes: if the distance increases, the thing departs, and it goes. Such is the broad distinction between to come, and to go. C in the former, is the same literal root as G in the latter.

To come is usually interpreted in conjunction with prs., and even with other words connected with it; but the signification of the expression is entirely consequential, and must be deduced from the context. He came to me; he came to the block:—in these instances came means lit. the same; the consequences to the moving body were different, and are by usage implied.

And (met.) The reckoning came to a pound, i. e. amounted. He came to his senses, i. e. he regained or recovered them. In these expressions, amount, and regain, are by usage denoted.

To come off,—to escape, to evade, to elude.

Comely in R. G. and Wiclif,—comers, sc. from foreign places; foreigners, strangers.

Comming ;—"The malt is laid in a heap until it is ready to shoot at the root end; which the maltsters call comming."—Hollinshed.

COMEDY, s. Comic,—having the qualities of comedy ;—mirthful, lively, facetious, witty, ridiculous, droll.

-ALLY. A comical poet, in Holland, (Plutarch,) is a comic poet, a writer of comedies. A comical actor,—an actor of comedies.

Fr. Com-édie ; It. -media ; Sp. -edia ; L. Com-edia ; Gr. Κωμῳδία ; according to Festus, from comu, i. e. vicus, a village, and œdū, canis, a song,—a village song ; because these plays (ludi) were usually performed in villages before they were introduced into cities.

COMELY, ad. av. Becoming, fitting, decent, appropriate, suitable ; gracefulness, handsome, of good appearance.

"Hee (Abp. Parker) noted wel the comelynes of apparel to be, when it was fashioned like the bodie."—Strype.

Jun. and Sk. agree, from come or become, in its cons. usage. Un-

COMESSATION,* s. App. to—a convivial banquet, which, after supper, was prolonged far into the night.—Bp. Hall.

L. Com-essatio, -essari ; from Gr. Κομωσ.—Var. And κομωσ, (Lennep), quasi convensius, conco, et in primis hominum ebriorum, noctu vagantium cum cantu ; an assembly of men, drunk, and roving in the night with song. Comessatio, in Suetonius, (Vit. Domitiani, c. 21,) Holland renders "Reare banquet."

COMESTIBLE,* ad. Fr. Comestible,—That may be eaten.—Sir T. Elyot. Wotton.

L. Com-edere.

COMET, s. "These blazing starres the Greekes call cometas, our Rhography," manes crinitas ; dreadful to be scene, with blondie haire, and all over rough and shagged in the top, like the bush of haire upon the head."—Holland. Plinie.—Boyle.

Gr. Κομήτης ; It. Sp. & L. Cometa, stella or-ita ; Fr. Comète ; D. & Ger. Komet, from L. Coma, the hair.

COMFIT, v. a. -URE. Also written Confts, (qv.) and Confection.

Fr. Con-fitures ; It. -fetture ; Sp. -fitura. All (says Sk.) from L. Confectio, from conficere, confectionem, to make up together. Casen. observes, that the apothecary was called Confectionarius ; and medicine, Confectio.

COMFORT, v. z. Also written Confort, -ABLE. (qv.) "To comfort, solace, -ABLENESS. recreate ; to encourage or cheer up ; also, to confirm, help, strengthen, reinforce."—Cot.

-ER. To comfort is—

-RESS. To strengthen, to invigorate,

*-ATIVE,** (sc. the spirits ; ) to encourage,

-MENT,† rage, to inspirit, to animate, to enliven ; to cheer, to console.

Comfortable is used very variously ;—That may be comforted (As you Like it ; ) capable of comfort, or of being comforted ; feeling, receiving, or taking comfort ; also, That can or may comfort ; able to comfort ; giving or bestowing comfort ; cheering or cheerful.—Udal. Hackluyt.

Mid. L. Con-fortare ; Fr. -forter. Cot., in his interpretation, has put that last which should have been first ; inasmuch as fortis, strong, anciently fortis, (from Gr. ἔσπερος, itself from εσπερ, espere, Voss.) is the true etymology of the word. Dis-Mis-Re-Un-

COMITIAL, ad. Of or pertaining to the comitia, or assemblies of the people, courts, &c.

L. Comitiatus, ab antiquo comire, for cobire, to come together, to assemble.

COMMA, s. -ISM. Incision, intersection, distinction, concision, conciseness.

Gr. Κομμα, incisura, from κεκομμενος, past p. of κομειν, incidere, to cut into. From Commaticus, which St. Jerome applies to Hecuba, "Ovee commaticus est," Horsley appears to have adopted commaticus.

COMMAND, v. z. To give (any thing)

-ABLE. into the hands of another ; to put or place under, to deliver, to

-ATORY. commit to, the care of another,

-EDNESS. sc. for some express purpose,

-ER. with directions, with orders, for

-ING. a particular expressed purpose.

-INGLY. And thus—

-MENT. To have or keep under direction

-RESS. or government, power or authority, dominion or subjection ; to order, to govern, to direct, to control.

Fr. Com-mander ; It. -andare, jubere, imperare ; from L. Com, and mandare, qd. in manu dare ; so Gr. Ενχειρῆεν, in manus dare, tradere, committere. Un-

COM-MARK,* s. A mark or march (qv.) ; a bound or confine. Shelton.

COMP-ETE, v. To seek after, or strive,

-ENT. or endeavour to attain, that

-ENTLY. which another is seeking after

-ENCE. or striving to attain, sc. in ri-

-ENCY. valry, in emulation: and, in

-ITION. Shak., simply in society with,

-ITOR. as an associate, as a confederate.

-ITRIX, or “Venir en compétence avec un

-ITRESS. autre,—to strive, or contend for, to make equal claim to a thing with another; to challenge, covet, or sue for a thing, as well as another; also to paragon, or compare himself, or to be laid in equal balance, with another; to make or hold himself every way as good as another.”—Cot. And cons.—

Competent, is—convenient, meet, fit, or suitable, or adapted; sufficient, adequate, or proportioned to. See IN-

Competible,—see COMPATIBLE. To com-

COM-PINGE, v. To put together, to join, unite, knit, or connect together.

L. Com-pingere. See COMPACT.

COM-PLACENT, s. Pleasing, gratify-

-IAL. ing, agreeable; having a desire

-IALLY.* or disposition to please, to gratify.

-CENCE. See COMPLAISANT.

-CENCY. “Complacency is alone applicable to that species of good, which originates from some mental or moral excellence. . .

Complacential regards consist both in the approbation of the mind and feelings of the heart.”—Cogan. **Baxter.*

COM-PLAIN, v. As now used,—To

-ABLE. utter grief, sorrow, or discontent;

-ANT, s. to deplore, to bewail, to lament;

-ER. to express, declare, or proclaim

-ING. dissatisfaction or uneasiness; to

-PLAIN, s. allege cause of disapprobation or censure.

Fr. Com-plaindre; It. -piagnere; L. Con, beat; plangere, from plagere; and plagere, from the ancient Gr. Πλάγην, to strike. Plangere,

(Voss.) began to denote especially,—pro dolore

caput aut pectus percutere, i.e. through, or on account of, grief, to strike the head or breast. And as subseq. app.—loudly or clamorously to express, declare, or manifest grief. Un-

COM-PLAISANT, ad. Complaisance -ANTLY. and Complaisant, are but the Fr. -ANCE. manner of writing Complacent and Complacence. See them above.

Complaisant, (Complaisant, by Cowley,) is—desirous, wishing to please or gratify, to oblige, to conciliate (others).

"Complaisance,—that is to say, That every man strive to accommodate himself to the rest."—Hobbs.

Fr. Complaisant, -ance. Un-

COM-PLANATE, s. To make even or level, (planus.)

L. Complanare, -atum.

COMPLEMENT, s. -AL. Now restricted to—The whole, full, and entire number or quantity: the filling up so as to make the entire number or quantity. See COMPLEMENTS.

Sp. Complemento; It. Compiimento; L. Complementum;—that which is added for the sake of finishing, or filling, (Gesner), from com, and plere, to fill. Mins. and Lye consider comple- and compli-ment, (anciently written without discrimination,) to be the same word. Mins. calls complementa,—"Ceremonies, accomplishments, making that perfect which was wanting." Lye,—inania quedam verba, et quasi complementa orationis. (See COMPLETUM.) Sk. suggests that complement is from comply, qd. complyments.

COMPLETE, v. ad. Not unfrequently

-LY. but improperly written Com-pleat. To fill, fulfil or accomplish; to perfect, to perform
-IVE. fully, wholly, without omissions
-ORY, ad. s. or deficiencies.
-MENT.* Completory, (Burnet), — see COMPLINE.—Glanvill.

Sp. Completar; It. piere, pire; Fr. piéler; L. Com-pleri, -pletum, to fill up, to fulfil; pieo, from the obsolete Gr. πλεω, whence πληθος, to fill. In-Un-

COM-PLEX, ad. s. Knit, or connected

-ED, ad. together, interwoven, involved, -EDNESS. intricate.

-ITY. "Ideas made up of several simple

-LY. ones put together, I call complex;

-NESS. such as are beauty, gratitude,

-URE, s. a man, an army, the universe;

which though complicated of various simple ideas, or complex ideas made up of simple ones, yet are, when the mind pleases, considered each by itself as one entire thing, and signified by one name."—Locke.

"The only composition is in the terms; and consequently it is as improper to speak of a complex idea, as it would be to call a constellation a complex star: they are not ideas, but merely terms, which are general and abstract."—Tooke. See COMPLEXION and COMPLICATE.

Sp. Com-plexo; It. plezzo; Fr. pleze; L. Complexit, simul et totum plectere; Gr. πλεω-ειν, to knit, or intertwine. (And see COMPLEX.) Complexus, as opposed to simplex, was probably introduced by the writers on Logic in the mid-ages. In-

COMPLEXION, s. The whole connexion

-AL. of the parts; the whole composition,

-ALLY. the compass, or comprehension of

-ARY. parts; the frame or texture; the

-ED. temperament or disposition. Also app. merely to—

The general appearance, hue, or colour.

Watts uses complexion as equivalent to complexity.—"The complexion of the terms of propositions," (sc. that are complex.)

Fr. Com-plexion; It. plexione; Sp. plexion, -plexion; L. Complexio, from Complexi, complexus, quia *complexio complexit*ur totum statum corporis, et omnes facultates ejus.—Mins. Dis-

COMPLICATE, v. ad. To complicate

-ED, ad. is,—To intertwine, to inter-

-LY. weave, to involve.

-NESS. Complice, more usually de-

-ION. complice,—one who is knitted, -PLICE, s. joined, or united with another;

who co-operates with, aids or assists another.

Sp. Complice-ar; Fr. -ation; L. Complice-are, -atum, Gr. πλεω-ειν, to knit, to intertwine. Complex, icis, the s. seems to have been introduced into the L. apud posterioris evi scriptores, and from it the Fr., It., Sp., and also our own language have adopted complice,—socius sceleris. Ac—Also Ex-Im-plicate.

COMPLIMENT, v. s. The kind complaisance

-AL. with the will of another; an

-ALLY. act of such complaisance, a verbal

-ALNESS. declaration of it;—a complaisance

-ARY, ad. s. or acquiescence, or assent, beyond what may appear necessary; viz. with an intent to please or flatter any weakness, any prepossession or prejudice.

"Complimentalness, as opposed to plainness, must signify giving titles of civility, that really do not belong to those, to whom they are thus given."—Hammond.

Stevens and Tyrw. think that "To comply" in Shak.'s Hamlet, (Act II. sc. 2, and Act V. sc. 2,) is used in the sense of "To compliment;" and Mr. Malone produces from an old poem, called "A Fly for Fortune," the v. To recompite, qd. to return a compliment; and thus they sanction the etym. of Sk. See COMPLEMENT and COMPLY.

COMPLINE, s. That ecclesiastical office which completes (complet) and closes the offices of the day.

Fr. Compite; Mid. L. Com-pleto, -pletorum, -plenda.

COMPLISH,* v. -MENT.† Now To accomplish, (qv.) To fulfil; to perform, to execute, fully.—Wyat. †Mors.

L. Complere, to fill, to fulfil.

COM-PLOT, v. s. To plot or pligh together,

-MENT. sc. for any common purpose, for

-T-ER. the execution of some design; in

-ING. any conspiracy or confederacy: and thus—

To conspire, to confederate, to combine.

COMPLY, v. To comply, (as commonly -ABLE. used,) is,—To bend, lean or in-

-ANCE. cline to, to yield or assent to; to

-ANT. give up, grant or concede, sc. to

-ANTLY. the wishes of another; to accom-

-ER. modate. See COMPLIMENT.

*It. says, either from the Fr. Com-plaire; It. piacere, qd. placere, vel a complicare, i.e. alieno ingenio se accommodare. To ply, however, is a common Eng. word, and, according to Tooke and Jam., is no other than the A.S. Plegg-as, incumbent. As plyge on his boorum: sed libris incumbent. Let him ply his books; let him bend, lean, or incline his mind to them: apply to them. In-Us.*

COM-PONE, v. To put, place, or set together. s. ad. gether, sc. in order, form, or method; and thus, to arrange, settle, or adjust; also, to put together—in union or conjunction; and thus, to combine, or mix, or mingle.

Sp. Com-poner; It. -porre; L. Com-ponere, to put, place, or set together. See COMPOSE, (the v. now in use.)

COM-PORT, v. s. Comport is gen. used of the conduct or behaviour, the carriage of a person; thus, se comporter, attorn, to carry, bear, behave, maintain, or sustain, himself.—Cot.

To carry or bear with; to move or act in unison; to suit, to agree, to be consistent with.

Fr. Comporter; L. Comportare, to bear, or bring together.

CONGRUE, v. <sup>ad.</sup>† To flock or come together; to convene or concur;
 -ENTLY. to be convenient, or consistent;
 -ENCE. suitable or agreeable, fit or proper.
 -ENCT. The scholastic distinction between merit of congruity and
 -ITY. merit of condignity, seems well
 -OUSLY. explained by Hobbes, thus;—
 -LY.† “But there is between these two sorts of merit, this difference, that in contract I merit by virtue of my own power, and the contractor's need; but in this case of free-gift, I am enabled to merit only by the benignity of the giver. In contract, I merit at the contractor's hand that he should depart with his right: in case of gift, I merit not that the giver should part with his right; but that when he has parted with it, it should be mine, rather than another's. And this I think to be the meaning of that distinction of the schools, between meritum congrui, and meritum condigni. For God Almighty, having promised Paradise to those men (hoodwinked with carnal desires) that can walk through this world according to the precepts and limits prescribed by him; they say, he that shall so walk, shall merit Paradise ex congruo. But because no man can demand a right to it by his own righteousness, or any other power in himself, but by the free grace of God only, they say, no man can merit Paradise ex condigno.”

-LY. food; and sometimes, gen. to dress or prepare.

Fr. Cuisinier; Sp. Cocinero; It. Cuoco; L. Cocus, from coquere. (See COCTION.) A. S. Coc; Ger. Koch; D. & Sw. Kock. A word (says Ilse) not long heard on our shores; but introduced from abroad, (cum alis gulis illecebris), with other temptations to gluttony.

COOL, v. ad. z. Met.—To allay, to appease, to damp, to calm, to moderate, to assuage, to temper.
-LY, ad. as. A cooling card, Mr. Nares thinks, is a phrase borrowed from Primer, or some other game, in which money was staked upon a card; a card so decisive as to cool the courage of the adversary.

A. S. Cel-an; Ger. Kul-en; D. Kel-en; Sw. Kel-a; Dan. Køller. See KULE, and COLD.

COOP, v. z. Ray says, "A coop, a muck-coop, a lime-coop,—a cart or wain made close with boards, to carry hay," ad. any thing that otherwise would fall out."

"A fish-coop is likewise a great hollow vessel made of twigs. A coop is gen. used for a vessel, or place to pen up, or inclose any thing; as that wherein poultry are shut up to be fed, is called a coop." To coop, then, is—

To keep, hold, or contain; to confine, to shut up, inclose, or incage.—**Holland*.

Probably—merely to keep.—Sk. A. S. Keo-an, coo-an; D. Keo-en, to keep, hold, or contain.

COOPERATE, v. To work or labour together with, in union or combination; nation with; to aid or assist in; to contribute exertions or endeavours for some common purpose.

**Holland*. Sp. Nicholson.

Fr. Coopér-er; Sp. -ar; It. -are.

COOPTATION, s. Cockram has Co-optate, to choose.

A choice or choosing, a taking, a selection.

COORDAIN, v. To keep in the same -BEN-ATE, ad. bounds or limits, in the same class, under the same rules; to hold, or cause to hold, the same rank or station.

Co-ordinate is opposed to sub-ordinate.

COP, s. To cope, is to cap, or cover: to Corz, s. z. rise or raise to a top or summit.

-ING. Copple is the dim. of Cop. "Copples, s. pled rocks."—Hackluyt. "A copples, s. copples hat."—H. More.

High crowns were anciently called copples hats.—Steevens. Copp'd hills, he also says, are hills rising to a top or head. The upper tier of masonry, that covers a wall, is still called the copping or coping. In Devonshire, cob-walls are walls raised to a certain height with stone, and then cobbed, copped or coped with a composition. See CAP, and Coa.

A. S. Cop, a garment that monks used: apex, culmen, fastigium,—the top, cop or head of any thing.—Som.

CO-PARCENER, s. One who has part

-CENARY. or share with others; a sharer.

-T-NER. Coparcener is the same as Copartner.
-NERSHIP.

CO-PARTMENT. See COMPART.

COPE, v. z. Fr. Coup, Cot. explains, a blow, stroke, &c.; also a vennie in Fencing. Similar to this is the usage by Shak.

The application of the s. has been extended gen. to—A fight, encounter, battle, contest.

To cope, as now used, is equivalent to—

To contend, to encounter, to struggle, strive or contend with; to engage. "Their horses refused and wolds not cope.... theyr horses refused at the cope."—Berners. "They say he yesterday cop'd Hector in the battell and stroke him downe."—Shak.

Mid. L. Colp-us; It. -o; Fr. Coup, formerly Couip; Sp. Goipe: which some derive through the L. Colaphus, Gr. Kolaphos, from κολαφειν, tundere, to bruise.—Mén. But Wach. considers the Ger. Klopfen, (Itala L., natura mobilis, e sede nativâ, transposita), pulsare, percutere, ferire, to beat, to strike,—to be the root. Jun. thinks it is from A. S. Coep-an, to traffic, to exchange; to buy or sell; (to pay.—Mer. of V.) and that it may have been extended to any kind of exchange: and thus,—to cope with any one in fight is to interchange blows. We still say,—to deal with any person, to deal a blow. See COPMAN.

COPEMAN,* s. COPESMATE.† Copesmate,—a chapmate.

**Versteegan*. B. Jonson. †Ford. Warner.

A. S. Coepman, a chapman.

COPIE, s. Enough or more than enough, -OUS. sufficiency, plenty, abundance, -OUS-LY. fullness, satiety.

-NESS. L. Copia, contracted from Co-opie; quasi cum ope.—Var. and Voss. The s. Copia, (from L. Copia), adopted through the Fr. by old writers, (Berners, Udal, Sir T. Elyot, and also B. Jonson;) is now obsolete.

CO-PLANT,* v. To plant with something else, at the same time, in the same place.

**Howell*. L. Planta.

CO-PORATION,* s. A part or share, in conjunction with. See COPARCENER.

**Spenser*.

COPPER, s. ad. v. A metal.

-AS. Fr. Cuyere; Sp. Cobre; A. S. Cyper; D. Kop-er; Ger. -fer; Dan. Køber; L. -ISH. Cuprum, i. e. as Cyprium; Cyprian brass. -OSE. Cuprum is not found in any writer earlier than Spartianus. -Y.

COPPICE, s. or COPSE, s. v. CORSY. A little wood, (says Mina), from Fr. Couper, i. e. scindere, to cut down; because it is underwood not appointed to grow to great trees, but to be cut down, (i. e. chopped.)

Jun. thinks, manifestly from Gr. Korkein, to cut. Korades, in Hesychius, is—arbores caduæ. Wood chopt or lopt, (or copt, i. e. lopt;) headed down, polled.

COP-TANK, s. The same as Copatan. See Cor.

Mr. Nares produces an instance of it written Coppletank; and another, Coppin-tank. Other examples are given by Mr. Stevens, in his Note on Copatan.

COPULATE, v. ad. To connect, to conjoin, to unite; and sometimes
-IVE, ad. s. restricted, as Couple is, to the -IVELY. conjunction or union of two only. See To BRACE.

COPY, v. s. To multiply writings; i. e. to -ING. write from another writing what
-IER, or is there written; to write, to
-YER. transcribe, describe or delineate
-YIST, or from any pattern, model or ex--IST.* ample; to describe or delineate in imitation or resemblance; to imitate; to strive to resemble; to follow an example.

Copy is technically app. to the MS. from which any book, &c. is printed, graven, &c.

Copy-right,—right in the Copy; sc. to publish it; to sell or otherwise dispose of it.

Copy-hold,—tenure by copy of court roll. **Shafesbury*.

Fr. Copier; It. -are; Sp. -ar; D. Kopieren. Copiam dare. copiam facere exscribendi, describendi. —See JAN. SK. and MEN.

COQUETTE, or COQUET, s. v. ad. Coquetry is app. to—Assumed, pretended, affected, forced liveliness, vivacity, or cheerfulness; to insincere attempts to please or be pleasing, to be agreeable, attractive or alluring.

Cocket, brisk, apish, pert.—North, Gloss. Perhaps, as SK. thinks, from the Fr. Coqueter, i. e. to chuck, as a cock among hens; also to strow it, like a cock on his own dunghill.—Cot.; who in v. Coquardise, uses cockiness, as its English equivalent.

CORAL, s. ad. "It is said that this plant -LINE. [corall] whilst it groweth and is
-OID, ad. alive, if a man touch it never so
-OIDAL. little, becomes as hard immediately as a stone. The fishers therefore, to prevent that inconvenience (as knowing the nature thereof) either pluck it up with their nets, or cut it with some sharpe edged yron tooles: which is the cause that it is commonly called curalium, as some make interpretation of the word, ὀρί ἐν δαί κν-περραι, because it is cut and shorne (as it were) in the sea."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Corail; It. -allo; Sp. -al; Lat. Corallum; Gr. Κοράλλιον; of unsettled etymology. Voss produces various conjectures, and among them, that given by Pliny, (qv.)

CORANTO, or CORRANTO, s. Fr. Courante; It. Correre; a swift and lively dance.

CORB, s. ad. Crooked, bowed, vaulted, arched, bent, archwise.—Cot.

To choose, to take; and thus—Cost, s. will be equivalent to Price, (qv.) that which is taken; sc. taken by one, and given or paid by another. Cost-an, cost-ed, cost-ed, cost follow in a regular course of corruption, and present an obvious etymology. COSTARD, s. A costard is said by the -ARD-MONGER. old lexicons to be a kind of -ER-MONGER. apple. Drayton (Poly-Olbion, s. 18) mentions it among the sundry fruits, "that have their sundry names in sundry countries plac'd." And it is classed by Evelyn among those in prime in October. Coster- or costard-monger, is explained to be fruiterer in general. Sk. derives Costard from coster, a head; but there is no authority for such a word. H. (in Sk.) from D. Kost, and cibus, and aerd, natura, qd. cibus naturalis; springing spontaneously from the earth. Pomarius, is rendered by Drant, Costerdmonger.

COSTEREL, s. Fr. Costereauls,—A nickname given unto certain footmen, that served the kings of England in their Fr. wars.—Cot.

Sir T. Smith says, Esquires were at the first Costerele, or the bearers of the arms of knights. See COTERIE.

COSTIVE, ad. -NESS. Close or closed, stopped, constipated, (qv.)
Fr. Costive; It. Costi-pare, -pato.

COSTUME, s. Habit, manner; continual fashion or order. Fr. Costume, custom.

CO-SUFFERER, s. A fellow-sufferer.

CO-SUPREME, ad. A fellow-supreme.

COTE,+ v. To cite, now written to quote, (qv.)—Udal.

COTE, v. s. Any thing which covers, Cot, s. shelters or protects the human
-T-AGE, s. or any other body,—whether -AGED, ad. app. to a small place for men
-AGELY. to dwell or rest in, or for the -AGER. shelter and protection of sheep,
-ER, or pigeons, or other animals.
-IER. Du Cange has Cota, navis species, which he thinks ought to be written Cocca, from Cogo, a cog-boat. See Cog. Cottier seems to be equivalent to Cotarell. See COTERIE.

"A. S. Cote, domuncula, casa, tugurium, a cote, a cottage; such as that we call a sheep-cote, or the like, forensal nostratum latinate cota, colla, collagium, It. spelunca, cubile, sella. A denne, a cave, a bed, a couch, a nest."—Sow. In A. S. it is also written Cyle. Spel. says, primariè à Græco noctn, cubile, lustrum ferarum. Verstegan seems to think that cote (coat), a garment, may have been transferred from cot; as to the little house or cote of the body. The common origin may be the Ger. Kutten, tegere, to cover, to protect; and thus, cot, cote, or coat, may mean—as above.

COTE, v. "To cote, is to overtake. In the laws of coursing, Mr. Tollett says, 'To cote, is when a greyhound goes endways by the side of his fellow, and gives the hare a turn.' This quotation seems to point out the etym. of the v. to be from the Fr. Côté, the side."—Steevens.

"Fr. Coste à coste,—equally, in even rank, side by side, cheek by jowl."—Cot.

COTERIE, s. Fr. Coterie,—company, society, association of people. Men. writes Cotereux, coterie; Mid. L. Coterellus; and this he, with Spel. thinks is from the Low L. Cota, a cot; cotæ nos tugurii habitator. (See Men., Du Cange, Spel., and Voss. de Vitiis.) Sk. has "Cottarels, clientes seu beneficiarii omnium vilissimi, a nostro Cote." See also Cotterie in Cot for the earlier usage of the word.

COTQUEAN, s. Mr. Gifford says, is a corruption of Cuck-quean, (qv.) a woman whose husband is unfaithful to her bed. But in Hall it is evidently app. as explained in Philips's New World of Words, quoted by the editor of Hall's works: viz. "A man that is too busy in meddling with women's affairs." And Cot, in Craven Dialect, is "A man who is fond of cooking for himself." Cotqueanity—B. Jonson.

COTTON, v. s. ad. To cotton, is, perhaps, -ous.+ merely,—to be, or cause to be, like -y. cotton; as soft, as easy, as yielding as cotton; and thus, to take any thing easily, or quietly; to work, or act easily, or quietly; to soothe or soften, to assuage, to mitigate, to yield, to accede or agree to, (qv.)— Evelyn.

Fr. Cot-toner, -ton; It. -tone; Sp. -on; D. Kot-ton. Sk. says, so called from its similitude to the down which adheres to the quince, Malus Cydonia, which the Italians call cotogni; and cotogni, manifestly à cydonie.—To cotton,—con-

-ER. low, down, flat; to deject, to
-ING. depress; to depose, to repose;— to lie or lay hidden; to lurk; to hide, to cover, to cloak, to clothe, to invest.

Coucher,—one who couches; one who lies, sc. in wait, or on watch, or on duty.
The word in the latter usage occurs in Stat.
37 Edw. III. c. 16. (See in Rastal, fol. 535.)
“Couched with perles,—laid or trimmed with perles.”—Tyrus.

Couch is used, by Wiclif, as equivalent to chamber, (or cot.)

To couch the lance,—to lay or place it in the rest.

Couching, in Surgery,—the operation by which a cataract is depressed.

COUNTER, av. Against, in opposition, in resistance, contrariwise.

Fr. Contre; L. Contra. En-In.

COUNTER,—Is very much used (as the L. Contra, qv.) in composition; and it may be so used, either adverbially or adjectively, with any word, when contrariety or opposition is intended. For many of our own compounds we are perhaps indebted to the French: e. g. Contre-ballerer, -changer, -chanter, -gager, -garde, -mander, -miner, -peser, -poison, -scarpe, -signer, -seeller. When Counter stands before a s., whether separate or prefixed, it is in its manner of signification an ad.; before a v. or ad. it is an av. A counter-poise, is a poise or weight—counter, opposed to, put or set against, another weight. To counter-poise, is to poise or weigh oppositely or against another weight. Some words have received a usage cons. upon the effect of the contrariety or opposition, as in the instances following of Counteract and Counterfeit.

COUNTER-ACT, v. -ION. Smith writes, Contra-act.

COY, s. ad. "Fr. Quoy, —quiet, still, peaceable, restful, ease-affecting, —LY. huisht, calm." (Cot.); to which may be added—affecting ease, affecting indifference, affecting reserve.

To coy,—to quiet, to still, to soothe, to calm, to assuage, to appease, to caress, to allure, to entice, to decry.

Coy, in Chaucer, frequently, says Jun., is,—silent, quiet, modest, bashful; To coie, —to play the demure and modest man; also, to assuage, to appease.

Fr. Coy, or Quoy, corrupted from the L. Quietus; R. Cheto; Sp. Quedo. Ac-De-

COZ, s. A contraction of Cousin, (qv.)

COZEN, v. To entice, to allure, delude, —AGE. deceive, defraud, cheat, (to chouse, —ER. qv.)

—ING. Mins. derives from the s. Cousin, qd. to deceive any one per speciem amicitie. Jun. notices this etymology, but prefers the D. Koosen, for knowen, blandiri, sedulari, to flatter upon, soothe, or soothe. The primitive probably is the A. S. Cosianan, to try, to tempt; cosning, trial, temptation. "And me geledde thu us on cosning;"—And lead us not into temptation.

CRAB, s. v. A griping—animal or fruit. —IV. Crabby or Crabbed, ad.—griping, —SED, ad. biting, pinching, sour, harsh, —SED-LY. morose. And— —SED. To crab,—to be or cause to be sour, harsh, morose; difficult; to embitter, or cause to be bitter.

Dan. & A. S. Crabba; D. Krabbe; Ger. Krabbe, krabe; Fr. Ecrevisse. Wach. thinks, from Ger. Krupen; A. S. Creopan, reptare, to creep. Other etymologists, from Gr. Kapaßos; L. Carabæus, cancer genus. Jun. thinks, that from this unpleasant little animal (animalculo inameno, horrendo, minaci,) various things bitter, difficult, rough, grim or gloomy, are in English called crabbes or crabbed, e. g. a kind of bitter and unpleasant apple; a crabbed look, a grim or gloomy look. Sk. derives the apple, Pomum sylvestre, from the D. Schrabben, schrappen, to scrape, to bite; from its biting, sharp and rough taste; and crabbed, met. either from the hardness of the wood, or harsh taste of the fruit. Perhaps by change of g and p, into their cognates c and b, from Go. Greip-an, to gripe. See CRAPPLE, and CAIR.

CRACK, s. v. or CRAKE, v. Crack is app.

—ER. to the noise made, when any thing —ING. brittle partially bursts or breaks —LE. asunder; also, to the breach or —LING. separation itself; also, met. to —NEL. bragging, i. e. breaking or bursting out, sc. in noisy threats or boastings, in clamorous pretensions. (See TO BRAG.) And thus, To crack, is—

To break or burst asunder partially; and, cons., met. to weaken, to injure, to destroy.

To send forth, utter or emit a sharp and sudden sound.

To brag or boast; in older authors written Crake. Bale uses the expression brag boasting; and Chaucer, He cracked boast. See BRAG.

Crackle is a dim. and freq. of Crack.

Cracknel,—a kind of cake, which, when broken, edit crepitum, sends forth a crack.

D. Krac-ken; Ger. -ken; Fr. Craquer; It. Crocchiare; Sp. Cruair; all formed from the sound.—Sk. A source of etymology, Wach. observes, not to be resorted to without necessity; and in this instance perhaps it is so. The A. S. Hrac-od, with the prefix ge, would give ge-hracod, and by a common course of corruption, grac, or crac, crack (or crag)—from the s. Hrac-an, affligere, to dash against. See RACK.

CRADLE, v. s. A small car (or crate)—for rest or repose; (in infancy, in sickness)—for support, or strength;—a case or frame, for supporting, strengthening, holding together.

The v. To place, to lay, to repose, to nurse—in a cradle; and gen. and met. to lay, to repose, to nurse.

A. S. Cradele; Lye thinks it a dim. of Crat. Sk. is more decided: Crat,—carrus, additâ terminatione diminutivâ; qd. carrulus, i. e. vehiculum infantile. Crat or carl, (by transposition) from the A. S. Cyrran, to turn. See CART, and CRATE. Dis-En-

CRAER. See CRAYER.

CRAFT, v. s. Art, science, any trade, requiring art or dexterity; and —LY. (by the fault of those possessed of this mental power) app. to the —INESS. power of deceiving, to artifice, to —S-MAN. fraud.

—MASTER. "Trade or Craft" is a common legal and mercantile expression; and certain small vessels employed in trade, are called Craft; i. e. crafters or traders; for by this latter name they are also signified.

Craftes-man, in Chaucer,—a skilful man.

A. S. Craft; Ger. Dan. & Sw. Kraft; power, strength. Wach. thinks the word was orig. Kraft, from the Gr. Κρατος. Of this there doubts. Jun. observes that craft is frequently used by Chaucer for strength; transferred from bodily strength to mental; and thus app. to art, &c. Craft will form regularly from the v. To crave; Craved, crav'd, craft. To crave is, to beg, to require, to seek; and, hence, to inquire; and the past p. cons.—taught, learned, skilled. Som.—Craft, Ars, scientia, peritia, artificium; craft, art, science, skill, cunning; though now adays it have almost lost the primitive signification, and for the most part is taken for fraud or deceit. Craftig, crafty; craft-lease, i. e. craftless; craftlic, craftily. "Cujus artifex et conditor eat Deus," is rendered by Wielß, "Whose Crafts man and maker is God." Out.—Un.

CRAG, s. Probably the same word as -G-ED, ad. Crack, (qv.) and app. to the -EDNESS. cracked, broken, (ragged, qv.) -Y. rough or rugged, jagged, points -INESS. or projections of a rock; also app. to—the neck; to a part of a neck of mutton.

Mins. from Cam.—Br. Cracy, rupes. Sk. derives both from Ger. & D. Kraeghe, jugulus, cervix, (the neck,) ut summitas montium, quæ sæpius præruptis rupibus obita est.

CRAKE. See CRACK.

CRAM, v. To stuff or stow, to pack or press, or squeeze close; to stuff or stow, sc. the stomach with excess of food; to compress, to constrict.

Dan. Krammer. "A. S. Cramman, farcire, infarcire, densare, constipare, to stuff or cramme."—Som. Formed from v. Kramman, to ram, (qv.) Ge-kram, gram or gram, crum. See CRAMP.

CRAMBE, s. Mr. Gifford quotes, in explanation, "A play at short verses, in which the word is given, and the parties contend who can find most rhymes to it." Perhaps, crum, stuff, or stow in—the most rhymes. Strutt (Sports and Pastimes, iv. 4,) explains Crambo similarly.

CRAMP, v. s. ad. To contract or draw together, to constrain, to confine, restrain or restrict; to hold or keep in confinement, bonds or fetters; to bind or fetter.

Cramp, the ad.—crabbed, difficult.

Chaucer writes Crampish, v.

Ger. Krampen, contrahi, h. e. per lineam curvam in se retrahi; Sw. Krympa, krympna; D. Krimp, indigence, narrow or contracted circumstances; krimping, contraction; kramp, spasm, because it contracts.—Wach. Dan. Kræmpe. It seems formed upon the v. To crum, to press or compress, to constrict. And see CRIMP and CRUMP.

CRANCH. See CRAUNCH.

CRANE, s. v. App. to—A machine for -AGE. raising weights, as well as to the -LING. bird, both in the ancient and modern languages.

A. S. Craen; D. Kraens; Ger. Kran; Gr. Γερανός, grus animal, and grus machina. Γερανός alunt, quia γυνερανα, terram scrutatur, semina in arvis satis legena, est enim ex σπερμολογίαι, aut quia cinereo et cano est colore, tanquam senex, γερων.—Martín.

CRANK, v. s. ad. Crask, is—wrenched, -KLE twisted, bent. To crank,—to -KLING. bend, to wind, to turn. A crank,—a bending, a winding course or way; any thing bent or turned; a course out of a straight line, crossing. In Milton (met.) a twist, a jerk; or, as Warton calls it, "a cross purpose." In Burton,—a wrong doer, a cheat. A ship is crank when she cannot keep a steady course; cons. Crank is—

Pliant, agile, brisk, lively, jolly; and (as Mins.) "lustie, courageous, spiritul." See BUXOM.

D. Kranck-en, kranck-en, debilitare, to debilitate or weaken.—Kilian. Ger. Kran-ken, angrore.—Wach. Sw. Kraencka, deteriorare reddere, to deteriorate or cause to be worse. Howell considers the Eng. Crank, though used in a directly opposite signification, to be the Dutch word. Sk. dialikes such antiphrases; and prefers en-er onkranck, non æger, the initial syllable being lost through the ravages of time. Warton, (on Milton,) considers the word to be unexplained, and that we are to understand by it, cross-purposes. Mins. calls it an old word, and still in use among country people for "lustie, courageous, spiritul." He adopts the antiphrasis rejected by Sk.

Crank is in Dut. Kronckelen, to wring or wrench, to bend; and kronckelen is composed of the prefix gh or ke, and wronckelen, to wring or wrench, to bend: ke-wronckelen, dropping the s and w in hasty pronunciation, becomes kronckelen. The cons. usages may be deduced with as little difficulty as those of buxom or longsome, from the v. To bow, i. e. bend. See CRINKLE.

CRANNY, s. -IED. A small crack, cleft, or fissure: a rent.

A Crannie, craine or cleft. Fr. Cren, cras; It. Crena; L. Crena; perhaps from Gr. Κρενα, i. fons, sc. a fissure or chink, through which water may pass or issue.—Mins. Skin. prefers Old Fr. Creneau, though to this he assigns the same origin, L. Crena. Un.

CRANTS, s. A garland. Mr. Malone says, that in the first folio of Shak. Rites was substituted by the editor for Crants, the reading of the 4to. 1604.

D. Kranke; Ger. Kranz; Sw. Krans; Dan. Krans, corona, corolla; a crown or garland. See Crance, in Jamieson.

CRAPE, s. So called from its crisp texture. Fr. Crepe, crêpe; It. Crape; L. Crispus, clap.

CRAPLE, or GRAFFLE, s. v. i. e. To grapple or gripe, (qv.)

CRAPULA, s. A giddiness of the head.

L. Crapula; Gr. Κραταλη, κατα το κεφαλον, dolor caput vibrans.

CRASH, v. s. -ING. It appears to be the same word as Crush, though usually app. to the sound caused by the act of crushing. See TO CRUSH.

L. Dentibus stridere, perhaps from D. Schrancken, to break with the teeth, to comminute, (to crush;) or rather from Fr. Sécraser, to bruise, croisier, croquer, crepitare. Mins. from Ger. Rauschen, strepitum edere, to send forth a noise. All, Sk. adds, from the sound.

CRASIS, s. App. to—The temper or temperature, produced by the mixtura of various qualities.

Gr. Κρασις, mixtura, temperamentum corporis.

CRATCH, v. i. e. Scratch, sculperre, in-sculpere. (See SCRATCH.)—Jun. "Chaucer.

CRATCH, s. Fr. Creicche, creche,—a rack, or stall, or crib.—Cot.

Sk. from L. Craticula, craticula, crates, a hurdle. See CRATE, infra.

CRATE, s. Now chiefly used for the open wicker or wooden case in which earthenware is packed.

L. Crates, vero tot apertis, quia lignum unum alterum tenet.—Foss. A. S. Cræt? See CRADLE.

CRAVAT, s. A kind of collar or neck-cloth.

Sk. writes it crabbat, or rather crabal, a word then recently introduced into this country: collum Craticulum, because first used by the Cratoles. Mon. says, the Cratoles were com. called cravates; and he names the year 1636 for the time of the introduction of this article of dress into France, about twenty-seven years before Butler published the three first cantos of his Hudibras. There has no doubt the word is of Go. origin, compounded of crav, the neck, and wad, cloth.

CRAVE, v. To beg with all eagerness, to -ER. beg again and again; to beg, ask, -ING. seek or require—earnestly, vehemently, incessantly, to importune.—Jun.

Dan. Kræver; Sw. Kräfva; A. S. Cræfian, requere, petere, implorare, to ask, to beg, to desire. -Som. Cræfian, to rave, to rave, to be ravenous.

CRAVEN, ad. s. v. "Craven—is one who has craved or craven his life from his antagonist, dextramque precantem protendens."—Tooke.

Upon this s. Shak. has formed the v. To craven,—to deprive of strength or courage.

Of the s. Sk. says, I would rather derive it from the v. To crave, quia statim, (sc.) ab hoste veniam peto.

CRAUNCH, or CRANCH, v. To crash, (qv.) crush, or bruise, with the teeth.

D. Schranzen, fangere, rumpere, laniare, frangere, et mandere, dentibus frangere.—Klition. Cranch, (in various parts pron. schranck.) is—Cranck. See RANCH.

CRAW, s. The crop or gorge of a bird; into which birds receive their food, before they pass it into their stomach.

From D. Kraeghe, jugulum, the fore part of the neck, ingruvia, which Voss. calls the sinus inter area guttur. Ger. Kragen; Sw. Krage; Dan. Kraa. See MINS. and THRE.

CRAWL, v. -ER. To creep and To crawl, may admit the same distinction as the L. Reps and Serpere do; the first being app. to express the motion of a short-legged animal; the second, the motion of animals upon their bellies, as the worm, the slug, the serpent.

L. Reps, to creep; Serpere, to draw, or draw along on the belly. D. Krielen, scatere, præser- re vermisibus.—Sk.

CRAY-FISH, or CRAW-FISH, s. Mins. writes Craie-fish or Craivish: Sk., cray-fish potius crevice; both say, from the Fr. Escrevice; which Wach. derives from the Ger. Krebs. See CRAE.

CRAYON, v. s. Fr. Crayonner,—to paint or draw in dry colours; also, to draw first lines, or make the first draught of a picture.—Cot.

From Craye, chalk.

CRAZE, v. As gen. app.—To weaken, -EDNESS. to debilitate, to impair, to de-
-Y. prive of natural strength, to bring -INESS. to a state of imbecility.

"I am right sicker, that the pot was crased."—Chaucer.

Thre, Lye, and Sk. from the Fr. Craser, to crush, to break. Mins. from the Gr. Kpaais, temperamentum. (See CRASIE.) He who labours under any disease, is said to be crasie, propter δυσκρασίαν, or a bad temperature of body. See DYSCRAZY.

CREAK, v. s. -ING. Creak is app. to the noise emitted by ice when trodden upon, before the crack: to the noise of dry shoes, or of a door opening, &c. It may be considered as the dim. of Crack. (qv. and CROAK.)

Kreke, as used by Fabyan, (a crow kreked) is now written Croak.

D. Kreke, krick, kricken; Fr. Criquer, craquer. All from the sound—Sk.

CREAM, v. s. -Y. Cream is app. met. to —The richest portion of any thing. To cream,—

To rise to the surface, as cream does; to take or skim off the cream or richest portion.

Fr. Crème; It. Crema; A. S. Ream; D. Room; Ger. Raum. All, says Sk. from L. Cremor, (suppl. lactis.) Cremor, Voss. derives from Cernere, because it is that fatness, which is separated (seccantur) from the milk. Scal. (see in Men. v. Crema.) thinks Cremor an old French word, signifying the juice expressed from any grain or seed. In Devon, Lye says, Ream is still used. In A. S. we find Mile ren, in Ger. Milchraum. A. S. Hrim, is pruina, the superficial hoar, or whiteness of frost, the rime, (qv.)

CREANCE, v. s. Gen.—To deal upon credit. -ER, s.—a surety. Udal.

L. Credens. "Fr. Creance, s.—faith, belief. Creance, v. to borrow."—Tyrw. "Fr. Creancier, to promise, to assure by his promise; to undertake upon his word."—Cot.

CREASE, v. s. A line or mark formed by crossing.

This word, so common in speech, is rare in writing. R. of Gloucester writes Crussade or Croisade, Creyssery, and Crossed, Creyssed; whence, says Mr. Hearne, I think came the common word, Crossed or Creased. Sk. thinks from the L. Crete, chalk, inasmuch as it is a line or mark drawn by chalk; or from the Ger. Kreide, circulus. Mr. Hearne's etym. appears the more rational.

CREW, s. App. to—A collected, mixed, number or assembly of persons;—a crew of noble knights; a ship's crew.

Written by some of our old writers Cruce, and said by Mins. (in his first edition.) to be Fr.
Accrue, (or cruce), i. e. a growth, rising or augmentation. (See ACCURE.) Sk. prefers D.
Kroogh-en, cauponari, potare, inebriare; to ca-rouse, to drink; and thus to denote,—an assembly or company of drinking or jovial fellows. In A. S.
Cread, cruth, is a crew, or crowd. See CROWN.

CREWEL, CREWELL, or CRUEL, s. ad.

CRIB, v. s. To crib, is a common word for—to take, to steal, to purloin.

To crib,—to put, place, inclose, confine, as in a crib or any small place made to take or receive: as a bed, a stall, a manger.

A. S. Crybbe; Dan. Krybbe; D. Krippe, krebbe; Ger. Krippe, kruppe. Som. explains A. S. Crybbe, a couch or bed, a stall or stable; a manger or cribe. Jun. says, he has never found the word in A. S. records, and thinks it was taken, in homonym besti saluatoris, from σπαθάρ, lectus, a bed. Wach. considers the primitive to be Krippe, pecten, a comb; deriving its application from the form of the bars or lattice work, within which the fodder was placed. Crib is most probably a cognate of Grip. See GRIP, and CRAB.

CRICK, s. -ET. A stiffness, sc. in the neck.

Cricket, the insect,—certainly from the noise or sound it utters.

Cricket, the game, from A. S. Cricce, a staff, (cricce, ce-ricce),—with which the balls were struck. Fr. Croce, crosse, a crossier or Bishop's staff; also a cricket staff, or the crooked staff wherewith boyes play at cricket.—Col. See CROOK, and RACKET.

Crick or creek, in the neck, Jun. thinks, is from A. S. Cricce, (Eng. Crutch), a staff; because the neck of one so afflicted is as stiff and immovable as a staff. Sk., that it may be—to creak or crack, because the neck feels as if it would crack or burst sunder. In Sir John Davies, "such turns and cracks," it seems to be no other than creak, (qv.) a neck or corner.

CRIME, s. An act contrary to, in violation of, some law, human or divine; a failure in the performance of that which is ordered; an opposition or resistance to, an offence against, that which is ordered; a doing of that which is ordered not to be done: sc. ordered by human or divine authority.

-FUL.
-LESS.
-IN-AL, ad. s. formance of that which is ordered; an opposition or resistance to, an offence against, that which is ordered; a doing of that which is ordered not to be done: sc. ordered by human or divine authority.

-ALTY.
-ALNESS.
-ATE, v.
-ATION.
-OUS.
-OUS-LY, † Crime is also app. both to the -NESS! cause, the source or origin, the temptation to the criminal act;—"The tree of life, the crime of our first father's fall," (Spenser);—and to the effect; the guilt, the infamy, the reproach; or as we now say, the Criminality.

**Sir T. More. Holland. †State Trials, an. 1581. ‡Hammond.*

The A. S. Grim-on, seville, fremer, (Crymmer, in micas frangere), seems to present a more satisfactory etym. Dis- Re-

CRIMP, v. ad. -LE. To contract or draw together, to confine tightly or closely, and thus to wrinkle; and also to crisp, or cause to be crisp.

Crimple or crumple is the dim. See CRUMPF.

Ger. Krumpen; D. Krimp-en; Sw. -a, to cramp or crump, (qv.); contrahere, arcare, coarctare. See CRAMP. Lye has Ge-crypt, crimped; calamistratus.

CRIMSON, v. s. ad. App. to,—a reddish purple (colour), less bright than Carmine, though the words are the same.

Fr. Cramoisi; It. Cremisi; Sp. Carmesi; D. Karmesijn; Ar. Kermes. Com. called Carmesinum, because made from a worm which, in the Phœnician tongue, is called carmen.—Kilian. En-

CRINGE, v. s. -ING. To bend or bow; to do or perform any act of servile submission or obedience; any fawning, flattering courtesy or compliance. See TO CRANK.

Demisso corpore servilliter deventari.—Lye; who resorts to the Heb. Sk. says, perhaps from Ger. Kriechen, to creep or crawl. To cringe is formed from ge- or ce- (c hard) wring-an, to twist, to bend.

CRINITE, s. CRINET. Pertaining to, resembling, hair; or a lock of hair.

Crinet, is used by Gascoigne for a lock of hair.

L. Crinitus. Crinita, a lock of hair, from Gr. Κρίναι, cernere, to separate; from the custom of separating the hair into locks.—See Voss.

CRINKLE, v. s. -ING. The dim. of Cringe.

To wrench, wring, or wrinkle; to bend, to bow, to wind.

CRIPPLE, v. s. ad. Written Crepil and Creepile in old writers.

To cause to creep; and thus,—to lame; to injure or destroy the power of motion; to deprive of the use of the limbs.

D. Krapel, from Krepen, serpere, to creep; qui, manibus pro pedibus utens, humi serpit, (creeps).—Sk.

CRISIS, s. The point, the moment or time of decision, of determination.

Fr. Crise; It. -i; Sp. & L. Crisis; Gr. Κρίσις, from κρίνω, to decide, to judge. Dies critici, (Holland, Critical days), i. e. dies judiciales, days for judgment, for decision.

CRISP, v. ad. -ATION. To twist, to curl, to wind about or along.

To twist, sc. into a state of stiffness, into fixed curls; to curl; to cause to be stiff or unbending; and thus, cons. to be frangible; brittle.

Fr. Crepse; It. & Sp. -o; L. Crispus, which Tooke considers to be from the A. S. Cirpa-las, crispere, to quere, to twist. Formerly written Cirps. See LAPE.

CRITERION, s. That by or from which a decision or judgment is to be made.

Gr. Κρίτηριον, from κρίνω, to discern, to decide, to judge.

CRITIC, *ad. s. v.** Able to discern, to distinguish, to decide, to judge.

-AL. See DISCERN, and CRISIS.

-ALLY. See DISCERN, and CRISIS.

-ISE, v. To criticise,—to examine, investi-

-ISER. gate, or inquire into; to pass

-ISM. sentence, to give opinion upon,

-TIQUE, s. as a critic; i. e. as one able to discern, to distinguish, to decide, to judge.

CROAK, v. s. App. to the cry of the -ER. raven, of the frog, and—
-ING. Croaker,—one who forbodes ill,
(with little or no cause.)

As the raven's croak is thought to forbode ill luck,—To croak is used to denote—
To forbode, to prognosticate ill luck;
discontentedly; in a spirit of discontent.

A. S. Cracellian, crocellare, to croak like a crow.
-Som. Fr. Croasser, -aguer; It. -citare; L. Crocire; Gr. κρωτ-ειν.—To croak like a frog:
Fr. Croasser; L. Coaxare; Gr. Koat-ειν. All said to be from the sound. But see To CRAAK.

CROCK, s. -ERY, s. A vessel made of clay, and dried by heat.

A. S. Cracca; D. Krugke; Ger. Krug; Dan. Krukke. Of uncertain etymology. Perhaps so called from its brittleness or liability to crack.

CROCKS, s. Crooked timbers, resting on stone blocks, to support the roof of ancient buildings.—Craven Dialect. See CROTCHET.

"Crock, in the North, and Crok, Sc. is an old ewe. To crok, Sc. is to crook, to bend; gen. 'to suffer decay from age.' Crock, or Crook, is also a disease, a kind of spasm."
-Sk.

"Beware also to spurne against a nail;
Strive not as doth a crook against a wall."

CROCO-DILE, s. An animal.

Fr. Crocodil-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Crocodylus; Gr. Κροκοδειλον, from κροκος, and δειλον, quia κροκος δειλον, crocum multum; because it fears or dislikes the crocus or saffron; whence the Egyptians place saffron before their beehives, to protect their honey from this animal.—See Foss. Pliny throws no light upon this etym.; and Herodotus says, the name of Crocodylus was first imposed by the Ionians, from their resemblance to lizards, (so named by them,) which are produced in the hedges.—Euterpe, c. 69.

CROCUS, s. -KERS. A root producing a saffron-coloured flower; and—

Crokers,—the cultivators, the gatherers of saffron. Of uncertain origin.

CROFT, s. A. S. Croft, a little farm, a close or little field enclosed.—Som.

Spel. (in v. Croftum.) thinks from the Gr Κρυπτεν, tegere, to cover, to protect; in which he is followed by other etymologists. Mins. says, a croft is a little close joyning to a house, that sometimes is used for a hempe-plot, sometime for corne, and sometime for pasture, as the owner listeth. It seemeth to come of the Old Eng. word Croeft, signifying handicraft; because such grounds are for the most part extraordinarily dressed and trimmed by the labour and skill of the owner. Under-

CRUSADE, or CRUSADE, v. s. App.
-ADO. gen. to—Any war, any attack, any -EY. hostility; carried on with religious zeal. Fabian uses the v. To croyssey;—to wear the badge, to serve under the banner of the Cross.

Fr. Croisade; It. Crociata; Sp. Cruzada, from L. Cruz, a cross. "An expedition of Christians assembled out of divers countreys (by preaching and the Pope's bulls,) against the Turks and other infidels; teamed so, because every one of them, when he undertakes his journey, accepts of, and wears on his cassock, or coat-armour, the badge of the cross."—Col.

CROISANT, s. Crescent; so written after the Fr. by some of our early writers.

Fr. Croître.

CROKED, s. "His croked kempt, and thereupon set an ouche."—Con. Am. b. 5.

Brocket,—short under hair in the neck is called Crook; and Sk., that Crockets are locks of hair:—they are probably curls or crooks.

CRONE, s. -Y. Crune, croon, or crype, v. s. crooning,—the roar of a bull, the bellow of a disquiet ox, also of a cross child.

Cronies are those who groan or grumble over their grievances together.

Crone, croane, croon; a decrepit, crafty old woman.—Sk. Verstegan derives from A. S. Crone, a ewe. Others from Gr. Κρονος, Saturn, or ερονος, lasting. But Dr. Jamieson leads us to the true etym. Crogs, crone, crune, or croon, in Sc. is a hollow, continued moan, (or rather groan;) the moan (or groan) of those who habitually utter heavy complaints under slight indisposition: it is also app. to the hollow murmuring sound with which old witches (i. e. the crones;) uttered their incantation; also: to the incantation itself; and further (without doubt) to the incantatrix herself. And thus it appears to be from the v. (D. Krean-an;) to groan, by the common interchange of s and g—See Grose and Brocket.

CROOK, v. s. To bend or bow, to turn

-ED, ad. out of a straight line, to twist,
-EDLY. thwart, warp or writhe out of the -EDNESS. direct course. Met. crooked is—-EN,* v. Perverse, obstinate, self-willed, bad-tempered, ill-natured.—**Homilies*.

D. Krook; Ger. Krugke; Dan. Kroget; Fr. Croc. The family of this word, says Wach, is in the possession of the Swedes, with whom Krobia, is to curve, bow or bend,—krook, bowed; and kryllis, a pastoral staff, and a staff for stooping old men, (i. e. a crutch;) q. Ce-wroek-an, to crack, (qv.) Un-

CROOP, s. A disease in the (crop, or) throat. A. S. Cropp, gutturis vesicula.

CROP, s. Crop-full,—with a full stomach.

-FUL. Crop-sick,—sick at the stomach,
-SICK. surfeited.—**Whitlock*.

-SICKNESS.* D. Krop, kroppe; Ger. Kropf. The crop or craw of a bird. See CRAW.

CROP, s. v. -PING. That which is cut, sheared, mown, bitten (ript) or plucked off. And thus, further—

That which rises or springs up on the surface; the summit, tip, or top. A. S. Croppas,—tops or crops of herbs, the ears of corn.—Som.

To crop is also used for—To sow or plant, sc. for future cropping.

D. Krappen, decerpere, abscindere, præsertim racemos, (Sk.) to cut, mow, bite, pluck off. Un-

CROSIER, s. Bar. L. Crocias; Fr. Crosse; an episcopal staff; from croix, a cross, of which it has the image upon the top. It is app. by Holinshed to the cross-bearer; by Hackluyt, to certain stars called crossiers or cross-starrs.

CROSS, v. s. ad. pr. To pass over, so

-ING. that the line of passage may form

-LET. with the line passed, the figure of,

-LY. or resembling a cross; to move in

-NESS. such direction in relation to another moving body; and thus, to contravene, to hinder, to embarrass, to obstruct, to impede, to thwart, to counteract.

And cross, the ad. (met.) is thwarting, counteracting, sc. the wishes of others; and thus, perverse, ill-humoured, ill-tempered, uncomplying, peevish, fretful.

Cross-let, in Chaucer, is a crucible cross-shaped. And see CRUCIBLE.

Cross is much used pref.

The s. Fr. Croix; It. Croce; Sp. Cruz; L. Crux; (i.e. Cervus and Co-ruc, or Ge-rug, from Ge-uriga, to cover, to lay over: thus, in crossing the arms, one arm is laid over the other.) To cross, (Sp. Cruzar; Fr. Croiser), to sign or mark with a cross: to set cross-wise: to lay overthwart, or one crosses another: also to cut or divide in form of a cross, like X; also to cancel or cross in writing.—Cot. Un-

CROTCH, s. -ET, v. s. App. to.—Any short turn, sudden quirk.

Crotchet is app. by Dryden to the crooked props of a cottage; furcas subiere columnæ. See CROCKS. Also to [ ] in Printing.

A crotchet, (for a humour or extravagant fancy,)—from the Fr. Peindre à la crotchet or grotesque; to paint in a strange, ridiculous, rude, and inartificial manner. An elegant metaphor, Sk. adds, derived from the art of painting; for absurd fancies or ideas are very similar to absurd and foolish forms of things. It is more probably the dim. of Crotch: Fr. Crotchet, croc, a hook. See CROOK.

CROUCH, v. s. -ING. To crook, to cower, to bend or bow down, to stoop.

From Fr. Crochus, crooked; or Ger. Kauchen.—Sk. Probably by the common change of k into ch, rarely—to crook.

CROUCH, v. To crouch, in Chaucer, is to sign with the cross.—Tyrw. Hence Cruched or Crossed Friars; fratres sanctæ crucis.

CROUP, s. Croupe, crouper, or crupper. "Fr. Croupe, the top or knop of a bill; also the rump or crupper piece."—Cot. See CAOP.

CROUSE,* ad. Crouse,—Dr. Jamieson says,—is brisk, lively, bold, apparently brave. He considers the word to have descended from D. Kroes; Ger. Kraus; Sw.-Go. Krus, krusig, signifying—Crisp, curled, frizzled. The primary allusion, he adds, seems to be to a cock, who is said to be crouse, when he bristles up (rouses) his feathers, so as to make them appear as if curled. See Rouse, Carouse.—Drayton.

CROW, v. s. -ING. The s. is app. to the sound, and to the bird.

To crow, is to utter the sound, to make the noise, (sc. of a cock,) in triumph or defiance: and thus, cons.—

To triumph over, to vaunt, to brag or boast over, to insult.

Crowfeet is app. to—the wrinkles of age between the cheek-bone and the eyes.

A. S. Crowan; Ger. Kraehen; galli more cantum, and this, parum detorto sensu, from the s.; in A. S. Craue; D. Krage; Ger. Krae, a crow, (Sk.); Den. Krage. All formed from the sound. Over.

CROWD, v. s. -ING. To thrust or press, to shove, to flock or swarm together.

A crowd, is a collection, a many of persons, close or pressed together. See CREW.

"O firste moving cruel firmament, with thy diurnal swegh that crowdest ay."—Chaucer.

"A. S. Cruth; turba confertissima. A crowd, a press or throng of people."—Som. D. Kruden, to thrust. Un-

CROWD, v.* s. -ER. A musical instrument, perhaps, the fiddle.—B. Jonson.

Spel. says; Crotta,—fidicula Britannica; Cambria hodie a crowd. Numquid à fidibus, Hispan. Cuerda, vel Græc. Κροτάλη, strepo, plaudo? Sk. prefers the A. S. Cruth, a crowd or multitude, qd. a crowd of fiddlers. See Caowd, ante. Wiclif renders the L. Chorus, a crowd.

CROWN, v. s. App. to,—that which is -ER. placed upon or surrounds the head, -ET. to the head itself; the top of the -ING. head, the top or summit of any -LESS. thing.

As crown is a mark, sign or badge of rank and dignity, it is used met. for,—

Dignity, honour, glory, ornament, perfection, completion, consummation.

To crown,—to put on, or cover with, a crown; sc. in token of honour or dignity; and thus, cons. to honour, to dignify, to adorn, to bestow a prize or reward; to accomplish, to perfect, to complete.

Crownet,—see CORONET.

D. Kroone; Ger. Kron; Fr. Couronne; It. Sp. & L. Corona. A crown; in various old authors written Corone, or Corous. See CORONAL. De-Dis-Un-

A. S. Crumb, crump; Ger. Krumm; D. Krom, crooked. See CRAMP, and CRIMP.

CRUNE. See CRONE.

CRUSADE. See CRUISADE.

CRUSH, v. s. -ING. To press or squeeze into a mass, so as to dissolve the pre-established continuity of the parts.

To press or beat down, to subdue, overpower; to get the better of, or mastery over.

Fr. Ecraser, from Go. Hrie-gan, ge-hrie-gan; A. S. Ge-ris-an, contundere, conterere, collidere, corrutare. See TO RUSH.

CRUST, v. s. Crust is app. to, —any

-ACEOUS. hardened surface, coat, or case.

-ATION. And To crust, —to cover with,

-Y or draw over, any hard surface,

-ILY. coat or case.

-INESS, ad. Fr. Crouste; It. Crusta; L. Crustum, oro του κρουσ, hoc est, A frigore, from cold, or frost. Crusta, (in Virg. Geor. iii. 360,) is the ice, or the surface of the water congealed, hardened by frost. Perhaps Ce-rust. See RUST. De-En-In-Oc-

CRUTCH, s. v. A staff for crouching, crooking, or stooping old men; sc. to support or uphold them.

A. S. Cries; D. & Ger. Krücke; Sw. Krycka; Dan. Krykke; It. Croccia. See CROOK.

CRY, v. s. The primary application may

-ING. have been to the noise, or sound

-ER, or of one weeping, lamenting, be-

-IER. wailing, deploring; then to any noise or sound of distress; to any sudden and loud expression of passion; of surprise, of fear or terror; of joy or gladness, blame or praise, complaint or congratulation; to any loud call to gain or keep attention; any acclamation, or exclamation, or declamation, or proclamation.

To cry, —to utter the sounds of lamentation or distress; to call out, speak out, loudly, noisily, clamorously, importunately; to shout, to exclaim, to proclaim, to declaim; to declaim against, to decry.

Cry, the s. is sometimes app. to the cryers, collectively; in Shak. "Ye common cry of curs;" and in Milton, "A cry of hell-hounds barked."

Fr. Crier; It. Gri-dare; Sp. -dar; D. Krijten; Ger. Krachen, schreien; A. S. Grai-an, or grat-an, (Ge-raet-an); Go. Greit-an. Grait is still a common Sc. word. See JAMIESON. The Go. Greit-an, is used about a dozen times in the Ge. version of the Gospels, and is always rendered here, deplorate. See LYE. De-Out-Un-Under-

CRYPT, s. "Christians had but low

-IC. poore conventicles, and simple oratories, yea caves under

-ICAL. the ground, called crypte,

-OGRAPHY. where they for feare of persecution assembled secretly together." —

Homilies.

Gr. Κρυπτεν, to hide, to conceal, to cover.

CRYSTAL, s. ad. Frequently, but im-

-LINE, s. ad. properly, written Chrysal.

-LIZE, v. "As touching crystal, it pro-

-LIZATION. ceedeth of a contrary cause, namely of cold; for a liquor it is congealed by extreame frost in manner of ycce; and for prooffe hereof, you shall find crystal in no place else but where the winter snow is frozen hard: so as we may boldly say, it is verie ice and nothing else, whereupon the Greeks have given it the right name Crystallus, i. Yce." —Holland.

Plinie.

Fr. Crystal; It. Cristallo; Sp. Cristal; L. Cry-tallus; Gr. Κρυσταλλος, by which both ice, and the (crystal) stone are signified: from κρυος, i. e. cold or frost. En-

CUB, v. s. App. to—The young of the bear or fox; also, of the whale.

A cub or cribb for cattle.—Gross, Glouc.

To cub, —to bring forth cubs; also, to confine, as cubs are, in a den or hole; (if not a corruption of Coop, qv.)

Perhaps, says Mina, from the L. Cubo, because it lies (cubas) in its den or hole, and goes not out for prey as the elder animals do.

CUBE, s. A square solid (body). "In

-IC, ad. numbers, sixty-four is either made

-IC-AL. by multiplying 8 into 8, and so

-ALLY. it is a square; or by multiplying

-ALNESS. four cubically, 4 times 4 times 4,

CUCKING-STOOL, s. Called by Spel. (Gloss. Arch. in v. Terbichetum), a Coke-stool. Mins. says, rather ducking-stool, an engine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women; called also a Tumbrel.

CUCKOLD, v. s. "The It. Cucolo, a -mina cuckow, gives us the v. To cucol, -LY. (without the terminating d.) as the -OM. common people rightly pronounce it, and as the s. was formerly and should still be written.

"I am cuckolded and fool'd to boot too."

Beau. & F. Women Pleas'd.

"If he be married, may he dream he's cuckold'd."

Id. Loyal Subject.

"To cucol, is to do as the cuckow does; and cucol-ed, cucol'd, cucold, its past p., means cuckow-ed, i. e. served as the cuckow serves other birds.

"The whole difficulty of the etymologists, and their imputation upon us of absurdity, (see Sk.) are at once removed by observing, that, in Eng. we do not call them cuculi, but cuculati, (if I may coin the word on this occasion,) i. e. we call them not cuckows, but cuckowed."—Tooke.

Fr. Cucu; D. Kuckhoer; Ger. Kuckuck; L. Cuculus; Angl. a cuckold, and also a hedge sparrow, quia ut lila cuculi pallium pro suo educat, sic et ille alienos pro suis. Cuculus, apud Plautum, cum significat, qui alienam tangit uxorem, et Vult; i. adulterum. Angl. a Cuckold-maker, qui sicut Cuculus, ponit et parit ova in nido alterius.—Mins. Tooke seems to have settled the etym. of this word very clearly and satisfactorily. Un-

CUCKOO, s. A bird.

Ger. Kuck-gauch, cuckuck; D. Kuyck-kuck; Fr. Coucou; It. Cucco; L. Cuculus; Gr. Kokuuf; all manifest from the sound uttered by this bird. See Cuckola.

CUCQUEAN, s. v. Cuck, cuculus, a cuck-old-maker; and quene, wife; the cuckold-maker's wife.—Mins.

CUCULLATED,* pt. Hooded. L. Cucullatus; part of the dress, hanging behind, with which the head is covered or protected against the weather.—Brown.

Perhaps from the Gr. Kuklos, circulus.

CUCUMBER, s. A plant.

Fr. Cucumber; It. Co-comero; Sp. Aombro; L. Cucumis, so called, a curvaturd. Virg. applies to it the epithet tortus.

CUD, s. i. e. Chewed. App. to—Food once chewed, and repressed to be chewed again.

L. & Cud, from Cow-ed, past p. of Cow-an, manducare; quia citius ruminando bis manducatur.—See Sk. and Tooke. Sp. Taylor writes, "chew the cud." And see Cow.

CUDDIN, s. This word has only been found in Dryden, and was probably formed from the preceding cud; as if slaving while he chew'd. Serenius refers to the Isl. Kutta, nannus, pumilio, a dwarf.

CUL

CUDDLE, v. To keep down close, to embrace closely.

Dr. Jamieson thinks it may be from the Ger. Kudd-en, colre, convenire, to come together. May it not be the dim. of Cow, to cower; qd. cow-die,—as above.

CUDGEL, v. s. A knotty stick, or stake, -L-ER. or staff.

-ING. To cudgel,—to beat or strike with a cudgel, stick, or staff; to beat, to batter; and (met.) to cudgel the brains,—to force them to exertion.

From D. Kudde, kodde.—Sk. and Jun. See Cud.

CUE, v. Any intimation or slight direction; the part which any one is directed, disposed, inclined to take; the inclination, the disposition; humour.

To cue,—to form like a tail, a curling line; to curl, to twist.

Cue, (i. e. q.) is also app. to denote a farthing (quadrans), a farthing's worth of bread, beer, &c. See Mr. Nares's Gloss.

In a note upon Rich. III., Johnson says, "The expression is borrowed from the theatre. The cue, queue, or tail of a speech, consists of the last words, which are the token for an entrance or answer. To come on the cue, therefore, is to come at the proper time." And in this Mr. Steevens appears to acquiesce. Fr. Cue, or queue, a tail, from the L. Cauda. Mins. says, that anti—or rather ante-loquitur, is a term that stage-players use, called their qu. Cue, from its application to these stage directions, is extended,—as above.

CUFF, v. s. To beat, to strike.

Lye thinks from the Gr. Kaupatyan, colaphos ingerere, to inflict blows. Jun. and Mins., from the Gr. Kolaphos, from kolaptein, percutere, to strike. Sk., from Koptein, which, he says, signifies not only to cut, but to beat.

CUFF, (of the Sleeve,) s. Jun. and Sk. think is Coif, (qv.) though—valde detorto sensu, is the opinion of the latter.

CUIRASS, s. -IER. Armour for the breast or back.

Fr. Cuirasse; It. Corassina, from Cuir, (L. Corium), i. e. leather, because in times past they were made of leather.—Mins. Jun. adds, that lorica was so called à loris, from thongs of leather.

CUISH, s. Also written Quish. Armour for the thigh.

Fr. Cuissé; It. Coستا; L. Coxa, a thigh.

CULINARY, ad. -ILY. Of or pertaining to a kitchen, to the arts of cookery practised in a kitchen.

Fr. Cuisine, culinaire; It. Cucina; Sp. Cosina; L. Culina, a kitchen.

CULL, v. -ING. To select, pick or choose to take out, in choice or preference.

Fr. Cueillir; It. Cogliere; from L. Colligere, to collect or gather together.—Sk. and Jun. It is more com. used as seigere. Un-

CULLENDER. See COLANDER.

CULLICE, s. "Broth of boiled meat, strained, fit for a weak or sick body."—Cot.

From the Fr. Coulle, jus colatum. Broth strained through a colander, à colando.

CULLY, v. s. ad. Cot. in v. Couille, after -IAN. explaining the word agreeably to -YISM. L. etym., adds.—“Also, a long, -IBILITY. lank, and lubberly coward; a -ION, s. heartless, faint-hearted, or white-livered slimm.”

To cully, is to gull, to beguile. A cully, —a gull; and Cullibility, in Swift, is evidently equivalent to Gullibility; and the words seem to differ in nothing but the initial letter C, for G.

It. Cogliano; Fr. Couillon, -ille; L. Coleus; Gr. Kolaoe, vagina.

CULMI-FEROUS, ad. L. Culmus, a stalk, and ferre, to bear.

CULMINATE, v. -ANT. To reach the top or summit; the meridian height. L. Culmen, the top or summit.

CULPABLE, ad. Blamable; that may, -Y. that ought to be blamed, censured, or condemned.

CULPE. Culpe is used by Hall, from the -RIT. Fr. Culpe.

-ATE. Culpit appears merely to be a -ATORY. compound, and contraction of culpe, a fault, a crime, a transgression of the law; and Fr. Pris, pt. of prendre, to take,—one taken a prisoner—for a transgression of the law.

Fr. Coupable; It. Colpevole; Sp. Culpable; L. Culpabilis, from culpa, a fault. Some etymologists think from Collabi, to slip, to fall; others, from Klown, itself from Klengen, to take privately, to steal. Voss. prefers the Heb. Chalaph, to pass beyond, to transgress; and he adds, that properly culpa is transgression of the laws, and the bounds of virtue. Cicero, (in his 3d Paradox,) says, that peccare, is lines transire, to leap over the bounds; and when this is done, culpa commissa est, a fault has been committed. Dis-Ex-In-Un-

CULPONS, s. Mr. Tyrw. says, that culpions, in Chaucer, (v. 681,) signify shreds, in v. 2869, logs. Drant uses the v. to cut in pieces; Diram qui contudit Hydram.

Tum cumuli, acervi, tum particulæ.—piles, heaps, and also parts or particles; from Fr. Coupen, a segment, a part; and this from the v. Couper, to cut, to sever.—Sk.

CULTER. See COULTER.

CULTIVATE, v. To labour earnestly, -ION. sc. for the improvement of any -ING. thing—

-OR. As to cultivate the land,—to -TURE, v. s. till it, to plough, to manure it; —to cultivate the mind,—to strive, labour or endeavour to improve, or better, strengthen or enlarge it.

Shaftesbury uses Cult, from the Fr. s. Culte, respect, worship.

Fr. Cultivo-er; Sp. -ar; It. Coltivare; L. Colere, cultum, to till. Voss. prefers an Heb. origin. Lennep considers that kol-av must have existed in Gr. as the root of kolag-ein, pant-re, and of other words; and Scheidius, that kol-ein was the same as kol-l-ein, and meant pellere, impellere, impellingly agere; and further, vehementius tractare, tendere. And thus col-ere will signify, cons.—as above. In-Re-Un-

CULVER, s. A. S. Culfre, columba, a dove, a pigeon. Wud-culfre, palumbus, a stock-dove.—Som.

CULVERIN, s. A bombard, long and thin, which is now also called serpentina, from the shape of a serpent, (colubri vel serpentina).—Jun.

Fr. Coulevrine; It. Colubrina; Sp. Culebrina.

CUM, L. pr. See CON.

CUMBENT, ad. Lying down, reclining. L. Cumbens, from cumbere, to lie down. Ac-De-Dis-In-Pro-Re-Suc-

CUMBER. See COMBER. Dis-In-Un-

CUMULATE, v. More usually written -ION. Ac-cumulate, (qv.)

-IVE. To heap together; to pile into a heap; to collect or gather together.

L. Cumulus, a heap; of unknown origin. Ac-

CUNCTATION, s. -OR. Delay, tarrying. L. Cunctari, -atum, to tarry, to delay. From Cunctus, (i. e. conjunctus), all together, is cunctari, which properly denotes cunctis aggradi, sive per cuncta ire; but because it is not possible to do so without length of time; hence cunctari came to signify morari, to take time, to tarry, to delay.—Voss.

CUND,* v. Cundeth or Cunneth, from the A. S. Cunnan, to ken, to know, or cause to know; to give notice.—**Carew.*

CUNNING, ad. s. Cunning, or Conning, -LY. is—knowledge, science: now app- -NESS. to—That knowledge or skill, to that craftiness or subtily which is employed to deceive, to trick, to outwit, to evade. See TO CON. Un-

CUP, v. s. -BOARD, v. s. A vessel used to drink from; to draw blood. App. also to the draught; to the drinking.

A cup-board,—a place, a closet, for cups or vessels; things placed in cups or vessels, or other articles.

Cupping-glass,—so called, says Minz, because made of glass, and deepe and hollow like a cup: hence, To cup, to draw blood in such glasses, (otherwise from the Fr. Couper, to cut, to make an incision.)

A. S. Cuppa; D. & Dan. Kop; Ger. Kopf; Fr. Coupe; It. Coppa; Sp. Copa. Wach. thinks it so called, & not lone cavillatio.

CUPEL, s. Fr. Coupelle,—the little ashen CUPEL, v. pot (i. e. cup) or vessel,

CUPELLATION. wherein goldsmiths melt, or fine their metals.—Cot.

CUPIDITY, s. An eager desire, covetousness.

Fr. Cupidité; It. -ità; Sp. -idad; L. Cupiditas, from cupere, to covet: plus eat cupere, quam velle, (Voss.) to covet, is more than to wish.

CUPOLA, s. -ED. “A cupola is that dome or hemispherical concave made in resemblance of the heavens, and admitting the light at the top centre or navil only, without any lantern.”—Evelyn.

It. Cu-pola; Sp. -pula, fornix, testudo. Dim. of It. Cupo, concavus, profundus.—Alen. (L'Original della Ling. Ital.) Sk. calls it, “Turris rotunda fornicata.” The word he considers to be pure Italian.

CUPREOUS, ad. Coppery. See COPPER.
L. Cupra, copper.

CUR, s. A snarler, a growler; a mere -SNARLER. snarler, sc. without courage to -BITE. bite. App. to—
-ISHNESS. Any snarling, angry-minded,
-SHIP. yet cowardly person.
D. Kurr; perhaps from Ger. Kirren, to snarl.

CURATE, s. -ACT. One to whom the care and healing of souls is committed.
It & Sp. Curato; Mid. L. Curatus.

CURB, v. s. To bend or bow; to bend or
-ING. bow, sc. to the will; to guide or
-ED, ad. regulate; to manage, to control, to check, to restrain. "By crooked and polizers, forestallers; and then, gen., to those who are covetous to acquire, anxious to keep.

Fr. Corur, the heart, and mechant, or meschant, have been suggested. "Meschant," Cot. explains,
"wicked, paltry, curst, harsh, froward." (See -MISCHANCE.) Holland renders the L. Frumen- -tarius, in Livy, (i. e. Coru-merchant, the s. nego- -tiator being understood,) Coru-mudgin; and the same word in Pliny he renders Corne-maister.
These Frumenterii, or Coru-mudgins, were subject to severe penalties "for hoarding and keeping in their grain." Perhaps Coru-mychns. See MICH.

CURRENT. A Corinth, or Corinthian fruit. ✕

CURRENT, ad. s. Current, the s.—Run-

-ENCY. gression. The ad.—
-ICLE. Flowing, passing like a stream, in an uniform, uninterrupted course; passing generally,—commonly, without hinderance or opposition.

Brown uses Curricie,—a small or short course. It is the common name of a light carriage (for two horses abreast).

Fr. Courant; It. Corrente; Sp. riente; L.

CURRY, v. To curry the hide,—to rub
-ING. it with a curry-comb, or comb
-IER. made for the purpose; to scratch, scrub, or use roughly: and, cons., give a good thrashing or drubbing.

The word favour, in the common expression, "to curry favour," has been supposed by Mr. Douce to be a corruption of favel, a name given to yellow coloured horses, as bayard, blanchard, to bay or brown and grey. We yet, however, use in common speech, "To smooth him down," (met.) for to soothe his anger; calm his passion; to ingratiate by acts of obsequi-ousness or flattery. Sk. thinks, from the old Fr. Querir, L. Quære, to seek after.
See CLAW.

Fr. Coroyer, to curry, taw or dress, as leather.
—Cot. L. Corium, the hide. To curry a horse,
i. corium equi et dorsum fricare strigili; to rub the hide of a horse with a curry-comb. Un-

CURSE, v. s. To doom to punishment,
-EDLY. to torment or torture.
-EDNESS. Curst is app. as an epithet to any
-ER. ill-quality in excess; as ill-tem-
-ING. per, malignity or maliciousness, perverseness, vexatiousness, quarrelsomeness.

Som. has A. S. Curra-an, plectere, to torment or punish; and hence, Curra-ian. Sk. thinks, from L. Cruciare. It is contracted from Ge-gra-ian, (g

-LY. Fr. Cour, courte, short; Escurtier, to shorten; It. Accortare. Courtault or courtaul,—curtal, from L. Curtius, shortened; from curius, Gr. Kyprios, cut short; which Lennep derives from κα-κρυπ-αι, third per. perf. pass. from κρυπ-ειν, incidere. It seems to be Cort, in A. S. S-cort, short, (qv.)

CURTAIN, v. s. To curtain,—to surround with curtains, i. e. something placed, raised, or hung, or suspended for ornament, shade, shelter, or defence.

App. in Fortification.

Fr. Courtine; It. & Sp. Cortina. Sk. suggests, that Curtain may be from court; as L. Aulaum, from aula. En-

CURTSY. See COURTESY, in v. COURT.

D. Kussen; Ger. Keussen; Fr. Cousin; It. Cosino. All Sk. thinks, from L. Cogn, quia cognis, i. e. natibus, subternitur. Men. would prefer the Ger. v. Keussen, but of the origin of that word he is ignorant; and Wach. confesses himself in the same predicament.

CUSP, s. -IDAL. A sharp or small point; a terminating point.

L. Cuspis, a point, ut & casu, caespes, sic & cursu, cuspie.—Voss. From Cudere, cusum, to strike, to form or fashion by striking. Cocheram has "Cuspidale,—to sharpen."

CUSTARD, s. A mixture of milk, sugar, eggs, &c.

Quasi gustard; perhaps from gustare, to taste; because of the sweetness in taste.—Mins. Sk. thinks it may have had the same origin as Custard. (qv.) namely D. Kost, cibus, and aerd, natura. Jun. confesses that he once suspected it to be compounded of cowes and tart!

CUSTODY, s. -IAL. Guard or safe-keeping, (and cons. imprisonment,) preservation, security, care, charge.

It Sp. & L. Custodia, a guard or watching, from Curare, (as Perottus thinks,)—Voss., who adds, or rather from Cem and adulare, qd. Custos.

CUSTOM, v. s. Any usual dealing; any

Fr. Constume; It. Costume; Sp. sumbre; L. Consuetudo, from consuere, (con or cum, and suere, which Martin. conjectures is, usu ire, to go by use, to pass usually; and thus,) to do any thing usually, habitually, regularly, constantly.

CUSTREL, s. Fr. Coustillier, from coustille, a kind of long poniard, used heretofore by esquires; and hence variously app. to—

An esquire of the body; an armour-bearer unto a knight. See Men. and Cot.

**E. Hall.*

CUT, v. s. Gen. app. when the separation

-T-LE. is made by a keen or sharp in-

-ER. strument, as a knife, a sword,

-ING. scissors; to cleave or separate by

-EDLY. swift motion, to wound sharply,

-LER. keenly, deeply.

-LERY. To draw cuts, is an expression

-LET. familiar to our oldest writers,

(e. g. Chaucer and Berners,) and means, to draw lots, sc. of papers, &c. cut of unequal length.

Cut and long tail, is explained by Archdeacon Nares as meaning to include all kinds of dogs,—curtail, sporting dogs, and others. See CURTAIL.

A cutter is explained by Coles as a cutter (a robber), gladiator, latro. Thus the hero of Cowley's Cutter of Coleman Street is a town adventurer; or, as he is aptly expressed in the Dramatis Personæ, "a merry, sharking fellow about the town, pretending to have been a colonel in the king's army."

A kind of vessel is called cutter, perhaps because it cuts swiftly through the water. Du Cange gives the word Cota, navis species; but in the only passage which he quotes, he decides that the reading should be coca seu cocca, and not cota. See Coc.—**Udal.*

The Fr. have Couper, which Cot. explains, "to cut, hack, slash, hew; to cleave, slit, lance, make an incision; also, to carve, grave, intail; also, to prune, lop or fell trees, mow corn or grass; also, to divide, sunder, separate." The Fr. Couper or Coupeuse, also, is "a knife or whittle; also, any such cutting instrument." Couper is derived by Fr. etymologists from the Gr. Koer-ew, to cut, and Coupeuse, from the L. Cutellus; and from one of these, Sk. thinks the Eng. v. To cut, (written by Wiclif, To kit.) may have been formed. Kil subsists in the A. S. S-cyt-an, ge-eyt-an, dividere. Un-

καρὰ τὸ κύνει παρισσῶντι τοὺς ἀκρομυῶνας, because it bears or produces equal branches.—See Foss, and Martin.

CYPRESS-LAWN, s. Sk. says, either from Fr. Crespe, (see CRAPE), or from the Island of Cyprus, where this article was first manufactured.

CYST, s. A coffer, a chest.

A. S. Cyst; L. Cista; Gr. Κίστη.

CZAR, s. Serenius says, S. Ryss-Kiesare,

-ISH. Emperor of the Muscovites; and

-INA. Ihre has, Kiesare, imperator. — Wach. Kaiser, a word acknowledged and used by all ancient dialects.

D.

THE letter D is classed by Wilkins among semi-spiritous or half-breathed consonants; meaning such as are accompanied with some kind of vocal murmur. D and T are cognate letters, and, he adds, are commonly framed by an appulse or collision of the top of the tongue against the teeth or upper gums; the first being more soft and gentle, with some kind of murmur, the other wholly mute, i.e. pron. with a strong emission of the breath, without any vocal sound.
—On Real Character, pt. iii. c. 12.

Teoke observes, that D differs from T by no variation whatever of articulation, but singly by a certain unnoticed and almost imperceptible motion or compression of or near the larynx; which causes what Wilkins calls "some kind of murmur."

D and T appear as literal roots in the Sanscrit Da, (whence da-da-nu), the Pers. Da-den, the Go. Tau-yan, Eng.
Do, (and To); also in the A. S. Ad, con-geries, L. Ad-dere, Gr. Αδ-ειν. Hence the A. S. term ad, Eng. ed, (qv.); and hence a variety of words, which will be found in their places, and referred to this original.

DAB, v. s. Dab, dib, or dob; dap, depe,

To dab,—to move with the short, quick action of dipping.

A dab-wash,—a dip-wash. A dab,—a slight blow.

Dab, as app. to a person who is handy or clever at any thing, may be a corruption of Adept, (qv.)

Gr. Δακτυλος, a finger. Fr. Dactylogie; It. Sp. & L. Dactylogia.

DADD, s. -y. Da da, a word, like pa pa, ma ma, formed from the sound. See BABE.

DADE, v. DADDLE. To dade, seems to be equivalent to—To move, or cause to move, cautiously, slowly.

A word peculiar to Drayton, and which, Johnson says, is to hold up by a leading string; and Mr. Nares, to flow; and Dr. Jamieson, to suck. Daddle, Mr. Grose explains, to walk unsteadily like a child; to waddle. To daddle, diddle, or doddle, are no doubt the dims. of dade, whatever may be the origin of this latter word. Perhaps the word dawdle, dim of daw, (qv.) may be a cognate term, if not the same, diff. app.

DÆDAL, ad. Artful, skilful; fruitful in invention.

Gr. Δαίδαλλ-ειν, to make or form artfully, skilfully. Dædalism vocatur, quicquid est artificiosè varium et affabre factum.—Voss.

(in v. Taub), and Jun. agree that—that is said to be deaf, which has lost any of its natural strength. Deaf corn is barren corn, sterile frumentum. DAGGER, s. -ED. A short (and perhaps strong) weapon, used to stab with.

Fr. Dague; Sp. & It. Daga; D. Dagge; Ger. Degen; Dan. & Sw. Daggers; Low L. Dagge, dagerius. This word, as well as Dag, (qv.) Du Cange says, some derive †Dacis, as a weapon peculiar to them. Wach. quotes authorities to show that gladius was called degin,—quod ejus ministerio in defensione utamur,—and hence inclines to think it an application of degen, vir fortis, miles, (A. S. Dugan, to be strong); remarking that men and their arms are often designated by the same name. See ДѢДЪКОМ, DOUGHER.

DAINT, ad. s. Dainty is now used as -y, ad. s. equivalent to—

-ILY. Delicate of taste, exquisite, ele-

-INESS. gant, nice, choice; and, emph.

-REL. —over-nice.

Mins.—A dente, a tooth; because dainties or delicacies are grateful to the teeth and palate. Casaubon,—from the Gr. Δαινοειναι, to feast, to banquet; but the Fr. derive from the Gr. through the medium of the L. The Go. Dauht, epulum, convivium, occurs Luke v. 29, and xiv. 15; but no means of tracing the connexion of the words have occurred. Mr. Tyrw. says, "Deintus, s. Fr., value, a thing of value. Deintuous, choice, valuable." And it is perhaps from A. S. Dag-an, prodesse; the guttural g being dropped.

DAIRY, s. A place for preserving milk, churning it into butter, and making cheese, &c.

Sw. Dia, lactere. Radicem servat L. Anglica, Dug, mamma.—Ihre. Go. Dadd-jandei, mulier lactans, infanti lac præbens.—Jun. A. S. Dieda, lactantes.—Lye and Benson. The Sw. Deja, nutritrix, Dr. Jamieson says, has precisely the sense of dey, a dairy-maid, and is evidently allied to a variety of terms in the northern languages, which have a similar meaning. Isl. Dia, dy; Sw. Då, to suck; Sw.—Go. Degg-ia, dagg-ia, to give milk, to suck,

DAM

(see DOG); Moes.-G. Dadd-jan, both—to milk and to suck. Dey, in Chaucer, and Day-woman, in Shak.—a dairy-woman. Dairy, (Low L. Dueria, dagaria,)—as above explained.

DAIS, or DEIS, s. Com. used for—The upper table, raised on a platform, more elevated than the others, and probably at first placed under a canopy.

Finkerton considers it to be the elevated floor only. Ritson (Met. Rom. ad voc. Drys) holds it to be indifferently the floor and the canopy. In Leland, the high dease seems to be what he has before called the high table.

Dadium, a word concerning the etym. of which, Du Cange is doubtful. Meursius derives it from Dygas, Εὐρύκλιον, subcellum, a bench. Dais, however, as Du Cange shows, from a passage in Matt. Paris. (De Vita Abbatum S. Albani, 92,) has a widely different meaning. The newly elected abbot, says the historian, "Solutus in Refectorio prandebat supremus, habens vastellum, Priore prandente ad magnum mensam, quam Dais vulgariter appellamus;" for the Dais, continues Du Cange, is the name given by the Fr. to a canopy suspended over a banqueting table.

Tyrw. again, derives it from the Fr. Ais, assis tabula; and thinks it was at first written D'ais, ex assibus. Men. brings it from Dossium or dossium for dorsum. May not the word be Deske, a table, or a platform?

DAISY, s. -IED. A plant.

A. S. Dages-eyge, i. e. days-eye. And Chaucer, in Prologue to Legend of Good Women,—

"That well by reason men it call may
The deisie, or els the eye of the day."

This etym. was suggested to Sk. by T. H.; but Sk. himself adopts Fr. Dais, a canopy. (See Dais.) Proper aliquam in flore talis umbellae similitudinem. B. Jonson writes Dages-eyes.

DALE, s. The low ground between ground ascending around or on various sides of it.

Go. Dalei; A. S. D. & Dan. Dal; Ger. Thal, thal; locus declivis. The D. have the v. Dal-en, descendere, demittere se; to descend. Jun. seems to suspect some connexion with A. S. Dal-an, to deal, to divide, to distribute. Dal, he observes, is used for the infernal pit. Dale and Dell seem to have the same origin, i. e. the A. S. Delf-an, to dig; and thus—to hollow.

DALLY, v. To act like one dull or foolish;
-ING. like a dolt or simpleton; to waste
-INGLY. or idle away time; to spend, to
-IANCE. loiter away time, in wanton or idle
-IES. amusements; to amuse, to trifle, to sport, to frolic.

Sk. thinks, from the A. S. Dole, foolish, dull; and this Tooke considers to be the regular past tense and past p. of Dwel-ian, dwol-ian, hebere, hebetare, to be or cause to be dull; and hence, To dally will be—as above.

DAM, or DAME, s. Dam,—a mother; usually restricted to brute animals. And

Dame,—a matron, a mother, a mistress.

Fr. Dam-e; It. & Sp. -a; by contraction from the L. Domina, mistress. Som. thinks that dam, pro trutorum matre, procretrix, may be from the A. S. Teom, issue, offspring, from the A. S. Tym-on, parere, parturire, to bear, to bring forth; but dame, as well as dam, was app. to mother, by our old writers, and there seems not sufficient reason to suppose them different words.

DANDLE, v. Ger. Denteln. (See DANDY.)

Mins. says—To dandle, is to lull, cocker, hugge fondly, to dandle in the lap or armes, as a nurse doth to please an infant.

Jun. interprets the D. Dandelen, to the same effect. Wach. gives cunctari, as one of the usages of denteln; and dandle seems so used by Spenser; sc. to delay or trifle away. "They doe so dandle their doings, as if they would not have the enemy subdued."—Spenser.

Dandy. Dr. Jamieson refers to the Isl. Dandi, and Sw. Dansen, liberal, munificent; and explains it to be,—that which "is nice, fine, or possessing supereminence, in whatever way."—Dandi-prat, is with us (Sk.) a dwarf, a little man: of uncertain origin. The D. Danten, dandelen; It. Dondolero; Fr. Dandiner, ineptire, garrigue; Sc. Dandile, to saunter, to go about idly; Ger. Denteln, ludere, ludicre agere, to dally, to idle; and (see Florio) to play the baby, puppy, or gull,—seem to be allied. But what is Prat? Sk. thinks it may be Fr. Pres, prompt, apt, fit.

DANGER, v. s. In Fr. and Old English

-FULL. Law, danger seems equivalent to -FULLY. penalty, damages, commissi pena.

-LESS. And thus, in Chaucer,—"Nar-

-OUS. cissus love had caught in his

-OUS-LY. daungere;" i. e. within the action

-NESS. or agency of pain or penalty, of damage, hurt, ill or mischief; within the reach of penal, hurtful, mischievous power.

Thus also, "In danger had he all the yonge gierles." And in R. Brunne, "All was in the erle's danger." And again, "He was never wedded to woman's danger," i. e.

woman's dangerous power. From this application to the risk or chance of pain or mischiefe, the word seems to have been extended to the fear of pain or mischief; and, cons., as Mr. Tyrw. explains,—to sparing-ness, to coyness. Thus (Chaucer), "With daunger uttren we our chaffare;" with fear-fulness, with fear of loss, of harm; and, therefore, cautiously, thriftily, sparingly.

Dangerous, in Gower and Chaucer, appears equivalent to—fearful to hurt, fearful to lose; and, therefore, cautious to guard or to preserve; or, as Mr. Tyrw. says, sparing, sc. in the use. "He was of his love so dangerous to me."—Chaucer. "Of thyng, which was most precious, he [Chry-

seis] was dangerous."—Gower.

To danger or to endanger is, to be or cause to be within the action or agency of damage, of pain or penalty, of hurt, ill, or mischief;

within the reach of penal, hurtful, mischievous power.

Fr. Danger; Low L. Dangerium, domerium.

his power as a captive. But (i. e. Be-out) down- gere, without hesitation or apprehension. The Old

Fr. danger frequently occurs as signifying power, dominion." The authors, he adds, of the Dict.

rupted from the L. Dominari. With respect to

DANGLE, v. -ER. To hang, unfixedly; to coin of like value called a "dandy frost"; which, say, British historians of dandy, applied to worthy, being significant people.

DAP, or DAPR. See DAB.

DAPPER, ad. Small and active, neatly formed, neat, spruce.

Dst. Dapper; Ger. Taffer; strenuous, fortis. A new word, says Wach., and sprung from Slavonic Dapry, bonus. Sk. explains it,—a man of small stature, but courageous and active.

DAPPLE, v. s. Gen.—to spot; to variegate with spots.

To variegate with spots, like the apple. In the same signification, and for the same reason, this colour is in Fr. called Pommele.—Sk. In It. Pomelato, (instar pomii;) in D. Appel grau. Pommele grey is used by Chaucer, (v. 618.)

DARE, v. s. To have boldness, bravery—ER. or courage; to face danger, to—ING. defy it, to challenge or provoke—INGLY. it; and thus, to daunt or dismay;—INGNESS to appal, to terrify, to cower or—FULL. cause to cower: and this seems to account for Dare in Chaucer's Shipman's Tale, v. 13,033; which Mr. Tyrw. says, is Saxon, and means Stare.

"Thise wedded men, that lie and dare,
As in a fourme setteth a wery hare."

And Mins., "to dare, an old Eng. word, for to stare; because they which behold a man stedfastly, with a wide, open, staring eye, are said to be bold or daring." With respect to daring larks, Mr. Stevens, in Henry VIII. says, "It is well known that the hat of a Cardinal is scarlet, and that one of the methods of daring larks, was by small mirrors fastened on scarlet cloth, which engaged the attention of these birds, while the fowler threw his net over them."—Shak.

DARLING, s. ad. or DEARLING, s. One very dear; very dearly, affectionately, tenderly, passionately beloved.

A. S. Dyrting, amicus, a sweetheart, a darling, or dearling.—Som. Dim. of Dear, (qv.)

DARN, v. -ING. To hide, to conceal, to cover over—sc. a hole, a rent.

May be the A. S. Dyrnan, occultare, to hide, to conceal. Som. says, Dyrn, occultus, secret, privie. Chaucer, Derne.

DARNEL, s. A plant, so called because it is hurtful or injurious to more useful plants.—Sk. and Mins.

From the A. S. Derian; D. Deyren or Deren, nocere, to hurt or injure.

DARNEX, s. Certain cloths introduced from Belgium, and so called from the celebrated city, Doornick. Fr. Tournay.—Sk.

DARRAIN, v. Darreys is a common word in Law: Fr. Derrain, dernier, the last; and the v. Darrain may have been formed upon this ad.

To finish, to end, to conclude, or bring to a conclusion; to terminate, to determine, to decide.

In Shak. Hen. VI. pt. 3, the quartos read, "Prepare your battel," and Johnson and Stevens interpret, "Range your host, put your host in order." Jun. (in v. Dare) ascribes dare as the origin of daren, darraine, darreigne battle, which, he observes, frequently occur in Chaucer; unless, he adds, we suppose it to be from the Norman, Derremer, and to have been transferred from forensic litigation to contest in arms. Cot. has, Derremer, to derreine, to justify or make good the denial of an act or fact. Spel. thinks derremer contracted for deraisner or deraisoner; Low L. Derationare, to assert or maintain the contrary by reasoning; to destroy by reasoning what has been asserted, (Gloss. Archæol. in v. Derationare.) And Mr. Tyrw., Derremer,—Lat. Derationare, to contest. See ANALOG.

DART, v. s. -ER. "Fr. Darder, to dart;—to fling, hurl, cast or throw a dart; also to hit, wound, pierce or hurt with a dart."—Cot. Gen., to throw, to cast.

Fr. & Ger. Dard; It. & Sp. Dardo; Mld. Lat. Dardus, jaculum, telum missile. Martin. (in v. Sagitta), derives Dart from the Gr. Δοπαριον, the dim. of dope, hasta, a spear; and this etym., says Wach., snatches the palm from all that I have seen: he thinks, however, the Gr. & Ger. had a Cel. origin. Jun. also prefers dopariou. En-

DASH, v. s. To dash, sc. the foot against—ING. a stone,—is simply to strike it—ISM. against a stone.

To dash any one, met. is to strike him, sc. with surprise, with astonishment, with shame, with fear. And thus—to daunt, to depress, to lower the character or quality, and by striking or throwing one thing into another, to mix, and thus, to alter.

To dash,—to do any thing with a dash, with a stroke, at a blow, with a show of ease, of dexterity, with a flourish; hastily, carelessly, precipitately, flourishingly, ostentatiously.

A dashing fellow,—hasty, careless, ostentatious.—"V. Knox.

Sw. Daska, ferire, percutere, allidere, contundere, perfundere, confundere. Dan. Dask,—a blow. The original of this word is uncertain; its meaning and various applications are plain. Dash, Dase, Daw, are probably the same word, differently written and app. Be- Inter- Un-

Datum, pl. Data,—any thing or things, any fact or facts, given or granted.

Cot. has, "Dataire, a dater of writings; and (more part.) the dater or despatcher of the pope's bulls." Datary,—the despatching of them.

Fr. Date; It. & Sp. Data; L. Datum, past p. of dare, to give, (l. e. to add, e. g. to the possessions of another: See D.) which was written by the Romans at the bottom of their epistles; denoting the time at which they were written.—As, Datum pridie idus Junii. DAUPHIN, s. Cot. says, "Daulphin de —ESS. France. The Dolphin, or eldest son —RY. of France, called so, of Dauphiné, a province given, or (as some report it) sold in the year 1349, by Humbert, earl thereof, to Philippe de Valois; partly on condition that for ever the French king's eldest son should hold it (during his father's life) of the empire."

Sk. & delphino, from the dolphin, which these princes wore for their family arms. But the adoption of these insignia or arms appears to have been subsequent to the name.

DAW, s. A bird.

—ISH. Sk. thinks it is so called from the sound —COCK. it utters Jun. strongly suspects that it was originally written Dawl: and that through the Ger. Tul, vel tule, it is, perhaps, from the Gr.

Θελλα, a sudden and heavy storm; which these birds usually presage.

DAW, v. To daw or adaw seems equivalent to,—to dash, to daze, to daunt, and so Mr. Gifford interprets the word in B. Jonson, (and all may have had the same origin.) "To dawer, daiver," Dr. Jamieson says, "is to stun, to stupefy, also to become stupid; Su. G. Daw-a, infatuate, daw-a, stupere. To the same import is the Ger. Teuben. The Ger. Daver-en, tremere, tremiscere, he considers to be cognate. Ibre says, that daw-a, properly denotes, sensu privare; to deprive of sense or sensation. In Uncertain Authors it is,—to tame, to mitigate: "Euen he adaweth the force of cold."—The Meane Estate. See ADAWEN.

DAW, v. To dawn is,—to show or exhibit, DAWN, v. s. or cause to show or exhibit, —ING. the appearances of light; and (met.) of any brilliant quality; any talent or virtue; and, cons. to awaken, to arouse.

A. S. Dag-ian, lucescere, to daw.—Dawn, past p. Dawen; and hence the v. To dawn, to be or become day. To bring out of daw is not an uncommon expression in R. Gloucester. Jamieson says, to do out of dawes, to bring of daw, is, to kill. Daw, he observes, is often used to denote life;—and thus out of daw denotes death; and on daw, (q. on days,) may denote in life. But see Daw, supra. A- Be- Un-

DAWDL, s. v. To move sluggishly, lazily, idly; to loiter or idle away time.

Daw, in Sc. (See TO DAW or ADAW,) is, cons. a sluggard, one who is lazy and idle.—Jamieson. And Dawdle, in Eng. seems to be a dim.

DAY, s. —LY, ad. av. A day is either natural or artificial: the natural day contains twenty-four hours; the artificial, the time from sunrise to sunset. The natural day is either astronomical or civil: the astronomical begins at noon; the civil, at different hours in different countries,—midnight, sunset, sunrise. Day is app. gen.—to time, to light, to life; to a specific period of time.

Day is much used pref. See Daw, v. A. S. Dag, from Dag-ian, lucescere, to grow or become light. D. Dagh; Ger. Tag; Dan. Dag.

DAYESMAN, s. An arbiter, an umpire.

An arbiter, as it were, bestowing a day to decide a matter.—Mins. In Ger. Tag is day, and emph. the day, the fixed or appointed day; and Fagen, is condicere diem, to appoint a day. In D. Dagh is condicere diem, to appoint a day; and dagh waerden, diem dicere, constitute, prefigure allcui; to fix, appoint or determine a day for any one. And daghen, citare, to cite or summon. And thus, dayesmen,—he who fixes the day, who is present or sits as judge, arbiter or umpire on the day fixed or appointed. In Paul, 1 Cor. iv. 3, Wiclif's translation "of many's dei," is literal from the L. Vulg. "ab humano die." In Gr. ἡμεραν ἡμεραν; and this Mr. Parkhurst observes, is spoken in opposition to the coming of the Lord, in ver. 5, and also to ἡμεραν, the day, i. e. the day of the Lord, in the preceding chapter, ver. 13; where the Vulgate renders ἡμεραν, Dies Domini.

"Exhortation and dehortation, is counsel, accompanied with signs in him that giveth it, of vehement desire to have it followed; or, to say it more briefly, counsel vehemently pressed. For he that exhorteth, doth not deduce the consequence of what he adviseth to be done, and tye himself therein to the rigour of true reasoning: but encourages him he counselleth, to action,

DE-LATE, v. To bear, carry or bring;
-ION. (lit.) and met. with a subaud. of in-

-OR. formation, accusation; and thus, cons. to inform, to accuse.

To bear, to convey, to conduct. "The time wherein sound is delated."—Bacon.

Delacyon, in Lord Berners, is—delay;

deferring or delaying. "After this iudge-ment there was no delacyon of sufferaunce

nor mercy." (See TO DEFER.) In Sir

Thomas More, delating seems equivalent to collating; conferring or bringing together.

"Repayring and delating his church again and gathering thereinto."

Dilate was written not uncommonly De- late, by old writers. "To delate, or speak at large of any thing; see TO DILATE."—Mina.

Dilation, on the other hand, in Shak.

(first folio,) appears to be of the same import as Delation in Wotton and others, i. e.

—information, accusation; in Shak., "close

-AMENT.* L. Deline-are, -atum; lineam ducere, to draw a line.

DE-LINQUENT,* ad. s. Leaving, omitting, what ought to be done; and -LICT. thus, positively,—doing wrong, offending;—and the s.—a wrong doer, an offender; a trespasser or transgressor. So also Delict, s.—Howell.

Fr. Délinqu-ant; It. & Sp. -ente; L. Delinquens, p. p. of Delinquere. Delinquens propriè est prætermittere quod non oportet prætermittre; to leave undone, that which ought to be done.—Festus.

DE-LIQUATE,* v. To melt, to dissolve; to reduce to a liquid state.—Ray. Boyle.

DE-LIQUUM, s. A defect, or deficiency, a failing, a fainting; a delinquency.

Deliquium is used by Chemists as if from Deliquere, to melt. See DELIQUATE.

DE-LIRATION, s. A wandering, erring, or straying from a right -IOUS. mind or understanding; raving, -OUS. speaking or talking idly.

-IUM. L. Delirare. Lira, orig. signified sulcus, a furrow; and hence (met.) he is said, delirare, who wanders from the right line of reason; quasi sulco et terra rationis evagatur.—Voss. "To muck or harrow, is called in Latine trare, from whence came first the word delirare, which is to leave bare balks uncovered, and by a metaphor and borrowed speech, to rave and speak idly."—Holland. Plinius.

DELIVER, v. ad. To free from—sc.
-LY. from confinement or custody or -NESS. slavery; and thus, to rescue: to
-ANCE. release from the power or posses-
-ION. sion of an enemy; to release or
-ING. surrender from our own; and thus,
-Y. -SSA. to give up or resign; to give up from one holder or possessor to another;
and thus, simply,—to give up, throw up, cast away.

To deliver from the mouth, i. e. to utter,
to speak.

In our old writers, (Chaucer, Gower, Fabyan,) Deliver, Deliverly, Deliverness, are used as app. to liberty of action, freedom of motion, unrestrained, unencumbered; and thus, to,—activity, agility or nimbleness.

Fr. Délivrer; It. -rare; Sp. -rar, delivrar; L.

-IVENESS. (india) into Hetruria, whence the -ORY. Romans received them.—Voss. Delu-

dere is, Indendi finem facere. The Roman gladiators before the real combat had a mock battle, as a preparatory exercise, and when they ceased from this, they were said deludere. If hence deduced, the word must have been subsequently app. to the mock battle itself; and that also, when the real one was required of them; when they con-

DEM-AGOGUE, s. A leader of the people; app. to a factious or seditious leader. Milton considers the word as a novelty.

Gr. Ἀναγωγος, compounded of ἄνθρωπος, people, and ἄγω, to lead.

DEMAIN, Demean, Demesne, Domain, s.
The same word, so variously written. "Fr.
Demaïne,—a man's patrimony or inheritance, proper and hereditary possessions;

those whereof he is the right or true lord or possessor, and absolute owner; also, an here-

DE-MARCATION, s. A very modern word. By usage,—A mark, a marking off,
sc. of boundaries or limits.

* Burke. Horsley, &c.

Cot. has "Desmarquer; to take away the mark from; or, to put from his mark."

DEMEAN. See DEMAIN.

DE-MEAN, v. s. To rule or have domi-
-URE. nion over; to manage, to conduct,
-ING. (subaud.) the behaviour, the mode
-AUNCE. * and manner of acting; and thus, to treat, to behave towards; to behave or deport. It is used by some writers as if they considered it to be from the ad. Mean; thus,—to act meanly; to debase, to disgrace.—* Skelton,

Jun. thinks that this word may be from the Fr.
Moyen; L. Modus, vel medium. Modus vel ratio decenter se gerendi in rebus gerendis. Sk. suggests other conjectures. Mr. Tyrw. interprets the v. Demains, in Chaucer's Second Book of Fame,— to manage; and the s.—management. There are other passages in which the application seems precisely the same; and hence it admits a doubt whether this v. may not be formed upon the s.
Demain or Domain (supra); and thus, to signify—as above explained. Mis-

Fr. Despitier, -ir; It. Dispetto. This word is usually referred to the same origin as Despise.
But the existence of the uncompounded spite in Eng. and spit, spitula in D. causes Jun. to hesitate. If these words be of northern origin, he fixes upon the Ger. Spitter, spuere, despuere, to spit, to spit down,—as the root. In Go. Spey-an;
A. S. Speat-an. Spite being—dedignatio et contemptus rei, ad cujus mentionem fastidiosis despiciunt,—disdain or contempt of any thing, at the mention of which we spit contumeliously. A familiar illustration occurs, Mar. viii. 65, "Sume arguunt hunc on opation;" which Wiclif renders,
"Sume bigunnen to bi-spete him;" manifesting their spite or despite strongly enough. And to this day, "To spit his spite" is a common expression. And G. Douglas, (in the Preface, l. 44.) "I spite for dispite." The applications of Despite are more various and extensive than those of Despise.

Rich cloth embroidered with raised work we call d'Ippe, and from thence Diaper; and to do this, or any work like it, was called, To diaper, whence the participle."—See Warton's History of English Poetry, i. 176. N. Y.

Sk. mentions the conjecture, that this word owes its origin to the town of Ippe, in Flanders; but adds that there is no reason given for believing that Ippe was more famous for this manufacture than any other town. Dr. Anderson revives the conjecture, and Warton adopts it. The word they suppose was orig. written D'Ippe. In confirmation, Warton quotes from Chaucer's Wife of Bath, v. 460.

"Of cloth making she had such a haunt,
She passed them of Ippe, and of Gaunt, (i. e. Ghent.)"

Fr. Diete; It. & Sp. Dieta; L. Diata; Gr. Διαίτα. Of uncertain etym.

DIET, s. App. to—a public assembly.

See Diette, in Men.; Diata, in Du Cange; Deut, in Wach.; Thiada, in Jun. (Gloss. Goth.) Men. thinks it an application of Diet (above) to a public assembly; because the Germans were anciently accustomed to treat of public affairs in the midst of their festivals. Duchat and Sk. think from Dies, a day; the Ger. Reichs tag, dies imperii, translated into Dieta, the day (emph.) fixed, according to the former, for pleas or other public business. In English legal proceedings, the parties (in certain cases) pray a day (sc. for deciding their suit) Sk. says,—because, perhaps, the whole time of session was judicially considered as one day. Lye refers to the Goth. Thiada, gen. in Jun. (Gloss. Goth.) where Thiada, thied, or Diet, diata, are assigned to the A. S. Theod-an, getheod an, Jungere se alieul, associari;—to join or unite, to associate or meet together.

DIGIT, v. s. -ATED. The Romans, (says Dr. Adam,) as other nations, derived the names of measures chiefly from the parts of the human body. Digitus,—a digit or finger's breadth. Each foot (pes) was divided into sixteen digiti, each supposed equal to four barley-corns. The numbers or figures also, are called digiti, from the practice of counting upon the fingers, (computandi per digitos.)

Digit is principally used by astronomers. The diameter of the respective heavenly bodies is divided into twelve digiti; and by the number of these which are obscured, the extent of an eclipse is computed.

**Fetham*.

Fr. Digitis, the character which expresseth a figure in Arithmetic. —Cot. L. Digitus; perhaps Gr. δεικν-ειν, monstrare, to show or point out, q. deicere, ostendere, from its being used to point out. Pecham used the v. To digit,—to point out with the finger, in allusion to:—"At pulchrum est digitis monstrari et dicere: hic est." —Persius, Sat. Diplomated is not uncommon in Wood.

L. Diploma; Gr. Διπλωμα, from διπλοῦν, to fold together. Lat. Igitur diploma, diplomatic compositum, aut complexum, — any thing folded double.—Voss.

DIP-SAS, s. Fr. Dipsade, — "a snake whose biting brings with it a mortal disease."—Cot.

Gr. Δίψας, qd. sticticlosa, from di-ψ, to thirst. L. Dipsas; It. Dipsas.

DI-PTYCHS, s. "They writ their names in their diptychs, or two-leaved records, which contained in one page all the names of the living, in the other the dead that were of note in the church."—Bp. Lloyd.

L. Diptyche; Gr. Διπτυχον, from δι, and πτυχον, plis, a fold.

DIRE, ad. Hurtful, distressing, causing -rUL great evil, mischief; and, there- -rULNESS fore, dreadful, terrible, mourn- -rUL ful, lamentable.

Direful is dereful, full of dere, i. e. of hurt, mischief, injury.

Dire is not, like Dere, used as a s.; though Fletcher uses the plural diras, as equivalent to the L. Diras, furies, avengers.

L. Diras, dear, from A. S. Diras, nocere, to do or dere, to hurt. (See DRAK, and also Tooke.) Voss. from the Gr. Δεινός, (v changed into p.) Festus,—Dei ira.

DI-RECT, v. ad. To rule or order, to -ION. proceed in, to put into, the ruled, -IVE. ordered, or right way; the straight -LY. way, the right line; to guide, to -NESS. regulate, to manage, to conduct. -OR. To do any thing directly, is to do -ORY. it straightway, straight forward, -ORIAL. without turning to any thing else, -ORSHIP. immediately.—Shak. -RESS. Fr. Diriger; Sp. -ir; It. & L. Di-rigere, -RIX. rectum, to rule or order. Mis- In- -ITUDE. Un- Also A-droit.

DI-REMP, v. -ION.† To separate, to decide.—Hollinshed. †Bp. Hall. L. Di-rimere, -rentum.

DIREPTION, s. -ITIONOUSLY.† To seize, to snatch away, to plunder; to despoil. **Speed.* †Strype. L. Di-ripere.

DIRGE, or DIRIGE, s. A funeral song or chanson.

So called, from the beginning of the Psalm, Dirige nos Domine, which is accustomed to be sung at funerals.—Sk. But what Psalm can Sk. and his monitor T. H. mean? Jamieson and Foebrooke are both wrong in that to which they refer, viz. the ninth verse of the fifth. In v. 3, we have "Dirige meum vltim." Other etymologists ascribe it to a Popish hymn: Dirige gressus meos. Casaubon objects to this etym., and gives as an especial reason, that he can find no name given—his sacris ab hoc dirige—in any other language. Our old authors, however, write the word Dirige; and no other plausible origin has been assigned.

DIRK, v. ad. To dirk (Spenser) is to derck, to dark or darken, (qv.) See Dirk, in Jamieson.

DIRK, s. A dagger.

The v. To dirk, or durk, is found in Sc. writers. Dr. Jamieson thinks, that as the Isl. Daur signifies a sword, durk may radically be a Ge. v. The D. have Dorch, pugio, a short sword.

DIRT, v. s. To dirty, or to dirty, (the latter -Y, v. ad. now the more common v..) gen. -I-LY. is—

-NESS. To bemire, to defile, to bedaub, to pollute; to cover, smear, or stain with mire, filth, mud.

Bom. says, from the A. S. Tord,—which, according to Tooke, is the past p. of Tiran, to feed upon; Tord, that which has been fed upon. In A. S. Ge-drit-an is cacare; D. Dritten. And see To dryte, in Dr. Jamieson's Supplement. Be-

DIS, (in Composition.) From Dis, says Scal. is formed Di, and thence De. Dis, from the Gr. Δις, bis, quod enim bis fit, separatim fit.—De Caus. lib. 8. c. 145. Gr. Δις, from di-ew, (di-ew, di-ew) to divide, to separate. Dis, Di, and De, may be considered as the same prefix, meaning separation, partition, privation. They vary somewhat in their usage; De is more commonly app. to express separation, by motion from, as of a part from the whole; and then, motion downwards from. Di, separation by motion of diverse parts, diverse ways: and Dis, the same. App. to words denoting wholeness or rest, they would reverse or negative the signification of those words: as Dis-unite, Dis-compose; and afterwards convey that force to words of a different description. More than this; being frequently prefixed to words, themselves meaning separation or partition, as Dis-part, Dis-sever, and thus augmenting the force of those words, they have been improperly—with this augmenting force—pref. to other words, not having such meaning of separation or partition, e. g. Dis-annul, and the old v. Dis-slander. For the etymology of the word to which Dis is prefixed, reference must be made to that word.

DIS-ABLE, v. ad.* To deprive of ability, -MENT. strength, power, force; to strip -ABILITY. or deprive of those qualities, which en-able or empower, (and in our old writers) which give value or estimation; and thus, to undervalue, to underrate, to disqualify, to dis-esteem.

Rafellere, in Livy, is rendered in Hackluyt to disable or confute: "Neither mean I to auouch ne to disable or confute those thinges," &c.—**Daniel*.

-MENT. Fr. Discerner; It. -ere; Sp. -ir; L. Discernere. Kuster agrees with Voss. that L. Cernere, Gr. Kriveiv, properly signifies to separate, to disjoint; he considers it then to have been app. to denote:—to see any thing clearly and distinctly; to discern (separate) one thing from another by sight; and then, further, to have been app. to the mind; i. e. to distinguish accurately the perceptions, the conceptions of the mind. Cernere, he observes, plus est quam videre. And see DECKAN, and DISCERN. In-Un-*Spenser. Hammond. †Skelton.

Fr. Disciple; It. -cepolo; Sp. -cipulo. Fr. Disciplin-er; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Discipulus; disciplina, from discere. Voss. thinks from the Gr. Didaskopos. Lennep considers the L. Discere, to be no other than the Gr. Didasko, signifying pellere vel impellere, expellere, ejicere, are verbs: to cast out, throw out, sc. words from the mouth. Of similar origin, it may be observed, is the Eng. word, to shout, i. e. shoot, sc. words from the mouth. The L. Discere, he supposes to have originated from Didasko (by metath. Didasko) the first future of Didasko, to cast or throw. Whence also discere, discus. Upon this etym. Schellius interprets Discere lit. to mean, expellere sapientia, identidem dicere; to throw out the same thing frequently, i. e. to say the same thing, (sc.) till it is taught, or taken; and thus to teach, i. e. to teach knowledge, to learn. off or cast down.

Fr. Desmonter; It. Dismonter, smontare.

DIS-NATURED, * ad. Unnatural, ill-natured.—Daniel. Shak.

* Fr. Desnatureur,—to make unnatural; to weaken nature.—Cot.

DIS-OBEY, * v. To obey, from Ob-ed-ire,
-EDI-ENT. to hear, hearken or listen to;
-ENTLY. and thus,—to comply with,
-ENCE. submit to the will or wishes
-ENCY. of another. And to Disobey, -REUSANCE* —to refuse, or deny, or with-
-REUSANT.† hold, or withdraw, obedience, compliance or submission, to the will or wishes of another; to act contrary to rule or order, or command; to resist authority.

* E. Hall. † Gower. † Chaucer. Berners.
Fr. Disobéir; Sp. -decer; It. Disobbidire.

DIS-OBLIGE, * v. To oblige is,—to bind,
-ATION. sometimes with a subaud. of—
-MENT. by acts of kindness or service;
-ER. and Disoblige is opposed to this—
-INGLY. not to bind or attach by kindness or service; to withhold, to refuse a kindness or service; and thus—to offend, to give offence, to displease.

Our old Eng. writers use the word properly as the Fr. and It.—viz. to release or free from bond or obligation. "Could a man by his will, oblige himself, or make any thing unlawful to him, there would be nothing got by this, because then might he by his will, disoblige himself again, and make the same lawful as before."—Cudworth.

It. Disobbligare; Sp. Desobligar; Fr. "Disobligar,—to release or discharge of a bond, to quit of an obligation."—Cot. L. Ob-ligare, to bind, to hold to. Un-

DIS-OCCIDENT, * v. To turn away from the west. L. Occidens, the setting, sc. of the sun. See DIS-ORIENT.—Marvell.

DIS-ORBED, * pt. Thrown out of its orbit or sphere of motion.—Shak.

stroy the organic or instrumental construction, disposition or arrangement of parts; to discompose, disarrange, disorder.

DIS-ORIENT, * v. Fr. Désorienter,—to turn away from the east, (L. Oriens, the rising, sc. of the sun.) It seems equivalent to the vulgar expression—

To be or put out of his latitude; to have lost the right way.—Warburton.

DIS-OWN, * v. To refuse to own or acknowledge; to disclaim, disallow, disavow, renounce.

DIS-PARAGE, * v. s. To degrade, to -ABLE. underrate, to undervalue, to dis-
-MENT. grace. Dis-paragon, v.—G. Fletch.

-ER. It. Disparaggiare; Fr. Disparager,—"to
-ING. offer unto or impose upon a man un-
-INGLY. or unworthy conditions."—Cot. Mid.
L. Disparigare, (Voss. de Vitia, iv. 6.) Spel.
says,—the Fr. use Parage for family, consanguinity, parentage; hence, in our Law, To disparage is the same thing as to bind together unequale in blood; from the L. Dispar, unlike, unequal.

DIS-PARATE, * ad. -ATES, * s. Of Dispa- rates, Cockeram says, "Words which are differing from one another, but not contrary; as heat and cold are contraries, but heat and moisture disparate."

The ad. Se-separated, disjointed, distinct.
L. Dis-parare, se-parare, et sejungere, et separare, to disjoin. Disparata, quasi ab aliis juncta sepa-
rataque.—Voss. in v. Paro.

DI-SPARCLE, * v. i. e. Dis-sparcle. To throw out sparks; to spread, to scatter, as sparks do.

* Brende. Sir T. More. Holland.

By this word Brende renders Spargere, and Disparre, to spread, disperse, dissipate.

DIS-PARTITION, * s. Used by Bp. Hall as equivalent to Disappearance; and in opposition to Apparition.

DIS-PARITY, s. Unlikeness, inequality.

L. Dispar, unlike, unequal.

DIS-PARK, v. -ING.* Fr. "Déparqué,—disparked, disinclosed, laid open: also broken or got out of a park or inclosure."—Cot. **Bp. Taylor*, (met.)

DIS-PART, v. -ATION. To divide, to separate, to dis sever, to sunder.

L. Dis-partiri, to separate.

DIS-PASSION, s. Want of, freedom

-ED. from, passion or feeling; calm-

-ATE, ad. ness, coolness of feeling, tem-

-ATELY. perance, moderation.

Equivalent to Dispassion (used by Sir William Temple) is Apathy, (Gr. Ἀπάθεια;) and to Compassion, Sympathy, (Gr. Συμπάθεια.)

DISPATCH, v. s. " Fr. Despescher,—

-ER. To hasten, rid, send away quickly,

-FULL. to take a speedy course with, make

-ING. a speedy end of."—Cot.

-MENT. A despatch,—messages or letters sent expeditiously, with haste, with speed.

De-spach is more consistent with the origin of the word. Fr. De-spescher, -pescher; Sp. -spachar; It. Spacciare. Men. says,—Dépcher, quasi depedire, i. e. expedire; and to the same purport Sk. —"Ex-ped-ire dicitur, qui pedem retentum liberat."—Donatus, in Ter. Hecyram, v. l. 28.

DIS-PEL, v. To move or cause to move apart; to drive asunder, to disperse.

L. Dispellere.

DIS-PEND, v. To take from, use out of,

-ING. heap; to dispose of, to disburse, to distribute; and (now the more common word) to expend, (qv. and Spend.) Dispende

(i. e. Dispende) is also used in our elder writers as equivalent to—Expense (i. e.

Expense.) See DISPENSE.

Ety. requires that we should write Dis-pend. Fr. Dispendre; It. Dispendere; L. Dispendere, to take from a weight or mass. Dispendium est, si ponderi aliquid detrahatur cum damno nostro.

DIS-PENSE, v. s. To distribute, to deal

-ABLE. out, to apportion, to give a

-ARY. portion or allowance, to

-ATION. allow; to give leave or per-

-ATIVE. mission to do or not to do;

-ATIVELY. to exempt, to excuse, to

-ATOR. make or claim an excuse.

-ATORY, s. ad. Dispensator is used as equi-

-ATORILY. valent to Steward.

To act or transact, to cause or occasion, to effect or produce, to perform or execute, to make, to practise, to accomplish, to complete or fulfil, to finish, to bring to an end.

"Hauē on him routh, and doeth him at deie."—Chaucer. "And in the next river do me drenche."—Id. "Thei haue done hir vnderstonde."—Gower. "I do thee to understand."—North. "Arion;—doing the mariners to wet."—Holland.

A. s. auxiliary, and a v. absolute, (says Wallis;) as an auxiliary, having only the present and preterimperfect, (did for do-ed;) as a v. absolute, having the pis. (doing, do'n.) and then also itself admitting auxiliary verbs.

Mr. Tyrw. remarks, that Do is used very rarely by Chaucer as an auxiliary, (v. 1472, 4;) that he more frequently uses it transitively, (v. 10, 074, 5;) but still more frequently to save the repetition of a word, (v. 269.) This latter usage has been noticed by Hickes in the A. S., who gives, with other instances, one from Mark viii. 6:—Et datus discipulis ut apponerent, et apposerunt turbis; "And he gave to his disciples, that they should set before them, and they did so;" in A. S. And his own didon.—Mr. Tyrw. also observes, that the exact power which Do, as an auxiliary, has in our language, is not easy to be defined, and still less to be accounted for from analogy. Tooke answers, "that though we cannot account for the use of this verbal sign, (as he emph. calls it,) from any analogy to other languages, yet there is no expice in these methods of employing to and do, (the same word, in his opinion,) so differently from the practice of other languages: but that they arise from the peculiar method which the English language has taken to arrive at the same necessary end, which other languages attain by distinguishing termination."—I. 359.

To (le act.) prefixed to a s., invests such s. with a verbal character, and was used to distinguish the infinitive from the s., after the infinitive had lost that distinguishing termination, which it formerly had.

Do, for the same reason, and with the same effect, is pref. to other parts of the English v., undistinguished from the s. by termination, and to these parts only. In Chaucer's time, the distinguishing terminations of the v. still remained, although not constantly employed; and he availed himself of that situation of the language to use them or not; and thus both To and Do are used by Chaucer more rarely than we use them at present. See Tooke, l. 350, et seq.

To or Do is the Go. s. Tauē or Tauhts; i. e. act. quod, result, consummation; which Go. s. is itself the part p. Tauē or Tauide, of the v. Tauē or Tauē, agere, to do, or cause to do, to act. A. S. Don; Got. Thun; D. Doen. For Mis-Over-Out-Un-

DOCK, v. s. -ET, v. s. A place sunk for the reception of, for building or repairing ships, and for other purposes.

D. Duyken, Ger. Duken, are also, to droop or drop down, to hang down; and may thus be app. to—

The fleshy part of the tail, which drops or hangs down from the extremity of the back (of a horse) as distinguished from the hair. And thus further (as To head or be-head, is, to cut off the head) to dock may be to cut off the dock; and gen.—

To cut off, to lop off, to curtail or shorten.

Docket,—a brief in writing, or some small piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a large writing (Mins.), i. e. a large writing curtailed, shortened.

Sk. thinks, a dock for ships may be from the D. Duyken, abscondere, latere, to hide, to be hid; but the D. Duyken, Ger. Duken, is premere, deprimere, to depress, to sink; and thus app. to a place sunk.

DOCK, s. A plant. "Garden docks is knowne to run downe in the ground three cubits deepe."—Holland. Plinie.

A. S. Docca. Perhaps of the same origin as the former "Dock."

DODDER, v. -ED. To dodder (or, as pronounced in some counties, didder or dither) is to totter or tremble; to shake.

Dodder, Mins. says, is a weed winding about herbes, from Ger. Ditteren, to tremble; because with the least blast of wind it is easily shaken, and doth dodder, or tremble. To the same purpose is Sk.

This is not applicable to the dodder, which does not tremble

Dodder evidently same as Hedera

dogrose

dog-lawn (2 others Latin:)

DOL

DODGE, v. To move quickly from place to place; to show signs of, or pretend to be, going one way and to go another; of doing one thing and to do another. And see To Doo.

Sk. thinks, from Dog; i. e. to run about—this way and that—like a dog catching after the scent.

DODI-POLE, or DOTI-POLE, s. A dotard. Mins. and Cot. say that Dodo is a word with which nurses lull infants to sleep. Perhaps from Dote, (qv.) and pole, the head. But see DOLL.

DODKIN, s. A little doit, (qv.)
*Holland.

DOE, s. An animal. A. S. Da; D. Degn; Fr. Daim, dain; It. Damma, daino; L. Damo; so called for its timidity or fearfulness, from Gr. δαμα, fear.—Voss.

DOFF, v. -ING. To do off; put away, lay aside; put off. In Holland, (Suetonius,) written D'offing.

DOG, v. s. To dog or to dodge, (qv.)—to -GEDLY. follow about as a dog does, to pursue, sue, or hunt like a hound; so as -EREL. to find out and follow wherever -ISH. we go.

A dog-iron is so called, Mins. says, because it was made in the form of a dog.

Dogged, ad. app. to those, who have the ill-temperors or dispositions of dogs or curs; curriah, snarling, morose, sullen, obstinate.

Doggerel.—Mr. Tyrw. says, Derived I suppose from dog; so that rime-doggerel may be rime de chien; rhime without harmony; noisy, harsh; cons. worthless.

Ger. Docke, canis Molossus. Eng. Dog; D. Doghe; Fr. Dogue. Although the word in Eng. is app. to every species, yet in the other (Northern) dialects it is the large hunting dog, canis grandis et venaticus; and perhaps so called from Tacken, capere, to take, to catch.—Wach.

DOGE, s. -LESS.* i. e. Duke.—*Byron.

DOGMA, s. Dogmatism is opposed to -T-IC, ad. s. scepticism; and app. to -ICAL. An opinion or doctrine said -ICAL-LY. or assumed to be clearly seen -NESS. or discerned; and, therefore, -T-ISM. positively affirmed, authoritatively asserted; any positive or authoritative affirmation or -IZING. assertion. -IZER. Gr. δογμα, from δοκ-ειν, videre, to see, to perceive; quod videtur, placitum, decretum, sententia.—Martin.

DOIT, s. So much (brass) as can be covered by the tip of the finger.

Fr. Doigt; L. Digitus. Doigt, (Sk.) is manifestly corrupted from Digitus. See DIGIT.

DOLE, v. s. To dole,—to divide, to distribute, to part, to portion, or apportion: to part with—(as if unwilling.) See To DEAL.

Happy man be his dole,—i. e. "Let his portion be that of a happy man. Let happiness, good luck, good fortune be the part or portion of him, of each, of every or any one speaking, or spoken of."

DOM

Go. Dailgen; A. S. Dæl-en; D. Dap-en; Ger. Theit-en, to divide, to distribute, to impart, to deale. Hence, Som. adds, to this day we call the distribution of alms at a funeral, a dole. The stones also which are used in boundaries, to divide land from land, are hence also termed, dole-stones. See DOULE. See also TOOKE.

DOLE, s. Pain, pain of mind, grief, sorrow; suffering, affliction. -FULL. Nicolls, who translated Thucydides from the Fr., uses Doleance as the Fr. Dolence; a wailing, moaning, complaining. -OUR, s. Dolour,—L. Dolor; Fl. Doleur,—grief, sorrow, anguish; sadness, heaviness of heart.—*E. Hall. †Nicoll. -IFEROUS. †Whitaker. †Ray. -IFIC. †Fr. Du-ell; It. -olo, Doglio; Sp. Duelo; L. Dolor, from Dol-ere, to be in pain; perhaps from Dol-ere, to cut. Voss thinks it may be Heb. Rather from A. S. Tholian, to thole, (qv.) pati, tolerare, sustinere: to bear, to suffer. Con- In-

DOLL, s. App. to—Any silly plaything. Cooper (Latin Dict. 1673) renders O capitulum lepidissimum of Terence, "O pleasant companion: O little pretty Doll polle." Dryden translates puppe, in Pervius, "baby-toys;" and in a note says, that "those baby-toys were little babies, or poppets, as we call them;" whence it seems that the name of Doll was not in general use. Perhaps from D. Dol, senseless, stupid, from Dol-en,—A. S. Dwollan, hebere, hebetare. See DOLT.

DOLLAR, s. A coin, of different value in different countries.

D. Daler; Ger. Thaler. Wach says, so called with the consent of all, quasi vallemia, from the Ger. Thal, a dale, a valley, because they were first coined in the valley of Joachim; and as St. says, were also called Joachims; he (Sk.) adds, that it may (non absurd) be derived from Dal, division, Dal, portion, because it is the half part or portion of a ducat; and in this latter opinion Tooke coincides with him. See DOLT.

DOLPHIN, s. -ET. A fish. Fr. Dauphin; Sp. Del-fin; It. -fino; D. Dolphin; Ger. & L. Delphin; Gr. Δελφιν.

DOLT, s. A dulled, thick-headed, stupid fellow; a blockhead. -ISHNESS. Dolt, i. e. dulled, (or dol-ed, dolt, dolt), is the part p. of Dwel-lan, dwel-an, to dull, hebere, hebetare.—Tooke.

DOLVEN. See DELVE. Be- Under-

DOM, term. A. S. Dom: from Dem-en, to deem, doom or judge: as king-dom,—under the doom, dominion, rule, government of a king. Free-dom,—the doom, judgment, will of the free.

DOMAIN. Also written Demain, (qv.)

DOME, s. -AL.* In English, app. to—a building, a mansion; and also to a cupola. *Addison.

L. Domus; Gr. δομος, from δευ-ειν, to build. Mid L. Doma; Fr. "Dôme, or doma,—a dom, rounded tower, (Fr. l'ouvert), or open roof, to a steepie, banketting-house, pigeon-house, &c.

somewhat resembling the bell of a great watch."—Cot. Du Cange says, what the Fr. call Dôme, the It. call Cupola.

DOMESTIC, ad. s. That can or may -AL, ad. s. house, or keep house or at -ALLY. home; and, more widely,—Of -ATE, v. or pertaining to house or home,
-M-KILL. family or kindred; fond of -MILL-ART. home, of privacy; attached to -ATE, s. family enjoyments, devoted to
-AL. family duties.

Domesticare, "Fr. Domestiquer,—to tame, reclaim; civilize, make familiar, gentle, tractable, housal."

Fr. Domestique; It. & Sp. -tico; L. Domesticus, from L. Domus. See DOMUS.

DOMINATE, v. To dominate,—to rule
-ATION. over, to govern, to have power,
-ATIVE. command or authority; to
-ATOR. tyrannize.
-ANT. Gen., to domineer is—to go-
-ION. vern; to govern in a lordly,
-ZER, v. magisterial or tyrannical man-
-NERING. ner; with insolence or haughtiness: to tyrannize, to lord it.

*To domineer or beare rule;—B. Domin-eren; Fr. -rier, -er; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Dominari, from Dominus, a lord; to play the lord.—Mins. See DOMAIN. Pre-

DOMINICAL, s. ad. The Lord's Day; and also, the Lord's Prayer.

Fr. Dominical. La lettre dominicale,—the dominical letter. It. Lettera Dominicale; Sp. Letra Dominical. Fr. L'Oraison Dominical,—the Lord's Prayer; the Paternoster.

DON, s. -SHIP. A title of gentility in Spain. Used in derision in English. Sometimes written Don.

Contracted from L. Dominus.

DON, s. To do on, to put on. D'on.—W. Browne. See DOFF.

DONATION, s. A giving or bestowing,
-ATIVE. a gift or grant, a largesse.

-ARY. Fr. Don-ation, -ation; It. -azione; Sp. -acion; L. Donatio, from Donare, to give. Con-

DONZEL, s. "A young gentleman following arms and not yet knighted."—Mins. in v. Damsel (qv.) **Beau. & F.*

Fr. Donzels; It. Donzello, Donzello; Sp. Donzelo; L. Domicellus, quasi parvus dominus.

DOOM, s. s. -FUL. To judge or adjudge, to sentence, determine or decree.—**Drayton*.

A. S. Dom-an, to think, to judge, to determine. (See DEEM.) The s. "Dom. dome, iudicium, sententia, arbitrium, a judgment, sentence, ordinance, decree. Domes-day,—dies iudicii, the day of judgment."—Sam. See DON.

DOOR, s. "Dure or durk. Now a door, it is as much to say as through, and not improper, because it is a durk-fare, or thorough passage."—Feristegan.

Ge. Dure, dure; A. S. Dora, duru; D. Drure, dor; Ger. Thure; Dan. Dor; Gr. Eupa. Tooke considers the Eng. pr. Thorough, through, and the s. Door, to be the same word. diff. written and app.; meaning,—door, gate, passage. Chaucer writes the word in the Perceuses Tale twice Thoor-ruke; or as Tyrw. writes it, Tawrook, qd. thorough-fare.

DOP, s. i. e. Dip. The Venetian Dop, (Gifford,) is the Dip, a very low bow or curtesy, (a cringe, qv.)
-CHICK. Dop-chick, also written Dab-chick, or Dob-chick. See DAB.

DOR, v. s. -RER. To dorr,—to befool, to delude, to bemock, to bother.—**Sir T. More*.

A. S. Dora, a dorrs or drone, (Som.) from, to dare, A. S. Dyrran, qd. minaciter provocare. (See SK.) But, to dorr the dottelrei, is to delude the dottelrei; and both are from the same v. Dydran, to befool.

DORIAN, ad. One of the five dialects of -IC. the Greek tongue, which the -IZE, **v. Dorienses*, a people of Greece, used in their common speech and writings.—Mins. Also, their music, their architecture.—**Cudworth*.

Fr. Dori-que; It. & Sp. -ce; L. Dialectus Dorica; Gr. Διαλεκτος Δωρικη.

DORMANT, ad. Sleeping, reposing;
-ANCY. leaning or lying in a state of
-ITIVE, s. repose, in a reclining position;
-ITORY. continuing or remaining at rest,
-ER. in stillness, in tranquillity.
-TURE.† A dormitory (or dormer),—a place to sleep in; also of eternal rest; as a place for burying.

Dorture,—Fr. Dortoir, q. dormiture.

Fr. Dormant; L. Dormiens, p. p. of Dormire, to sleep. Ob-

DORMOUSE, s. The sleeping mouse.
L. Dormiens mus.

DORSE, s. The back; a cover for the DORCER, or back, thrown or hanging or de-
-DOSSER. pending backwards.
DORSAL. Dorser,—a pannier or basket or bag thrown over the back.

Fr. Doester; Mid. L. Dossorum, from Fr. Dos, and this from L. Dorsum, the back; because it was placed upon the back of beasts of burden.—Jun. En-In DOSE, v. s. App. (part.) to—The portion of medicine given at one time; to a sufficient quantity.

Fr. Dose; It. Dosa; Gr. Dosis; that which is given.

DOT, s. s. It is not made "to mark any place in a writing, but is what we call the full stop;" a small spot.

Dot, the s. (Tooke) is merely the past p. of the A. S. v. Dyllan, to stop up, to shut in. See DIR.

NOTE, **s.* App. part. to—That which is -AL. given in marriage, a marriage

NOTE, v. Also written Doat.

- AGE. To dote is,—to do as dotards
- ARD. do; to be weak or imbecile in
- ARDLY. mind or understanding; to be
- ER. weakly fond, childishly, unreason-
- INGLY. ably, excessively so.—Shak.
- ISH. D. Doten, dutten, delirare, decipere;
- HEAD. Fr. Doter, radoter. Some have said—
- ANT.* from Herodotus, because he tells so many old women's stories. Tooke thinks that Dotard (i. e. one who dots) is doder'd (i. e. defooled), the regular past tense of Dyderian, dydrian, to delude. The v. to dote, may have been formed from this past p.; or we may owe it to the Ger. Dotteren, to tremble, to totter. Be-

DOTTARD, i. e. Doddered, (qv.) Ascham writes Dotterell.

DOTTEREL, s. The bird.

"For as you creep, or cower, or lie, or stoop, or go, So marking you (with care) the apish bird doth do, And acting every thing, doth never mark the net, Till he be in the snare, which men for him have set."

Tooke says, dim. of Doder'd, (i. e. defooled.) See Dorz. Camden from—To dote.

DOUBLE, v. s. ad. av. To fold over, sc.

- NESS. one part over another; to put or
- ER, s. add equal to equal, in number or
- ING. measure; to equal twice the number
- Y. or quantity.
- ET. To turn, and go twice, or a second time, over the same ground or tract; to turn and go in the course or direction already passed; to cross backward and forwards, in and out; and thus, to endeavour to elude or escape, to illude or deceive, to trick. See DUPPLICITY.

DOUBT, v. s. The usage is well expressed

- ABLE. by Cot. :—"To doubt, suspect,
- EDLY. mistrust; be uncertain, make a
- ER. question, or scruple of; to
- FUL. stagger, stammer, waver be-
- FULLY. tween hope and fear; to be in

DOUCEUR, s. Gen. app. in Eng. to that which sweetens, renders pleasant or agreeable, sc. a gift or present; a donation.

Fr. Douceur, sweetness, from L. Dulcis, sweet.

DOVE, s. A bird.

- ISH. Dove-tail, (in Joinery,) so called
- TAIL. from its resemblance to the tail
- TAILED. of a dove; (à figurâ cauda columbina emulâ.—Sk.)

Go. Dubo; A. S. Dupa; D. Duyce, duyf; Ger. Taube; Sw. Dufva. The L. Columba is thought to be from the Gr. Κολυβίαν, urinare, aquam subire; to dip or duck; from the action of these birds; Jun. supported by Wach. thinks Dove is from the A. S. Duf-ian, to dive, duck or dip.

DOUGH, s. -Y. The bread, (i. e. brayed corn or grain,) by being wetted becomes dough. See Tooke.

A. S. Dah; D. Deeg; Ger. Teig; Sw. Dej. Sk. & Wach. seem inclined to derive from A. S. Deagan, imbuiere, qd. farina aqua mixta, seu imbuta. Tooke says,—Dough is the past p. of the A. S. v. Deaw-ian, to moisten, to wet. Dough or dow means wetted. Dew is the same past p.

DOUGHTY, ad. A. S. "Doktig, noble, -ILY. stout, valiant, hardy, courageous, -INESS. renowned, virtuous."—Som.

From Duguth, virtue, goodness, valour, valiancy, the third per. sing. (Tooke) of Dug-an, valere, "to be able, to be of force or power, to may or can, to prevail or profit. Belgic, Dough-en, dough-ken."—Som. See Duke.

DOUS, term. L. Dus, da, dum; as, amandus, one who ought to be loved; decendus, who ought to be taught. The root is probably the Gr. Δεω.

DOUT, v. The commentators on Shak. agree that Doubt is wrong, and Dout, i. e. do out, right; but under the word Doubt it has been shown that To doubt is constantly used as equiv. to—to fear, to awe; and thus it may be cons. in this passage, to quell, to subdue. Ray, however, has Douter, an extinguisher, qd. Do-outer.

DOW,* v. That which is given, sc. for the

- ABLE. sustenance of the wife, and the - AGE. nurture and the education of the
- AGER. younger children.
- ER. Dowager,—who enjoys a dowry after
- ER-Y. the death of her husband.
- ED. *R. Gloucester. R. Brunne.
- LESS. Fr. Douer, to induce, endow or give a dowry unto. Dower; Fr. Douaire; Mid. L. Dotarium, donarium, from L. Dos; Gr. Δω, any thing given. (See Endow, and Dora.) Dowager, douariere, quæ fruitur dote post mariti mortem. En-

DOWDY, ad. s. One whose clothes hang on like rags; are ill put on; one loosely dressed—in a slovenly manner.

It appears also to have been app. to an article of dress. "She had made herself a plain homely dowdy."—Tatler.

Mr. Grose says, "Dudds in the North are rags, in the West, clothes; a square in the center of Stirbitch fair, where linen cloth is sold, is called the duddery. Dudman in the West is a scarecrow, also a ragged fellow." In D. Tod is a rag. From Dudds, whatever it may have orig. meant, there is little doubt that Dowdy has been formed, and app.—as above.

DOWLAS, s. -smock. A kind of coarse and strong linen, probably from Dow-lase, a town of Picardy, formerly celebrated for this manufacture.—Sk.

DOWLE, ad. See DOLE. Dowle, or dole, or Deale, are but one word diff. pronounced and written; and mean merely a part, piece, or portion, (without any signification of feather, or downe, &c.) "He wolde teare him every dowle," i. e. piecemeal, tear every piece of him, tear him in pieces. See TOOKE.

The commentators on Shak. conceive Dowle to mean feather or down. Be-

DOWN, s. App. to—Elastic feathers, -r. which, when pressed down, raise -less themselves again. Also app. to other substances having the softness and lightness of such feathers; and also (met.) to that which is soft, tender, soothing.

D. Dowd, dense; Ger. Dusen; Sw. Dun. Sk. says, D. Dense, veders, tenses, i. e. molles plumas, and refers to this: in D. Dun, and Ger. Dusen. Wach. and Ibre think, from Dusen, tumere, to swell, to rise; and thus Dusen, are—pennas elasticæ, quæ depresso resurgunt et elevantur.

DOWN, s. App. to—a rising ground; a mount; a plain, to which there is an ascent; and from which,—a descent. See DOWN, av.

Fr. Dunes; It. Duna; D. Duyn; Ger. Dun; and A. S. Dun, dune, which Som. explains, Mons, a hill or mountain,—a downe. Item, locus apertus, campestris et planus, champaigne ground. He and Men. think the word Celtic. Versteegan says, "Dune, a hill, com. that stretcheth or extendeth itself out in length. They call in Holland the sand-banks, which lye upon the sea-side the, Dunes. The town of Dun-kirk, rightly in Eng. Dun-church, hath had that appellation by being situate in the Dunes, or sand-banks. We yet, in some parts of England, call hills—downes." To the same purport is Cot. Wach. (who, as Tooke acknowledges, has laboriously and learnedly, though, he thinks, not happily, considered the word, Dun.) derives from dun-en, to swell, to rise, to be elevated: a most ancient word, he adds, the preservers of which are Saxones inferiores; and that they received the word from their ancestors is manifest from its derivatives, dun, a mountain, a hill, a rising or swelling of the earth, (tumor terre,) dunen, pennæ elasticæ. See DOWN, supra and infra.

DOWN, av. pr. Down is sometimes used -WARD, as a v., and is equivalent to—To -WARDS, sink, to depress, to suppress, to subdue.

It is also used with a subaud. of the v. as in Locke,—"Bread will down," i. e. go down. "Down with them," i. e. pull them, throw them, knock them down.

Down, lit., always expresses descent either in space or time, (met.) from a higher to a lower, superior to inferior, better to a worse state or condition.

It is also much used in composition, and gives birth to some words of great force.

Tooke agrees with Camden that this word has proceeded from Dufen,—a British word in the opinion of the former; a Sax. word in that of the latter, and the past p. of the A. S. v. Duf-an, mergere, to sink, to plunge, to dive, to dip. The corruption he conceives to have proceeded thus, duf-en, dven, dun, don, down. He adds, "in most of the passages in which the pr. or ad. Down is used in Eng., the sense of this past p. is clearly expressed, and, without the least straining or twisting, the acknowledged pt. may be put instead of the supposed pr.; although there may perhaps be some passages, in which the pr. Down is used, where the meaning of the pt. may not so plainly appear." Down, the s. (see ante), he asserts to be the same word, though he does not explain how a word, which, according to himself, means, "sunk, depressum, deep, or low," is to be app. to "a hill, a rising ground." Perhaps this deficiency may be relieved by supposing the word to have been orig. app.—by those on the summit—to the descent, the depression of the sides, in relation to themselves. See DINE.

The editor of the 8vo. edition of the Diversions of Furley, suggests that Down, adown, is a contraction of A. S. Ofdune, of, or from hill, down hill: of dune, he adds, is interpreted by Lye, doerum, downward; and he quotes a passage from Boethius, with the A. S. translation by Alfred, and the Eng. by Chaucer, to show that the same L. word (pronum) is by the one rendered of dune, and by the other adown.

DOWSE, v. To douce (or douze) is used (met. by Hammond) as equivalent to—

To plunge, to immerse.

Sk. says, from D. Donsen, to strike with the fist on the back. A douce in the face is used in vulgar speech for a blow in the face.

DOWSETT, s. Doucet, (in Chaucer) Mr. Tyrw. says, may be a corruption of doucete, which is the name of a musical instrument, in a poem of Lydgate's, MS. Bodl.

"There were trumpets and trumpetes Lowde shallys and doucetes."

Dousett of a Deer,—Fr. Doucet, sweet, from L. Dulcis; cibus gratissimus et suavis-simus.

DOXOLOGY, s. A saying, a declaration, of glory. In the Church Service—"Glory to the Father," &c.

DOXY, s. A wench, free of her favours. Sk. says, I know not whether from D. Docken, to give quickly.

DOZE, v. To be or cause to be stupid, -Y. dull, heavy, sleepy.

-INESS. D. Duyscien, to stupify, to be stupid.—Sk. And see DAZE.

DOZEN, s. DOZE-PEERS. Two and ten. Douse, doce, doze-peers, i. e. dozen-peers.

"For to brynge this warre to the more effectuall ende, he [Charles Martel] chase, xii. perys, which after some wryters, are callyd doseperys, or kyngs, of y<sup>e</sup> which vi. were bisshopys, and vi. temporall lords."—Fabyan.

Fr. Douzaine; It. Dozz-ina, -ena; L. Duodecim, (duo et decem.)

DRAB, v. s. App. to—Dirty, vulgar, and -B-ER. depraved women.

-ING. To drab,—to associate with, keep

-LE, v. the company of drabs; follow their -ISH.* habits or manners. Drabble is the dim.—**Drant*.

Sortum, prostibulum, elegans vocabulum, (Sk.) from A. S. & D. Drabbe; Ger. Draber, faces, (dreg, lees); qd. fœx populi, the dregs of the people. Perhaps from A. S. Draf-an, drif-an, expellere, ejicere, to drive out, cast out. See DRAFF.

DRAB-COLOUR, ad. i. e. Drape-colour, the colour of fullers' earth. See DRAPE.

DRACHM, s. App. to—A small portion or quantity. "A drachma, so termed for that it was as much as the hand could gripe;" (τοσούτον γὰρ ἡ χεὶρ περιέδραμεν.)—North, Plutarch. See DRAM.

L. Drachma; Gr. δραχμή, from δρασκεῖν, that is, to contain; because it comprised as many small coins (called κεφαλαί) as any one could hold, or contain, or shut up in the hand.

DRAD, i. e. Dread, (qv.)

DRAFF, s. App. met. to—Any thing vile -Y. and worthless.

-TY. D. & Sw. Draff. Sk.—from Drabbe, dregs, lees. (See DRAB.) Wach.—from A. S. Drif-an, drif-an, (to drive,) expellere, Draff-ed, drift, expulsum, expelled, cast out, cast away, winnowed away. Ihe thinks that this etym. does not account for the draff or dregs of beer; because they remain till the beer is drawn off; but, it may be observed, they are then expelled or cast out.

DRAFT, s. Lit.—Any thing drawn; as sea-charts, plans, &c. Any attraction.

Drow or draugh, drawed or draughed, draugh'd, draught, draft. See DRAUGHT, and DRAW.

DRAG, v. s. -GLE, v. Written by Chaucer Drugge. To draw, pull, hale along.

A. S. Drag-an, trahere, vehere, to draw, to carry; D. & Ger. Trecken; Sw. Drag-a; Dan. Drag-or. Draggie is the dim. Be-

DRAGON, s. An animal;—the plant, so -ESTE. called because spotted like the dragon.—Sk.

-ISH. Fr. & Sp. Drag-on; It. -gone, -cone; L. Draco; Gr. δράκων, from δράκω, by transposition for δράκων, from δράκω, that is βλεπεῖν, to see: quod dracones acutè vident, immo et insomnes sunt; because they are keen-sighted, and ever awake.—Voss.

French 122

DRAGOON, v. s. A class of soldiery.

-ADE. To dragoon,—to act as a dragoon, -ER. i. e. with military rigour, extreme -ING. severity.

In the decline of the empire, certain standard bearers were called Draconarii, i. e. bearers of the Standard of the Dragon. And hence the name appears to have been perpetuated after the cause had ceased. Sk. thinks that, in modern times, Dragoons are so called, because they are as destructive as dragons, and like them seem to vomit fire.

DRAIL, v. Corrupted from Drabble, the dim. of Drag, (qv.)

DRAIN, v. s. To draw off, to cause to -ER. run or flow off; to exhaust, to empty, -ING. to dry.

Sk. and Jun. from Fr. Trainer; L. Trahere, to draw: Tooke from A. S. Drygan, excutere, expellere, and, therefore, siccare. Dry-en, (y into z,) drug-en, drag-n, dras or dras; app. to that by which any fluid (or other thing) is excussum or expulsum, shaken off or expelled.

DRAKE, s. A bird. An engine of war.

1. Sea drake, draco marinus, quia mare et fluviis ut draco terram populatur. 2. An engine of war, qd. draco, because like a dragon it vomits forth fire.—Sk. The common bird, perhaps from Ger. & D. Dreck, (dreg,) mud, because it delights in mud. In Ger., it may be added, the duck is Eute, (L. anas), and the drake, Euterich, ductor (rus) anatum; and from this, by dropping the first syllable En, we shall have Tereich, whence Treich, Eng. Drake. In Dan. And is Duck; and Andrike, Drake.

DRAM, s. A very small portion or quantity. See DRACHM.

DRAMA, s. "Dramaticall, or represent -T-IC. ative [poesy] is, as it were, a -ICAL. visible history; for it sets out the -ICALLY. image of things, as if they were -IST. present; and history, as if they were past."—Bacon.

L. Drama; Gr. δράμα, from Dor. ἀδρᾶ, i. e. agere, to act, wherefore also the parts or divisions of the drama are called acte.—Voss.

DRAPE, v. "Fr. Draper,—to make or -ER. work cloth; to dress or full cloth; -ERY. (Fr. Fouler, to tread,) to beat or -ING. thicken, as cloth in the fulling. -ET.* Of Draperie, Cot. says, also, "a flourishing with leaves and flowers in wood or stone, used esp. in the heads of pillars, and termed by our workmen drapery or cilery."

In Statuary or Painting, app. gen. to—The dress, the fall or flow of the dress.

**Spenser*.

Draper, Sk. says, from Fr. Drap-ier; It. -piere, pannil mercator, (Sp. Trapere; D. Drapieren) from Fr. Drap, pannus, (It. Drappo; Sp. Trope; Mid. L. Drappa, -us.—See Du Cange, and Spet. D. Drapiere, exercere lanificam,) either, Sk. adds, from the v. Draper, to polish or fine wool by the art of the fuller; or from Trampelen, to trample upon, tread upon; or from L. Trapietum. Trapietum itself is from trap-ere, to tread.

DRASTIC, ad. App. to medicines acting strongly upon the intestines.

Gr. δραστικος, able to act, efficacious.

DRAUGHT, s. v. Any thing drawn.

Upon this past p. the v. To draught has been formed; which is almost entirely restricted to men, or bodies of men, drawn off, with-drawn, from any place; or to horses, cattle, &c. It is not unusually pref., as draught-beast, &c.

The past p. of Draw-an, to draugh, (now written To draw.) Draughed, draugh'd, draught. See DRAFT. In-

DRAW, v. To draw, is opposed to,—To

-ER. push: to push, denotes a motion -EE. from; to draw, a motion to or -ING. towards. It is distinguished from, To lead: to draw, includes physical force; to lead, does not. See DRIVE.

To draw away from; to abstract; (met. to detract,) to abduce.

To draw to or towards; to attract, to induce, to allure, to entice.

To draw in, to inhale; to draw out, to exhale.

To draw out of; to extract, to educe, to exhaust.

To draw out; to protract; to produce; to deduce or derive, and also to prolong, to delay.

To draw, sc. a line or superficies,—to delineate, to describe, to sketch, to depicture, to portray.

To draw out, sc. in writing,—to write, to set or put down; to sketch, sc. certain thoughts or notions; to take them from books or writings; and thus, also, to describe or delineate; to compose.

To draw off or withdraw,—to retire, to retreat.

Drawing-room,—a room to which persons withdraw, or retire from another room or apartment.

A. S. Drag-an, (see DRAE, and DRAUGHT), to draw, pull or hale. L. Trah-ere. Be- Mis- Out- Un- Up- With-

DRAWL, v. s. To draw along slowly, tediously, idly; to draw out the words (to speak) in a slow, lingering tone.

Drawler, s. is in common usage in speech. Dim. of Draw, (or corruption of Druggie;) Ger. Draelen.

DRAV, s. App. to—A carriage with low, heavy wheels, dragged heavily along,—as a brewer's dray.

A. S. Drag-an, to draw, (qv.) Barrett has,—“A dray or sledge, which goeth without wheels.”

DRAZEL, or Drossell, s. A dirty slut.—Grose and Ray, South.

DREAD, v. ad. s. “Dread is a degree of —ER. permanent fear: an habitual —ING. and painful apprehension of —INGLY. some tremendous event.” —FUL. Cogan.

—FULLY. Dread-ful,—full of dread or —FULNESS. fear; fearful, timorous; also, —LESS. causing dread, awe, fear; fright- —LESSNESS. ful, terrible, awful.

Dread-less,—without dread, fear, or doubt. Out of drede, (Chaucer),—out of doubt. See DOUBT.

“A. S. Adread-an, timere, to fear, to be afraid; to dread or stand in fear of.”—Som. Ic hit eom, nellen ge eoth on-dradan. Y am-nyle ye drede.—Wiclif, Mark vi. A- Mis- Un-

DREAM, v. s. To think during sleep; —ER. to think as if asleep; vainly, —ING. lazily, drowsily, sluggishly. —INGLY. “Mickle. †Camden.

—FULL.” D. Droomen; Ger. Traumem; Sw. —LESS.† Drom-s; Dan. —mer; somnare, by metathesis from L. Dormire, to sleep.—Sk. Dre thinks from Celt. Drem, visio, qd. a nocturnal vision. The root may be the A. S. Rym-an, to roam. The A. S. equivalent term is “Swefen,—a vision in one's sleep.”—Som. Out- Un-

DREAR, ad. s. Mournful, sorrowful, sad, —Y. full of sorrow, sadness or grief; —ITY. melancholy, gloomy, dismal, —INESS. distressful.

—MENT.” †Spenser. †Chaucer. H. More.

—THEAD.† A. S. Dree-ri, —rig; moestus, dolens, tristis, ingubris; sad, sorrowful, pensive, dreery. Dreorigness,—sadness, pensiveness, sorrowfulness, dreeriness.—Som. Ger. Trauren; D. Trauren, moerere, dolere, tristari, to mourn, to grieve, to be sad or sorrowful. The root may be the A. S. Hroow-an, to rue.

DREDGE, v. s. To dredge or drudge, is—to scatter flour, sand, dust, &c.

Dredge (Mr. Grose says) is a mixture of oats and barley, now little sown. Used met. by Holland and Brende, for a mixture or medley. “Dredge of men (colluvies hominum).”—Brende. By the latter, perhaps, for Dreg.

DREDGE, v. s. —ER. To dredge, is—to drag.

A dredge, or dredge-net, is a drag or drag-net. D. Drega-net. See DARTON.

DREG, s. App. cons. to—The foulness, —GY. or filthiness, the muddiness “of —GISEH. any thing settled in the bottom,” from which the purer substance is drained. Any thing foul, sordid, low, base, mean, worthless.

Ger. Dreck and druse; D. Dreck and dreessem; Sw. Drugg; Eng. Drags, dross; A. S. Dresten; faeces, driggs, lees, grounds, or thick substance of any thing settled in the bottom. A. S. Dros, sordes, faex, filth, driggs, lees, drossa.—Som.—Wach. thinks from Go. Drusian, (A. S. Droo-an.) to fall, and app. to that which falls, sinks, or settles to the bottom. Perhaps from the A. S. Dryg-an, excutere. See DRAIN.

DRENCH, v. s. DREINT, pt. To merge or immerge, to soak or steep, to souse or plunge, to drown, or overwhelm.

A drench,—any thing drunken.

A. S. Drenc-an, adrencau; mergere, immergere, ingurgitare, to drown, plunge, or overwhelm, to drench.—Som. The root may be the Go. Rig-an, to rain. See DAUNK. Dreint,—drenched, drench'd, drenchi, drent or dreint. In- Un- Be- dreint.

DRESS, v. s. To set or put in order, to —ER. direct, to guide, to regulate, to rec- —ING. tify, to adjust; and further, to pre- pare, to provide, to furnish, to trim, to deck, to adorn; and also, to clothe: also, to prepare, sc. for food, to cook it.

In Chaucer, To dress, is to address or direct oneself, to apply.

Dresser,—that which dresses; and also, that on which any thing is dressed or prepared.

Fr. Dresser; It. Drizzare; L. Dirigere, to direct, to set right or in order. Ad- Over- Re- Un-

DRETCH, v. —ING. To prolong, to pro- tract, to delay, to linger, to weary; to be tedious or tiresome, wearisome or trouble- some; to trouble, to harass.

In Chaucer (Jun.) it is,—to prolong time, to linger, to delay. Sw. Droefa, cunctari, which Ithre derives from Drag-a, trah-ere, trahere moras, to draw or prolong time, (to dredge.) And see Dr. Jamieson, in v. Dretch.

DRIB, v. s. To drip or drop, (b for p;)

—BER. to do any thing by drips or drops;

—BLE, v. to do any thing by small degrees;

—LET. to give or take small portions; to —LING. do any thing, to act, in a trifling or inefficacious manner. See DRIP.

To dribble is the dim. Be-

DRIE, v. Drye, in Le Bone Florence,—wearisome. Gascoigne writes it Droy.

Sc. Dre. Lye says,—“Drie, drien, tolerare, pati, A. S. Dreop-an, idem notat,” i. e. to endure, to suffer. See Dree, in Jamieson, who considers Dreop-an to be radically the same with Drag-an, to draw, to drag along. And see DARTON.

DRIFT, v. s. To drift,—to move or cause to move along, like any thing driven, sc. by a stream, by a current of wind or water.

Drift, s. met.—any thing driven or aimed at, or intended; the aim, intention or purpose.

Past p. of Drif-an, adri-fan, to drive, (qv.): drived, driv'd drift, (Adrift, qv.)

DRILL, v. s. -ING. To bore, to penetrate, to pass through; also,—to turn about, drive round, as in the act of boring; and hence, (Wach.) Trillen, Eng. Drill,—to harass or weary; and hence, further, Trillmeister, Drill-master, who harasses or wears the soldiers by military exercise; and thus,—to bring or lead, to train, by constant practice or exercise.

Drill,—a name given to an ape or baboon; perhaps contracted from Drivel, (qv.)

Dan. Driller. "A. S. Thirl-an, perforare, tornare, terere, penetrare; to pierce or bore through, to drill. Belgis. Drillen, trillen: and hereof our Drill for a rivulet or watercourse; as piercing, penetrating through the ground for vent or passage."—Som. Hence also a drill, for receiving seed; and the now common word, Drill-husbandry.

DRINK, v. s. To draw in—at the mouth, -ABLE. and swallow, sc. any liquid; to -ER. draw in or imbibe, to absorb, to in-ING. hale, to receive or take in eagerly, -LESS.* like one thirsty; to receive or take in, sc. by the senses of hearing or seeing.

*Gower.

Go. Drigkan; A. S. Drink-an, drenkan; D. Drincken; Ger. Trincken; Sw. Dricka, potare, bibere; Dan. Drick-ker. See DAVNA and DREXCH. For-Out.

DRIP, v. To fall or descend in very small -ING. portions or particles; to come in -PLE,* ad. very small quantities.—**Fairefax*.

A. S. Drip-an, droppan; D. Druipen; Ger. Triefen; Sw. Dryps; Dan. Drypper; to drop, to distil. See DRAIS and DAOR.

DRIVE, v. s. To drive or force, into -ER. motion, into action; to force to pro-ING. ceed or move along; it is distin-

DROVE, guished from Drag thus:—

-ER. Any thing driven (the drove) is followed by the driver or drover, and does not imply contact: any thing dragged follows that which drags, and does imply contact; and there is the same distinction (with respect to place) between Pull and Push. And see DRAW.

To drive or force, to urge or hurry along.

To drive or aim at, to intend or purpose.

To drive or force, to compel; to drive to or towards, to impel; to drive out, to expel; to drive back, to repel; to drive forward, to propel.

Drive, s. is common in speech, as—to take a drive in the drive of Hyde Park.

A. S. Drif-an, a-drif-an, be-drif-an; D. Dryven; Ger. Treiben; Sw. Drifva; Dan. Driver. "A-drif-an, repellere, expellere, ejicere, abigere, fugare, to drive away, repel, expell, cast out. Be-drif-an, adigere, cogere, impellere, to compel, to constrain or enforce one to do a thing, to drive or thrust in or upon."—Som. See DAIYR. Chaucer, in Rom. of the Rose, writes Drife, and Wiet and others form the past tense, Drof. For-Out-Un-

DRIVEL, v. s. To drive out, sc. the -LER. saliva or slaver; as infants, drille, -LING. idiots do; to slaver; and thus—

Drivel, or Driveller, (Droil, or Drill, qv.) is a slaverer; and cona.—an idiot, a dotard. Sk.—Drivel, saliva, from Ger. Triefen, tropfen, stillare, to drop. A. drivell or drille, (one who is driven about any where,) Jun. derives from the D. Drivel, which Killan interprets, "mediatins servus." Ang. Drivell. Sk. thinks the D. Drivel, is from the v. Drevelen, itare, frequenter itare, qd. one who is constantly running (i.e. driven) about; and this evidently from the D. Drivelen, to drive. Drivel, saliva, is itself, (there can scarcely be a doubt,) the dim. of Drive, and means exulsus, driven out, as saliva from the mouth.

DRIZZLE, v. To fall in very small drips -ING. or drops; to shed, to rain very small -Y. drops.

Dim. from Go. Driusan; A. S. Dreose-an, to fall. (See DROSS.) Ger. Reisen, to fall. Rieseln, guttatim cadere, to fall in drops.

DROIL, *s.* v.†* See DRIVEL, supra; and Droile in Jamieson.

*Spenser. Beau. & F. †Milton.

DROLL, v. s. ad. To roll or tumble about; -ERT. to play tumbler's tricks, to make -ING. ridiculous gestures, play merry -INGLY. antics, to joke, to jest, to trick. -ISH. Shows, called Drolleries, were in -ER.* Shak.'s time, performed by puppets. -IST.* From these, our modern Drolls, exhibited at fairs, &c., took their name.—Steevens. And see DRAKE, (vol. i. p. 252.)

A droll-house,—a house for the exhibition of drolls.—**Glanville*.

Fr. Drole or Draulte. "Droler, to play the wag, to pass away the time as a good fellow, merrily or carelessly."—Col. Killan and some other etymologists refer to some northern demon, so called. The D. Drollen, volvere; Ger. & Eng. Troll, to turn, roll or tumble about, seems a more simple and satisfactory etym.

DROMEDARY, s. An animal, so called from its swiftness.

Fr. Droméd-aire; It. & Sp. -ario; L. Dromedarius; Gr. δρομας καμηλος, dromus camelus, dromedary camel. δρομας, from δροειν, to run.

DRONE, v. s. An insect: the v. formed -ING. upon the s. To do as the drone does, -ISH. —to live upon the labours of others, sluggishly, lazily; to make the humming noise of the drone.

Sk. thinks contracted from Drocon, past p. of the v. To drive. Tooke, from A. S. Dryg-an, excutere, expellere, to shake off, to drive away: "Droon, excussus, expulsus (subaud. bee)" is written in the A. S. Draun, drane, dran. Drogon, (y into a,) dragen, drag'a, dran, (the a broad) pronounced by us in the South.—Droon.

DROOP, v. To fall, to sink, to descend, -ER. to depress; and met.—to faint, to -ING. be or become feeble or languid, to -INGLY. languish.

Sk. thinks from D. Droef, sad; and that from Ger. Traub, trauben, itself from the L. Furtivo; but evidently no other than Droop, (qv.) somewhat diff. written and app. Un-

DROP, s. a. A drop,—a particle dripped.
-VER. To drop,—to fall or cause to fall in -FIG. drops; to still or distil; and gen.—
-LEV. to fall or cause to fall, to descend; to let fall, to let go, to dismiss; to quit the hold of; to quit.

In Milton,—"Dropped with gold;" as if gold had fallen in distinct drips or drops;
and thus,—spotted or speckled.

Drop-meal, i. e. driblet; (Drop, and A. S. mal, part or portion.)

See DALF. A. S. Dropan; Ger. Triefen; D.
Droppen or drop-en, stillare; Dan. Drypper. Be-

DROPSY, s. Also called Hydropsy, (qv.)

-HEB. Fr. Hydrop-sie; It. sia; Sp. -esia; L.
-ICAL. Hydrops; Gr. ὕδρωψ, (ab aquoso aspectu,) from hupo, water, and opsis, the aspect.—Foss.)

DROSS, s. That which falls, sinks, pre--Y. cipitates, or is cast down; which -DRESS. falls or separates the gross sediment, sc. from purer substances; met.— any foul or worthless refuse; foulness, impurity.

A. S. Dross; sordes, fæx, filth, dregs, lees, dross.
-Som. The past p. of Go. Drino-en; A. S. Dreacen, dejacere, precipitare, to cast down, to precipitate.—Tooke. Un-

DROSSELL. See DRAZEL.

DROUGHT, s. DROUGHTY. That which drieth or parcheth; dryness; thirst.

A. S. Dryg-oth. It was formerly written,— Dryeth, dryth, and drieth. (See DAY.) Drought is that which drieth; the third pers. sing. of Dryg-en, dryg-an, arecare.—Tooke. Wallis says,
Dry, diccus; Drowth, droughth, dryth, siccitas.
It is improperly written Drough.

DROVY, ad. Perhaps,—Draffy, sc. water.
Drovy, in Chaucer, says Lye, is—filthy, muddy.
A. S. Drof, drof, from Drief-an, to disturb.

DROWN, v. To sink, plunge or depress;
-ER. to merge, to immerge; to overflow,
-ING. to deluge, to overwhelm; and more
gen.—to overpower.

Emph. To drown, is—to sink or remain sunk under water till dead. Met.—

To sink or remain sunk, immersed, plunged, overwhelmed, sc. in any pursuit or occupation.

Dan. Drunger; A. S. Drencian; druncian, mergare. See DRENCH. Over-

DROWSE, v. To nod in slumber; to -Y. slumber, to lull to slumber, to
-RY. yield or give way to sleepiness,
-DRESS. to heavy slumber; to be or cause
-HEAD. to be sluggish, heavy, lazy, dull, lethargic.—Spenser.

D. Droosen, dormitare; perhaps from the Go.
Dreacen; A. S. Drowsen, to fall, to drop or droop, sc. the head. Thus, in the description of Mor-pheus:—

"He rais'd his tardy head, which sank again,
And sinking, on his bosom, knocked his chin."

DRUB, v. s. -BING. To beat, to give a good beating or flogging; to give or inflict blows.

Sw. Drubba, ferire, confligere, to beat, to strike or dash against. Ger. Treff-en, which Wach. thinks may be from the A. S. Torf-tan, to throw, sc. feriendi causa, for the sake or purpose of striking.

DRUDGE, v. s. Baret says, "A drudge
-ERY. or drivell; a servaunt that serveth
-ING. in vile offices or things, a kitchen
-INGLY. slave."

The v. formed upon the s.;—To do as a drudge (or labourer) does; to labour hardly, to work laboriously in mean or servile offices; to suffer or undergo or endure continued labour or employment, constant weariness or fatigue.

Drudge, (droog, druge), the past tense and past
p. of Dreogan, ge-dreog-an, agere, tolerare, pati, sufferre, (Tooke), to act, to labour, to be patient, to suffer or undergo. En-

DRUERIE, s. Mr. Tyrw. interprets it, —"courtship, gallantry." Ritson adds, illicit love.—"Chaucer. Gower.

"Fr. Druerie, that is to say, amitté."—Men.
With the Italians, says Du Cange, Druderia is—jocus amatorius. The Low L. Drudaria, amicitia.
Drudt, amici; from the Ger. Treue, fides; D.
Drut, drugt, fideles.

DRUG, v. s. A name common to all
-GER. Europe, and which means dryed,
-GIST. (subaud. herbs, roots, plants, &c.)
-STER. When we say any thing is a mere drug, we mean dryed up; that is, worthless.—Tooke. To drug, the v. is formed upon the s.—

To give or supply drugs; any thing having qualities or producing effects similar to those of drugs. Chaucer once writes
Dragg.

Fr. Dro-gue; It. & Sp. -ga; D. Droog-herrie,

DRUID, s. A British or Gallic priest:
-ICAL. by whom the oak, and mis-
-ISM. selto growing upon, were held DRUITSH. sacred, and who performed religious rites in groves of oak.—"Hollinshed.

Lye and others think it is the British Deruidhon, qd. persapientes, very wise men; Wach.—(who states copiously the various etyms. that have been proposed) from British Drove, an oak, and udd, a lord or master; Sk.—that the Druids were not so called by themselves, but that the name was given to them by the Gr. settlers at Marseilles, propter quercuum cultum, from the Gr. Apur, an oak.
Pliny tells us they were so called, because they performed their ceremonies in groves of oak only, and used the boughs and leaves of that tree, (b 16,
c. 44.) See the word Dry in Som.; and Selden's illustrations of Drayton, song 9. Du Cange (in v.
Arbor), remarks, that long after the introduction of the Christian religion, the worship of trees and groves so flourished in Africa, Germany, Italy, Gaul, and other provinces, that it cost kings and popes much trouble to root it out.

DRUM, v. s. An instrument of music, so
-MER. called from its noise.

-MING. To beat a drum,—to have or

-BLE, v. cause the action or sound of a

-BLER. drum; the rattling, cheering

DROUMY. noise of the quick beat, the dub a dub, as Gascoigne calls it, of "the spirit-stirring drum," (Shak.); then a base hum:
and hence, To drum is also—to emit a humming, droning, sullen, murmuring sound or noise. See TRUMPET.

A part of the ear, so called from its conformation. "It [the tympanum of the ear] bears an obvious resemblance to the pelt or head of a drum, from which it takes its name."—Paley.

An assembly of people,—from their noisiness.

Drumlike appears to be merely the dim; and in Shak. to be app. not to a droning noise, but to a droning, loitering action; in Sc. Drumby is droning, dull, sullen, lowering, gloomy; and thus also dark, thick, and muddy; and so Bacon uses Droumy.

Drum-wine,—in Massinger, Mr. Gifford says, may be such bad wine as is disposed of by sutlers at the drum-head; or such as was found at auctions or outcries, to which people at that time were summoned by beat of drum; unless, indeed, (which he considers to be more probable,) Dodale's reading, "stum wine," be correct. Is it not droumy wine?

A. S. Drem-an, drym-an, jubilate, to make a joyful noise. D. & Ger. Trommelen, pulsare tympanum; Ger. Trommen, sonare, susurrare.

DRY, v. ad. Dry is opposed, lit. to wet;
-ER. as water; any moisture; as juice,
-ING. sap. Cons. To be dry is—to be
-LY. thirsty; also, to be barren, un-
-NESS. fruitful, unproductive. Met.
DRYTH* barren, unfruitful; as a dry style, i. e. barren of ornament, destitute of feeling; cons. harsh, rigid, severe, unfeeling. To dry is—

To shake off, drive or drain off; to wipe off, or by any means free from, moisture; to parch, to scorch, to wither.

To draw dry-foot is when the dog pursues the game by the scent of the foot, for which the bloodhound is famed. See Commentators on Shak's Comedy of Errors, and Gifford's B. Jonson, i. 52.

DUB, v. To dubb is, cons.—to confer a new name or title: as, to dub him knight, traitor, quack, &c.

"And dubbade his sunn Henrie to ridere there." And dubbed his son Henry a knight there.—See Chron. an. 1086. Jun.—from A. S. Dypp-an, to dip, baptizare, to confer a new name as if by baptism. Hickes thinks A. S. Dubb-an, creare equitem, to create a knight, (Gram. A. S. p. 151.) is borrowed from the Isl. Dubba, (gen.) to strike;—but Thre says, that he has nowhere found that word used, unless specially,—gladio nudato equitem creandum perstringere; and agrees in opinion with those who think it sprung from Low L. Adelare, which, with Du Cange, he takes from L. Adoptare: giving as his reason, that the ceremony of adoption was performed by a stroke or blow of a sword; that the rank of knight was afterwards conferred by a similar ceremony; and that the individual himself was called  miles adoptivus. The editor of Men. accords with Hickes, and adds in confirmation, that old Fr. Dauber vel Deber signifies, percutere, to strike, (to dab.) Hickes remarks, that, before the introduction by the Normans of creating knights by dubbing (per dubitationem), the ceremony was by consecration; sc. by absolution after confession, by vigils, by masses, &c. DUCK, v. s. To dip, dive or sink; to -ER. drop, to plunge, to immerse.

-ING. App. by our older writers to the -LING. cringing or bowing of hypocrites or sycophants.

To make ducks and drakes upon the water, is—to throw any thing so as to imitate the motion of those birds upon the water. To play at duck and drake with money, is to throw it away as boys (for such purpose) throw stones or other things upon the water; to squander it, spend it wastefully, uselessly.

Cons. Ductile is— -URE.† Easy to be drawn; easy to be turned or bent; tractable, flexible, pliable; easy to be induced, complying, yielding.

DUDDER, s. To dodder, (qv.); to tremble, to totter.

DUDGEON, s. ad. -DAGGER. App. cons. to—Stubbornness, sullenness, quarrelsomeness; offence, ill-will.

Sk. says, from Ger. Dolch, pugio, qd. Dolchin or Dolkin; or from Ger. Deegen, dregen, gladius, a sword. Jun.—Dudgeon haft, manubrium apistum, "which means a handle of wood with a grain rough, as if seeds of parsley were strown over it."—Stevens. Wilkins (noticed by Mr. Nares) says, "Dudgeon,—indignation; root of box. Dudgeon-dagger,—short sword, whose handle is of the root of box." Gascoigne, in his General Advertisement, "The most knottie peece of box may be wrought into a faire Judgen hefte." Dudgeon is app. to the haft or handle of a dagger or knife, to distinguish it from those which might have more costly hafts or handles; and thus Gifford thinks it became a term of contempt, and, from a simple characteristic of poverty, to be frequently employed in denoting the meaner passions. Dudgeon, lit. he interprets, wooden. "I am plain and dudgeon," in Beau & F.—coarse, rude. "A chapper dudgeon," in B. Jonson,—one who claps his wooden dish at the door for broken meat, &c. (See Gifford's B. Jonson, vol. v. p. 96; Nares's Gloss.; and the Variorum Shak. (1831) Macbeth, Act II. sc. 1, Note 5.) Gifford is undoubtedly right with respect to the cons. wooden of the word; but that R neither means wooden nor root of the box, is plain from Holland:—"The wood of the box-tree is in as great request as the very best: seldom hath it any graine crisped damask wise, and never but about the root, the which is dudgin and full of worke."—Plinie. The word may be app. as an epithet to the box or any other wood, to express some particular quality, and it is not improbable that such quality is strength. D. Dugers; A. S. Dug-an, to be strong, (whence our Doughty, which is also now used, as Dudgeon is, contemptuously.) and thus what Gascoigne calls "the most knottie peece of box" might with propriety be named Dudgeon.

DUE, s. ad. Due, s. (as Debt.) is—Any -LY. thing had or held of or from -FUL. another; his property or right -NEAR. of property; that which is -T-Y. owed, which any one ought to -BOUS. have; has a right to demand, -LOUSNESS. claim or possess; which any -FUL. one deserves, or has earned by -FUL-LY. service.

NEAR. Due, ad. is equivalent to Owed or owing; and, as the Fr. is, cons., "just, fit, right, apt, seasonable, convenient."—Cat. Also appropriate, direct.

A payment is due, when it ought to be made. To sail due west; i. e. directly, exactly, so.

Duty and right are reciprocal; if one has the right to command, it is the duty of another to obey.

DULL, v. ad. To thicken; to blunt, so.

-ARD, s. ad. the edge of a knife or other

-ER. instrument; to thicken, blunt,

-Y. or deaden (met.) the faculties

-NESS. or powers of the mind; to

-SOME. deaden, to stupify; to diminish

the keenness, the lustre, weaken the power of; to damp, to sadden, to drowse, to lethargize.

Ger. Doll, from Dol-en, dwal-en, and that from A. S. Dwol-ian.—Wach. Tooke derives the Eng. Dull from the same A. S. v. which he renders hebere, hebetare. Lye and Somner, Errare. Sk. thinks, from A. S. Dol-ian, to bear, to sustain. See DOLT.

DUM, or DUMB, v. ad. Dumb is, by usage,—
-B-LY. having the organs, the powers of -NESS. speech obstructed; deprived, destitute of the powers of speech; speechless, mute.

Dan. & Sw. Dum; Ger. Dumb; Go. Dumba, or dumba, mutus; A. S. Adumb-ian, obmutescere, to hold one's peace, to keep silence, to become mute or dumb.—Som. Tooke thinks, from A. S. Dam-an, demman, (Ger. Demmen, demmen.) ob-turrare, obturrere, to dam; and that dumb means—obturratum, obstructum, dammed; and therefore when those who have been dumb recover their speech, their mouths are said to be opened; the dam being, as it were, removed. Shak. (Antony and Cleopatra,) he thus explains,—“What I would have spoke was in a beastly manner obstructed by him.”—Tooke, li. 335. He remarks that To bar, To bin, and To dam, were orig. general terms, having all one common meaning, viz. obstruction; distinguished in their application by custom alone. In Kilian, Dam is interpreted surdeus, i. e. deaf. Dam can blind; auribus et oculis captus. The Gr. Τυφλος, is a word of the same kind. In Scophocles, (Œdipus Tyrannus, v. 371.) Τυφλος τα ὄφθαλμοι, τον τε νοον, τα ὄφθαλμοι ei: Thy ears, thy soul, e'en as thy eyes, are blind.—Potter. And see DIM.

DUMP, s. Inertness, dulness, heaviness;
-ISH. dulness of spirits, sadness, me--ISHNESS. lancholy, ill-humour, sullenness;
-LING. dulness or inactivity of mind.
-ED.* App. also, first,—to a doleful tune or ditty, and then,—to any tune or ditty.
It is also,—the leaden dump with which boys play.

Dumpling is perhaps the dim. of Dump.
A sad dumpling,—a sad, heavy pudding.
Dumpy, (sullen: Brockett's Gloss.) is app. to any thing short and thick.

Massinger. Dump-ishly.—Bp. Hall.

Sk. thinks from Dumb, (supra.) It is (he says) a fixed and serious state of thought, in which we stand silent, (i. e. with our faculties dammed, blocked up, or obstructed,) and do as it were remain dumb. Jun. interprets Dumphianness, stupor, torpor. Un-

DUN, v. s. To Dun is,—importunately to -N-ER. demand a debt; to persevere or
-ING. persist in demanding, to make repeated demands; to reiterate, to beat in.

I believe, (Sk.) from A. S. Dynan, sonare, stre-pere; qd. to make a noise in the ears of a debtor.
And Tooke,—A dun; who has dinned another for money or any thing. See DIN, and also DUNE.

DUN, v. s. ad. To obscure, to darken; to

-PLY. Dun,—color fuscus, a tawny colour. Ste-

DUNCE, s. It is clear that the word (as -MAN. severally conjectured by Tooke
-ERY. and Todd) was first introduced by
-IFY, v. the Thomists, or disciples of Thomas Aquinas, in contempt towards their antagonists the Scotists, or disciples of John Scot of Duns. Dunce's disciples, Duncemen, Dunces. “The old barking curses Dunce's disciples, & lyke draffe called

And in Holinshed's Chronicles (The Description of Ireland, c. i.) it is said: “whose surpasseth others either in cavilling, so-phistry, or subtle philosophy, is forthwith (from Johannes Duns Scotus) nicknamed a duns.” And Dunce is now app. to—

A stupid, indocile, ignorant person.

DUNDER-HEAD, s. -WHELP. A stupid head or knoll; a stupid whelp, a stupid dog.
Perhaps from D. Dunder-en, tonare, to thunder,
qd. stupified, stupid with din or noise.

DUNE, v. See DOWN, and the quotation there made from Versteegan. R. of Glo- cester uses the v. Dune, which Hearne interprets bent, bowed; “The erthe dunode vnder him: for steppes that harde were.”
But it is more probably the A. S. Dyn-an,
to make a noise, to resound; “the earth resounded under the steps of the horses.”
See DUN.

DUNG, v. s. -Y. Dung,—that which is cast down; *app. to the food of animals, such food; also, to spread it upon land,

for improvement; to manure.

Ger. Tunghen, Dung-en; D. Dung-hen; Sw.
Dyng-a; A. S. -an, stercoreare. Tooke says that Dyng-an means decipere, to cast down, and that Dung or (as it was also written) Dong means de- jectum, and in that meaning only is app. to stercus. See TO DING. Be-middle of the castle, or fort, wherein the besieged make their last efforts (of defence) when the rest is forced.”—Cot. Prisoners being usually confined in these strong towers, the word dungeon was app. to other strong, close places of confinement or imprisonment.

Fr. Dongeon. In the modern Fr., says Wach.
Dunes (see DOWN) are hills of sand on the seashore; and Donjon, propugnaculum in colle edi-

E.

THE vowel E is framed by the emission of the breath betwixt the tongue and the concave of the palate, the upper superficies of the tongue being brought to some small degree of convexity. See EN.

EACH, pro. One distinguished in, segregated from, an aggregate; one reciprocated to another in the same aggregate.

A. S. Elc, alc; D. Eick, elick; Ger. Etlich, Jeglech; unusquisque, every one. In Som.: Eg-whar, everywhere; eg-whal, whatsoever; eg-waether, both the one and the other; eg-wider, on every side; eg-while, every, or every one. Wach. and others derive from the Gr. ἑακστός. See LIX, SUCH, WHICH.

May not Eck be the same word as Eks;—meaning add; and denoting every added, every additional one, of a multitude, every one in addition to—as a separate unit—added? The L. Qualis, Talis, are comps., and the first parts of them are respectively the Gr. Kai, and te; both signifying and or add.

Fr. Eg-lantier; D. -helentier; qd. arbor echinorum; because its branches are stiff, and with prickles and thorns like a hedge-hog (echinus); i. e. in D. Eg-het; A. S. Igit.—Jun. and St.

EGOISM, s. Egoism may be described, —
-IST. A frequent or constant thought
-TISM. of self; of the importance of
-TIST. self, in the sight both of God
-TIST-IC. and man; cons. an undue esti-
-ICAL. mate of self; of the merits or demerits of self; and their consequences.

"The gentlemen of Port Royal banished the way of speaking in the first person out of all their works, as rising from vainglory and self-conceit. To show their particular aversion to it, they branded this form of writing with the name of an egotism."—Spectator. "Hitherto he [Descartes] was uncertain of every thing but of his own existence, and the existence of the operations and ideas of his own mind. Some of his disciples, it is said, remained at this stage of his system, and got the name of egotists."—Reid.

EM-BELLISH,* v. (Also Im-) "Fr. Embellir,—to embellish, beautify, garnish. nish, adorn, be-deck, trim up, set out unto the eye."—Cot.

Fr. Embellir; It. Imbellire, ornare, decorare.

EMBERS,* s. "Ashes in appearance extinct, but betraying hidden fire, by the faint and decaying light of sparks glittering among them."—Jen. Used met. for—decaying heat, remaining warmth.

A.S. Embras; Dan. Emmer; D. Amer. (See AMBER.) Jen. observes, that the D. Ameringhen signifies—scintillarum stricture, and thus might be the same word as Hameringhen, i. e. to hammer or strike out, sc. sparks from hot iron. Sk. derives from old Go. Eld, fire, and ber-an, parere, to bring forth; qd. partus ignis, fire brought forth or produced. Wach. considers the D. Amer, amber, to be—aliquidustum, any thing burnt, from the v. Ambrere, ambreren or ambreren, incendere, to burn.

EMBER-EVES,* s. —WEEK. Certain fasts, in the Christian Church, returning at four seasons of the year.

Sk. thinks, from Ember, cineres,—ashes; because the ancients used to fast with ashes cast upon their heads, or sitting among the ashes. (See also Mias.) In A. S. Ymbren,—ymre, is "a circle, a circle, a circuit, circumference, or that which is a circular course ends where it began: a revolution. Gafrics ymbryne, the revolution of the year; Ymbren fasten, Ymbren wucan, Ymbren waga, i. e. Ember fast, Ember week, Ember days. As for the etym. of the word (Ember), it cometh not (Sam. adds) as is commonly received, from embers, or ashes, which were used only on (what book name from thence) Ash-Wednesday: but is compounded of Ymb, or Emb, circum, about, and ymre, or ymre, cursum, a course or running; and is app. to these fasts, because constantly observed at certain set seasons in the course or circuit of the year." See also Marschal, Observationes in Veronem Anglo. Sax. p. 528.

EM-BETTER,* v. To make, or cause to be, better, (qv.)—Daniel.

EM-BEZZLE,* v. (Also Im-) To purloin, with breach of trust; to convert (to private use) any thing entrusted. See PECULATE.

EM-BOLD,* v. —EN, v. To bold or embold, bolden or embolden,—is to confirm the courage, strengthen the resolution, to give additional courage, to encourage.—Chaucer.

EM-BOLIFE,* ad. "To know the assensions of the signs in the embolife circle in every region, I meane in circulo obliquo."—Chaucer.

Embolife circle, Speight (as Sk. observes) explains—the oblique circle; but he himself rather thinks it is from the Gr. Εμβολιμος, intercalaris, i. e. the intercalary circle, when a day is intercalated each fourth year. Speight, however, had Chaucer's own authority for his explanation.

EM-BOSOM,* v. (Also Im-) To receive within the bosom, within the heart, within the feelings or passions, the desires or affections of the heart; to store or treasure up, sc. as in the bosom; to fix or seat deeply; to shelter. Dis-

EM-BOSS,* v. "Fr. Emboister.—To im-box; to enclose, insert, fasten, put or shut up, as within a box."—*Cot. *Spenser.*

EM-BOSS,* v. To go or cause to go, to drive, to take shelter in the bushes, in a wood; to enclose, surround, or encircle in a wood.—Chaucer. Milton.

Fr. Emboquer; It. Imboscare; to embush, to plant or set wood, to enclose or surround with bushes, with wood, with a thicket of bushes or wood. Sk. says, as vox venatica, it is either spoken of the huntsman, and then signifies—to drive the deer into the wood; or of the deer, and then signifies—to hide in the wood. And Mr. Tyrw., "Sheltered in a wood." See EMBOSS, infra.

EM-BOSS, v. (Also Im- And see Boss,
-MENT, and last EMBOSS.) To rise or cause
-ING. to rise; to raise, to project, to swell forth; to cover with bosses, projections, swell-ings, or protuberances, (in basso, in bosse.)

According to the old writers on Hunting, a deer is said to be embossed, when it throws forth bosses, or round masses of foam from its mouth; or when it swells at the knees with hard hunting; and thus, To emboss is (cons.) to hunt hard, to hunt down, to overpower with fatigue or weariness, and (as in Spenser, "Embossed with bale," ) to overwhelm.

Fr. Embosser, bosse, tuber; an architectonic word, says Sk. It is spoken of sculpture slightly projecting, which, by the Italians, is called basso and mexxo relieve; and thus boss may be corrupted from basso, which is app. to—any thing relieved or raised but slightly, lowly; en bosse, distinguished from en relief; and thus app. gen.—to any thing rising, projecting, or swelling forth.
And see Bosses.

ball, or globe.—**Sir P. Sidney.*

EM-BRACE, v. s. (Also Im-) To take
-MENT. within, to hold within, the arms;
-ER. to comprise or comprehend, to in-
-ERY. fold, to encircle, to surround; to
-ING. hold, or take, or seize, hold of, sc.
-SURE. as with the arms; to hold fast, to constrain, to grasp; and more gen. to seize, take or accept.

Embrasure, in Fortification, adopted from the Fr., is an opening in a parapet, sc. to receive or hold—any thing inserted or introduced; a porthole.

Fr. Embracer; It. Abbracciare; Sp. Abrazar; from L. Brach-ium, the arm; the limb which breaks out from the trunk or body. Of the legal application of the word Embracery, Sk. says, qui alienam causam amplectitur, tutatur, et in se recipit. Realoft upon it in the manner of rain."—Cot.

Gr. Εμβροχ-ειν, (ev, and βροχ-ειν, to moisten.)

EM-BROIDER, v. (Or Im-) To braid
-ER. or embraud, is—to knit, to plait or
-Y. plight, to wreath, to interweave.

To broider or embroider, is—to surround with an edge or border, sc. of figured-work, of needle-work; gen. to adorn with needlework; met. to decorate with artificial ornaments, with delusive graces.

"As for embroiderie [acu facere] itself and needle-work, it was the Phrygians' invention; and hereupon embroiderers in Latine bee called Phrygiones."—Holland
Plinie.

To Braid, braid, or broid,—A. S. Breyd-an; D.
-en; and the comp. Em- or En- braid, or broid, appear to have been confounded with Broider and Embroider; Fr. Border or broder; Sp. Border; D.

E-MUSCATION,* s. L. Emuscare, to clear or cleanse from moss.—Evclyn.

EN, pref. The letters e and i have such nearness (as B. Jonson has observed) in our tongue, as oftentimes (in composition) to interchange places; as endure for indure, endite for indite. In our old writers, many words now written in, were by them written en; and some words both ways, without much discrimination.

We have (as prefixes) em or im, en or in, augmentative, and we have im or in (also un) negative; the latter are never written with e, and it might be a means of avoiding uncertainty and confusion if the augmentatives were always written with e. (See IN.) Skelton appears to have wanted in such compounds. In a very short space the following occur, of which (as they have not been met with elsewhere) the bare enumeration must suffice; viz. encraumpysh, (i. e. encramp), ensowk, enhack, enhard, encrisp, engalary, enlosenge, enpave, envault, enbulion, englasse, encrown, entacle, ensaand, enturf, engrape, engush, enswymm, ensilure, (ensilver), englister, enverdure, enbrethe, en-beauty, enbud, enpicture, enfore, enrive.

EN, term. As ew, with the Greeks, so (Wach.) an, on, en, with our ancestors is the term. of the infinitive. The A. S. An, D. & Ger. En, is the Eng. En; also anciently written an, in, on, un; and means one. As an ad. term. it denotes that the s. to which it is suffixed is to be united, or joined to another s.; as a golden (anciently goldus) sc. ring. Christian, ad.—sc. religion, to be united, to be expressed. A christian, s.—sc. man. En is yet also used to augment the force of ov, as To haste, to hasten; To black, to blacken. (See AN, also ED, IO.)

The A. S. An, Gr. Er, L. Un, with the article variously written, as, es, is, os, us, have formed the term. an-us, en-us, in-us, as in hum-an-us, terr-en-us, can-in-us. Gr. Γε-iv-os, earthen; Ξυλ-iv-os, wooden. From an-us, en-us, are by contraction the L. participial terms. ans, ens; and from these are our terms. ant, ance, ent, ence.

The 4to. B. Jonson reads Enginous; the folio, Inginous. Engine and Ingine, Mr. Gifford adds, are both used by our old poets for craft, artifice; and sometimes, in a better sense, for wit, that is, genius or the inventive faculty.

**Chaucer. Marlow. B. Jonson.*

ENGINE, v. s. Is app. to—Any machine, -ER, or tool, or instrument, ingeniously -ER. worked, wrought, or contrived, -ERY. whether of war, of torture, to -ERING. throw water, &c. And gen. a machine, tool, or instrument.

To engine, in Chaucer, is to put upon an engine of torture; and thus, to torture, to torment. In Gower, "engine together,"—contrived to get together.

See INGINE. Fr. Engin; It. Ingegno; Sp. Engeno; qd. ingento, because not made without great effort (ingenti) of genius, of ingenuity, of contrivance.

EN-GIRD, or -GIRT, v. -GIRDLE, v. (Also In-) To inclose, to surround, to encircle, to encompass, to inviron.

EN-GLAD, s. v. -DEN, v. To cheer, to enliven, to exhilarate.—**Shelton.*

ENGLE. See ANGLE, and INGLE.

EN-GLEyme, s. v. Lye says, for En-cleamed, i. e. clammed. See CLAM.

**Piers Ploughman.*

ENGLISH, v. s. ad. To English,—to render into, to translate into English, or the English language. Un-

EN-GLUE, s. v. "Fr. Engluer, gluer; to lime, to glew, to join or close very fast, as with bird-lime, or glew."—*Cot. *Gower.*

EN-GLUT, v. (Also In-) To swallow; to swallow in abundance; to fill by swallowing, to fill, to cram full. Fr. Engloutir, EN-GLUTING, v. Perhaps Engluing, (qv.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, rather Enluting, stopping with clay. Sk., Glued, stopped. Chaucer.

EN-GORE,* v. To penetrate, to pierce; to bore through.—Spenser.

EN-GORGE, v. (Also In-) "Fr. Engorger,—to raven, devour, glut, swill up, swallow down."—Cot.
Fr. Engorger; It. glare; L. Ingurgitare, from L. Gurgus.

Engrosser*.

EN-GUARD,* v. To watch, to protect, to keep, to preserve.—Shak. Feltham.

EN-GULF, v. (Also In-) To swallow up, or plunge, as into a gulf; to absorb.

Fr. Engolfer, gouffre; It. Ingolfare; Sp. Engolfer.

EN-HABIT,* v. (Now commonly In-) To dwell or abide, to reside, to remain or live.—Chaucer.

EN-HALSE,* v. To take round the neck. Mirror for Magistrates.

EN-HANCE, v. (Also In-) "Fr. Hausment. ser,—to hoise (i. e. hoist), raise, -ER. elevate, heave up, lift high, set aloft, advance."—Cot.

To heave, raise, or lift up; to elevate, to exalt, to advance, to augment, to increase. Perhaps from Fr. Hausser, which Wach. thinks, with Fr. Haust, and Ger. Hai, altus, haed, height, are the same words with A. S. Hæth, head; the height or top of a thing.

EN-HARBOUR,* v. To protect, to cover, to lodge, to dwell, to inhabit. W. Browne.

EN-HARMONIAN, s. -IC, s. ad. The Greeks distributed their music into three genera: the Diatonic, for tones and semitones; the Chromatic, for semitones and minor thirds; and the Enharmonic, for quarter tones and major thirds. Holland explains "Enharmonic,"—one of the three general sorts of music: song of many parts, or a curious concert of sundry tunes."

EPI-TOME, s. To epitomize, is—to cut off, to curtail; and thus, to abridge or abridge; to abstract.

It. Sp. & L. Epitome; Gr. Επιτομή, from επι-τεμνέειν, to cut off.

EPOCH, s. -A. Epochs, in Chronology, are certain periods of time, from which calculation commences, and at which it terminates and again commences; thus forming certain bounds or limits confining the calculation of time.

It. & Sp. Epoca; L. Epocha; Gr. Εποχή, a holding in or retention, from επ-εχειν, to hold in or retain.

EPODE, s. App. to—a shorter verse or line subjoined to a longer.

Fr. Épode; Sp. It. -o; L. Epodon; Gr. Επόδον, from επ-αείδειν, super-canere. Gesner says, "Quæ post στροφήν, et αντίστροφήν, ἐπώδον, dicebant;" and though usually thus app. to the third stanza of the Gr. ode, yet employed otherwise by the Latins. Of two verses or lines,—hic quidem pro-ædior dicitur, quod præcinator; ille vero ep-ædior, quod succinator.—See Marlin.

EPOPEE, s. Its general and etymological sense, (Twining,) is, That of imitating or making by words.

QUERY, or QUERRY, s. "Fr. Escuyrie, —the stable of a prince or nobleman; also, a query-ship, or the duties or offices belonging thereto; also, (in old authors,) a squire's place; or the dignity, title or estate of an esquire."—Cot.

Of Querry, Sk. says—from Fr. Escuyrie, securie, the stable of the prince; perhaps, because les escuyers, armigeri, had the care of the horses of the prince. T. H. derives ab equis, qd. equitis; he adds a third conjecture, (more specious than the others,) that it is so called à curando equos. The Low L. is Scura or securia, perhaps from Ger. Schäuren or schüren, tegere, to cover or protect. See Du Cange.

EQUESTRIAN, ad. Of or pertaining to a horse or horsemanship; riding on a horse, skilled in riding.

Equestrian is also app. to the rank of Equites in Rome.

From L. Æquus, a horse.

EQUI-ANGLED, ad. -GULAR. Having the angles equal.

Fr. Equiang-le; It. -olo; Sp. -ulo.

EQUI-CRURE, s. -AL. Having the legs equal, or of the same length.

L. Æquus, equal, and crus, the leg; it. Equicrura.

EQUI-DISTANT, ad. Standing apart -ANTLY. or asunder, separate or removed, -ANCE. in the same degree in space or time; in any relationship.

Fr. Equidistant; It. & Sp. -ante; from L. Æquus, equal, even, same, and distans, standing apart.

EQUI-FORMITY, s. Equality, evenness or sameness, in form or fashion, or manner; in degree.

L. Æquus, equal, and forma, the form, frons or fashion.

EQUI-LATERAL, ad. s. Having the sides equal, or of the same length.

Fr. Equilater-al; It. -e; Sp. -o; L. Æquus, equal, and latus, the side.

-BRIOUS.† Paley. †H. More. †D. Stewart.

-BRIST.‡ Fr. Equilibre; It. -re; L. Æquilibrium, of equal weight; (æquus, equal, and librare, to weigh.) Equilibrium is strictly a L. word. See CALIBRE.

EQUI-NECESSARY,* ad. Equally needful.—**Hudibras*.

L. Æquus, equal, and necessarius, needful.

EQUI-NOX, s. -NOCTIAL, ad. s. A period of the year so called, because then the night is equal to the day.

Equinoctial, s. is used as equivalent to equator, (qv.) -ally, to equatorially.

Fr. Equi-noxe; It. -nozie; Sp. -noctie; L. Æquinoctium, from æquus, equal, and nox, the night.

EQUIP, v. Fr. "Esquiper or équiper, -to -MENT. equip, arm, attire, store with, -AGE, v. s. provide of, necessary furniture; to prepare, make ready, set in array, enable, by full provision, for an action, service or exploit."—Cot. **Spenser*. Couper.

Fr. Esquiper, (and with the common omission of the s.) équiper; from Ger. Schiff, which signifies un navire, a ship.—Men. And this etym. is considered by Sk. himself not to be without probability, though he previously proposes L. Epippiare, i. e. equum epippiare instructre, to furnish a ship with trappings. The Low L. Eschippare, Du Cange calls, vox à re nautica desumpta. And Sk. affirms it to be manifestly derived from Equi-Skip; and that schippatus, is as much as to say, well provided and prepared (bene adarmatus et instructus) as ships of war should be. Sk. who died in 1667, (an. æt. 46), declares it to be a word introduced into Eng. in his time. But the word written Esquippe, is in Baret's Alphabet, 1573; and (in v. Instruere) in Cooper's Thesaurus, 1573. "To esquippe or furnish ships with all appurtenances." And see Fortepan, c. i., who treats the word as a useless novelty.

EQUIPENDENCY, s. Equilibration, equipoise.

L. Æquus, equal, and pendens, hanging.

EQUIPOISE, s. or Æquipoise.

Æqui weight; equality, evenness or sameness of weight; equilibration; balance.

EQUITEMPORANEOUS, ad. Of the same time; of the same duration, at the same moment, of time.

L. Æquus, and tempus, time.

EQUITY, s. Equity appears to mean, —ABLE. lit., likeness, sameness, evenness; —ALTY. and is app. to the administration or distribution of the laws, either of a particular state or community, or those of nature, alike to all; to—even-handed justice; and thus is said to level or smoothen or mitigate the asperity or rigour of strict law (the summum jus) which is guided by general rules, and not prepared for exceptions. "Equity, although it signifies all that reasonableness by which the burden of law is alleviated, yet here I mean it in the particular sense, that is, the easing of punishments, and the giving gentle sentences; not by remission of what is justly incurred, for that is clemency, but by declaring the delated person not to be involved in the curse of the law; or not so deeply; not to punish any man more than the law compels us; that's equity."—Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Equité; It. giù; Sp. dad; L. Æquitas, from æquus. See EQUAL, and EQUABLE. In—

ESS-ENCE, v. s. Essence, in its general -NTI-AL, s. ad. application, is equivalent to the Eng. word—Being, (see -ALITY. To BE); and it is also app. to certain supposed causes, qualities, or states of being.

"Essence may be taken for the very being of any thing,—whereby it is, what it is. And thus, the real, internal, but generally, in substances, unknown constitution of things, wherein their discoverable qualities depend, may be called their essence. This is the proper original signification of the word, as is evident from the formation of it; Essentia in its primary notation signifying properly—being."—Locke.

It is in popular language app. to—The smell, scent, odour, perfume;—the principal, constituent, concentrated qualities.

*Fr. s. Es-ence; It. -entia or -enna; Sp. -encia. Seneca apologues to Lucilius for using the L. Es-entia; though he refers to Cicero as his authority, and also to Fabianus. (Seneca equalis.) It is not found in any of Cicero's works extant; and Quintilian, as well as Seneca, speaks of it as a word wanted to relieve the poverty of the L. language. Martin suggests that it may have been adopted instead of Entia, tanquam magis sonoram vocem. May it not be a corruption, unnoticed, of Existencia, extantia, exentia, (see EXIST.) *essentia? Evanish, v.—to wane, to disappear, from the sensations or perceptions; to escape, to move, to get out of view.

L. Evanesco, p. p. of evanescere, to wane, to decrease, to fall away or decay. Fr. Evanide; L. Evandus. See To WANE.

EVANGEL, s. Esp. app. to—The history of the birth or nativity, the life, death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven, of Jesus Christ.—*Chaucer. Stirling. †Wicklif. Holinessed. †Porson.

-ISM. Fr. Evangelie; It. & Sp. gelo; L. Evangelium; Gr. Ευαγγελιον, (from eu, bene, and αγγελος, nunciare, to tell or announce,) the Gospel; in A. S. God-spell, (good, and spell, a speech, a story.) Un-

EVAPORATE, v. To emit a steam or smoke, an exhalation, a breath; to reek; to dissipate or disperse in steam or smoke; to vanish into air.

Fr. Evaporer; L. Evaporatio, (e, and evaporare, atum, to emit a steam, to reek.)

EUCHARIST, s. A giving of thanks; esp. app. to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, taken "with a thankful remembrance of his death."

Fr. Euchariste; It. caristia; Sp. & L. Eucharistia; Gr. Ευχαριστια, from ευχαριστην, to give thanks, (eu, bene, and χαρις, gratia.)

EUCHOLOGY, s. A Book of Prayer. *Bp. Taylor. Bp. Bull.

Gr. Ευχολογιον, (ευχη, prayer, and λογος, speech, discourse,) a little book, in which prayers are contained.

EUTICAL, ad. Precatory.—*Law.

Gr. Ευτικος, from ευχεσθαι, to pray.

EVE, s. The fall of the day. It is also app. to the watches or vigils.

EVENING, ad. s. the wakes kept or observed, in the evening preceding certain festivals.

A. S. Æfen; D. Avend; Ger. Abend, from Ger. Aben; D. Avon, deficere, (A. S. Ebb-an, to ebb.) Quid enim est vesper, nisi dies deficiens? the falling day, or fall of the day.—Wach. In D. Avenden; Ger. Abenden, vesperare. Benson and Lye seem to consider it to be the same word as æfen, even, (equals.)

EVEN, v. ad. av. To plane, to level, to bring to an equal or uniform surface, without asperities or roughness, without inclination or leaning; to equalize. Even, the ad. is used (met.) equal, impartial, calm, steady; also, opp. to odd.

An Eme-christian, (qr.) or Even-christian,—is a fellow-christian, an equal-christian.

Even, the ad. is,—equally. Even-so,—equally so, just so, exactly so, in a like or similar manner or degree. It is gen. used with a strong ellipsis, as in Cowley: "We must one even in that difference be," i. e. we must be one in that difference, even as, i. e. equally as, (subaud.) in other respects.

Go. Idn; A. S. Æfen; D. Æfen; Ger. Eben; D. Efenen, evenen; Ger. Ebenen; Dan. Jerner, to smoothen, to plane, to level. Un-

E-VENT,* v. To give vent, issue, or egress;
-IL-ATE, v. "to puff, blow, breathe, give or
-ATION. yield wind."—Cot.

Eventilate, v.—To give wind, or an opening to wind or air; to winnow, to sift; to discuss.—B. Jonson. Marlow & Chapman.

Fr. Evénier; L. Eventil-are, -atum, (e, and ventus, wind.)

E-VENT, v. s. That which has come out
-FUL. or forth; that has issued from—an
-UAL. issue; that has fallen or sprung
-UALLY. from—an accident or result; that has followed from—a consequence.

Fr. Evénement; It. -to; L. E-ven-ire, -tum, to come out or forth.

E-VENTERATE,* v. To take out the belly, the bowels or entrails; to debowel.
**Brown.*

Fr. Eventrer; from L. Venter, the belly.

EVER, av. By usage, equiv. to—At all or any time or times, whether a point of time or the duration or continuance of time. Also (gen.) any.

Ever is much used in composition.

"It is certain, that even amongst the Jews, the word everlasting did not always signify infinitely, but to a certain definite period."—Bp. Taylor. "The words for ever, and ever-lasting, do not always in Scripture signify an endless duration; but those words are often in Scripture used in a larger sense, and so necessarily to signify an interminable and endless duration."—Barrow. A. S. Efre, semper, (Af-ere.)

E-VERSE, v. To overturn, to overthrow.
-ION. Fr. Ever-ter, -sion; L. E-ver-tere, -versus, to turn out.

EVERY, pro. App. to each one, individually, of a multitude, of all.

Evidence, the s., is sometimes app. to the person who gives evidence, who bears witness or testimony. L. Evidens.

EVIL, s. ad. Evil may be, as Bala has
-LY. been, explained—Torture, writhing, wretchedness, misery, (wickedness;) that which causes (injury,) mischief, calamity, ruin, destruction.

A. S. "Ac alyse us of yfe,"—Wiclif; "But delyvere us from yvel."

Evil is much used prefixed.

Ger. Ubel; D. Euel; A. S. Efel, yfel; Go. Ubita. Various Gr. etyms. have been suggested for this word: all most unsatisfactory. Wach. thinks it possible that the Ger. Bal, cruciatus, may be the root of Ubel; and then the Go. Bait-ga, torque, to twist, to wring, (past p. wring.) will evidently be the origin of the Go. Ubita; supplying an etym. similar in the cause of the application of the word to that which Tooke has given for wring. We have still the Go. Bait-ga, subsisting in the Eng. word Bala, (qv.)

E-VINCE,* v. Lit. Evincere is,—To over--VINC-IBLE. power, to overthrow; and also,

EX-CISE, v. s. "The two houses at Westminster, who call themselves, and -MAN. they are often called in this discourse, the Parliament, had at this time by an ordinance, that is, by an order of both houses, laid an imposition, which they called an excise, upon wine, beer, ale, and many other commodities, to be paid in the manner very punctually and methodically set down by them, for the carrying on the war. This was the first time that ever the name of payment of excise was heard of, or practised in England; laid on by those who pretended to be the most jealous of any exaction upon the people." — Clarendon.

D. Accisio. Excise and Assize, says Sk., are perhaps from Accensus and Excensus, or from Assensus, (see Assize), because such a tax is imposed by the judgment and votes (assensus and concessus) of an assise, or sitting of men deputed for that purpose; or, he adds, as D. Tailor, ex, quid excisum, sc. from the property of those subjected to it. The latter etymon receives confirmation from the application of Sp. Sisa, viz. to the tax; and also to the lessening of any thing by subtracting some small part, or by cutting measures less.

*Glanville. Boyle.
L. Exsugere, ex-suctum, to suck out.

EX-SUFFLATION, **s.* -FLICATE. A blowing out; a blast:—app. to a species of exorcism.
*Bacon. Bp. Taylor. Puller.

The first folio of Shak. reads Exsufficate. Hamner substituted Exsufflate. Todd says it should be Exsufficate; and means contemptible.—See Shak. by Boswell. Exsufflate, it is true, is exp. by Du Cange (cons.) to signify contemnere, despuere, rejicere; arising from the custom in the Romish administration of baptism, of renouncing the devil and all his works, exsufflando et despuendo, by blowing and spitting him away. Hence also, the application of exsufflate, and exsufflate (common words among early Latin ecclesiastical writers,) to a species of exorcism.—See Du Cange and Spel. Exsufflation is used by Bacon in its ordinary sense. And Exsufficate, in Shak. is not improbably a misprint for Exsufflate, i.e. efflate or efflated, puffed out, and cons. exaggerated, extravagant,—to which blow'd is added, not so much for the sake of a second epithet, with a new meaning, as of giving emphasis to the first.

EX-SUPERANCE, **s.* (Corruptly, Ex-superance.) A passing over or beyond; an excess.—*Digby.

L. Ex-superare, to pass over or beyond.

EX-SUSCITATION, s. An awakening.

-TANCY. above; rising or remaining above; exposed to view; being or remaining.
See EXIST.

L. Ex-stant, p. p. of existere, to stand out.

EX-TASY, v. s. (Also, Ectasy.) The -TIC. removal of any thing from its
-TICAL. place; app. met. to the smother or emotion of the mind, the unsettling of the powers of the mind, (from whatever cause,) and cons. to the loss of the senses; to madness; to any excess of emotion or passion, of joy or grief, hope or fear, rapture, delight, enthusiasm.

It is now more com. restricted to excess of joy or delight.

To extasy, the v., is,—to enrapture, to transport.

Fr. Extase; It. Estasi; Sp. Extasi; Gr. Extasis, from ekistaōhai, to remove from its place.

EYAS, ad. s. Unfledged; immature, youthful.

Sk. says—from Fr. Niais, nien; It. Nidiace, nidace, i. e. accipiter nidarius; but adds, that though this appears very probable, yet his mind inclines to believe that Eng. Nyas, Fr. Niais, are of Ger. origin, viz. from our eyas or eyes-hawt; and this from Ger. Ey, an egg; meaning a hawk recently out of the egg. The first etym. has been
gen. adopted. (See NIAS.) Cot. says, "Niais,—a nestling, a young bird taken out of a nest," and Nien,—"a nyas-hawk." Casen.; "Oiserve nias,

F.

F, (B. Jonson says), is a letter of two forces with us; and in them both sound with the nether-lip rounded, and a kind of blowing out; but gentler in the one than the other.
The difference, he adds, will best be found in the word of, which as a pr. sounds ou—of him; as the av. of distance, off—far off.—
The English Grammar, c. 3. Wilkins considers F as the correspondent mute to V, framed by the same kind of position of the lips and teeth, and percolation of the breath betwixt them, with this only difference, that as the former (V) was with some kind of vocal sound, so this (F) is wholly mute, i. e. without any vocal sound. Wilkins also remarks, that F and V have the same power which is commonly ascribed to F and B, aspirated, or rather incassated, and that F is answerable to the Gr. φ.—On a Real Character, pt. iii. c. 12. B, F, P, V, are cognate letters, and there seems reason to suspect that in some instances F is a corruption from be-pe, or fe (pha); as flap, from be-lap-pe or ph-lap, phlap, or flap; flank, from be-lank-pe or ph-lank, phlank, flank. See FACT.

FABLE, v. s. Fable, in Eng. is app. only -ER, s. to—Any feigned thing; a fiction
-ING. or invention, told or narrated.
-BUL-IST. A feigned tale or story; and—
-OUS. To fable,—to tell, narrate or re-

FAG, v. s. To fag,—to act or do, to continue to act or do; to labour hard, to labour assiduously, to work or labour till wearied.
To be fagged,—to be over-laboured, to be wearied with labour. A fag,—a hard worker, a laborious drudge.

By Act of Parliament (4 Edw. IV.) cloths are required to be perfected according to one order of workmanship, without difference in the weaving, &c. And in case (it is added) any such difference, or raw or skaw cogle, or fagge, happen to be in any part of the said clothes, &c., then a seal of lead shall be set, &c. for perfect knowledge to be had to the buyer thereof.—See Rastall, fol. 123. Thus, Fag appears to have been app. to—

The inferior material or workmanship joined or fitted to the superior. And then, gen. to—

Any coarser or inferior material or workmanship; any thing coarser or inferior.

Fag, the v. and s. though common in speech, (esp. at our public schools,) are not so in writing.

Fag-end,—the end finished or worked off with inferior materials or workmanship, or both; and thus (lit. and met.) the part or portion less valued or esteemed; of less value or estimation, consideration or consequence.

A. S. Fegan, ge-segan, to order rightly, to labour or strive to make things fit or suit, or answer their purposes. See FADGE, and also FACT.

FAGOT, v. s. A bundle of sticks.

To fagot,—to bind or tie up in fagots or bundles; also, to burn with fagots.

Fr. Fagotier, -ot; It. -otto. Sk. from L. Fascia, sc. ligni; Men. from φασκαλος, i. e. φαστιον ἐλκων; Casen. from L. Fagus, a beech tree; fagots (he imagines) being first made of that wood. The It. Faggetto is a plantation of beech trees. Perhaps from A. S. Feg-an. (See FADGE, and FAG.) It is app. like L. Fascia.

FAIL, v. s. To fall away, to give or yield

-ING. way, to fall into decay, to decay.

-URE. to de cease, to perish; to wane, to

-ANCE.* be wanting or deficient; to miss, to err.

To deceive, to disappoint; and thus, to desert, to forsake, to quit, relinquish, or abandon.—**Fell*.

Fr. Faillir; It. Ure; Sp. lar; D. Faalen; Dan. Fæller; from L. Fallere, which Voss. thinks is from φαλ-ειν, Dorice προ φηλ-ειν, decipere. The root is probably A. S. Fæll-an, to fall. Un-

FAIN, v.* ad.† av.† -NESS. The av. Gladly, willingly, joyfully.

A. S. Fagnian, gaudere, letari, to be glad, to rejoice, to fain.—Som. Un-

FAIN, i. e. Feign. (qv.)

FAINT, v. ad. To decay, to pass away,

-ING. to wane, to deprive of all

-ISH. strength or power; to waste

-ISHNESS. away, to be or become weak or

-LY. feeble, to be or cause to be

-NESS. enfeebled, to sink, deject, or

-Y. depress.

-LESS.* **Stirling*. †Arbutnot.

-LING,† ad. Past p. Fained, fan'd, fani; or fenad, fend, fent, of A. S. v. Fynig-ean, to corrupt, to decay, to wither, to fade, to pass away, to spoil in any manner.—Tooke. Un-

FAIR, ad. av. s. v. Free from speck, spot, -LY. or blemish; spotless, pure; and -NESS. thus, pleasing, pleasing to the sight, beautiful; and (met.) candid, equitable, impartial, just, honourable; also pleasing, gratifying, favourable, conferring success; gentle, peaceful.

A. S. Fæg-er, from fæg-en, Sk. (see FAVE), gandium, joy or gladness, qd. aspectu juvundus; for all things fair or beautiful, gandium exultat. In Go. Fairgas is—mundus. See Jas. Go. Gloss.

FAIR, s. -ING. A place to which things, sc. goods, wares, and merchandises, are brought (feruntur) for sale.

Fr. Faire; It. Fiera; Sp. Feria, from L. Feria, or rather, says Sk. from Forum. Quo conferretur suas controversas, et quæ vendere vellet, et quæ queque ferrent, Forum appellabunt.—Varro. de L. lib. iv.

FAIRY, s. ad. A fay, or fairy, may have been so named from their (fairness, according to some etymologists, or rather) fabled power to say, to tell, to fore say, to foretell, to sooth say, to fore speak; and further, to influence the fate, to fore doom; to bewitch, to enchant.

Sk. derives from A. S. Faran, to go, to travel, and Ruddiman (Gloss. to G. Douglas) thinks they received their name either q. fair folk, puella homines, or q. faring folk, homines vagantes et peregrinantes. The first supposition receives confirmation, as Dr. Jamieson thinks, from the circumstance, that another class of genii have been called Brownies, most probably from their supposed swarthy appearance. In D. Færende vrowe, ærende wif, is rendered by Kilian, Dryas, hæmædryas; and also, incantatrix, vanities; volatilis muller; and this, Dr. Jamieson observes, seems to countenance the opinion of Sk.—See Jamieson in v. Fare-folk. But they are likewise called Fays; in Fr. Fie, which also signifies "Fate," appointed, destined; taken, bewitched, or soo spoken; charmed, "enchanted." "Færie, en færie," fatally, by destiny, by appointment of the Færies."—Cot. Færie, ensorcelé, enchanté.—Lacomb & Roquefort. Fæer, enchanter, ensorcelé.—Roquefort. Fr. Fie, and It. Fata, from L. Fata. Parca.—See Men. in vv. Fie and Fata, Dict. Etymol.; and Origini della Lingua Italiana. In Old Eng. writers, witches are supposed to possess the power of fore-speaking or fore-dooming; and hence, To fore-speak, is considered to be equivalent to—To bewitch, to enchant.

FAISIBLE,* i. e. Feasible, that may be done.—**Bp. Hall*.

Sk. says, it seems to be from It. Fede, (cum crassiori accentu et spiritu.) Tooke, that it is A. S. Fæð, that which one covenanteth or engageth; the third per. sing. of indie. of Fægan, (which is also written Fægan, see FAC), pangere, pag-ew, to engage, to covenant, to contract. It was, as he observes, anciently written Fæth. It was also variously written Feyth, Feth, Fayeth; and also Feg, (qv.)

FALCHION, or FAUCHION, s. An arched -CAT-ER or crescent-shaped cutter; a -ION.† scimitar.—Derham. †Brown. Fr. Fauchion, ensis falcatus, (Jun. & Sk.) from L. Falis, a cutter.

FALCON, or FAUCON, s. A bird. Also -ER, a name given to a piece of artillery, -RY, which, according to Meyrick, (iii. 70,) in the time of Queen Elizabeth carried a ball of one pound and a half, and measured two inches in the bore; and thus, within falcon-shot,—within the reach of shot from a falcon.

Fr. Falcon, faucon; It. Falcone; Sp. Falcon; L. Falco; the bird, à falco, quia ungues ejus falcem imitantur, (Voss.) because its nails or claws resemble a hook: Sk. its nails and beak.

FALDING, s. FALDSTOOL. A kind of woollen cloth.—Sk. **Chaucer.*

Perhaps from the A. S. Fæld, a fold, from Fæltan, to fold. It. Faldito-ro; "Fr. Faldito,—a low, large, and easie foulding chair, having both a back and elbows."—Cot. Sk. has, Falditer, which he derives from Falde, septum, and alio, locus. It is probably no more than a folding-stool.—See De Cange in v. Faldistorium.

FALL, s. s. To be or cause to be laying -ER, or lying; to lay or lie, or cause to -ER, lay or lie.

To move from an upright to a flat or prostrate position; from an elevated or raised, to a low, dejected, or depressed, station or condition; to drop, to sink, to lower; to descend, to depress, to deject; to drop, droop or decay; to chance, Fr. Choir; L. Cadere, to happen or come to pass, (as by the motion or action of falling;) and gen.—to happen or come to pass.

Fall, with prs. subjoined, has various met. and cons. usages; the force or import of which must be collected from the context:—

To fall away,—he, (i. e. his fleshiness,) has fallen away; he is thinner.

They have fallen away, or fallen off,—i. e. moved off or away, ceased to accompany, quitted the ranks or party; and thus,—to swell, to apostatize.

To fall in or into,—to coincide, to concur, to condescend.

To fall on or upon,—to rush upon, to attack, to assault.

To fall off or out,—to separate from, to move, to sunder, to disagree, to quarrel.

Feller, s. Jer. xli. 6. in the margin. D. Fellen; Ger. Fel-len; Sw. -la; Dan. Fald-er; A. S. Fæll-an, cadere, decidere, ruer. Fell is properly app. to a change of place, when a body moves by its own weight from a higher to a lower place. It is used as equivalent to the L. ex Cadere and Ruere; and, by consequence, denotes,—cadere, quickness, destruction. See DUEL. De. Mis-Over-Us-

FALLACY, s. A deception or deceit, a

-ACIOUS. delusion; a guile; a mistake;

FALLOW, v. ad. s. -NESS. Anciently, Fallax. Yellow, yellowish. Fallow-field,—so called (Lye) ob colorem, on account of the colour which land newly tilled or turned presents.

To lie fallow,—to be prepared for seed or plant: not yet sown or planted; unsown, unplanted; and by further consequence,—uncultivated, neglected.

A. S. Fælcwe,—fævus, yellow, yellowish;—Fælcwe, helvus, gilvus.—Som. D. Fælcwe, causæ; Ger. Fal, which Wach. renders pallidus; and says, it is spoken of the paleness of all colours, esp. tawny, yellow, and black, as the L. Helvus and gilvus. It. Falco; "Fr. Fauve,—deep-yellow, lyon-tawny, light dun."—Cot. "That false traitour was like that falvous horse of hewe. . . . His hewe falvous."—Chaucer. Un-

Low L. Falsificare, from Fr. Fausser, trajicere, perstringere, (Du Cange); and Fr. Fausser; It. Falscare, (by Ariosto written Falsar;) Sp. Falscar, (cum falso scindere, Min.) from L. Fals, a scythe, (fals marialis,—a common weapon.) See Men. Beau. & F. use the s. in the Coronation, Act i. and Dryden the c. in Æneid, b. ix. l. 1065. He says that he borrowed it from the It. Falscar in Ariosto. He appears to have been quite at fault as to the origin and meaning; and our lexicographers interpret, as if it were the common v. To Falsify.

FALTER, or FAULTER, v. -ING. To fail or fall short; to fail, sc. in utterance; to hesitate.

Mins. from Fr. Faillite, a fault. Sk. refers to Fall, and Fault. The Sp. Falter, is to fail.

FAME, v. s. To speak or talk (well or

-IST.* living together, (at home,)
-MULATIVE, ad. as of one family; and thus,
—well known to, or acquainted with, each other; free from, or without, restraint or ceremony; free, unceremonious, unrestrained; common, frequent.

Familiar, s. is app. to a supposed demon or spirit, who serves as a familiar or domestic attendant;—to an officer of the Inquisition.

Familism, Familist:—"At this time, (23 which moveth the wind or air; in the wind or air.

Upon this word in Chaucer's Manciples Prologue, ("Now, sweetsire, wol ye just at the fan,") Mr. Tyrw. remarks, that the thing meant is the quintaine, which is called a fan or van, from its turning round like a weathercock. See VAN, VANE.

Fr. Van; It. Vanno; Ger. & D. Wanne. Wan,

The L. Vannus or Fallus, is from the Gr. Βαλλειν, to cast or throw.—Voss. It has more probably the same origin as the Eng. Winn-ow, (qv.)

FANATIC, s. ad. Any one raving or -ISM. insane; wildly enthusiastic: a
-AL, ad. wild, irrational enthusiast.

-AL-LY. Fr. Fanatique; It. & Sp. -ico; L. Fan-
-NESS. aticus, a priest; from Fannus, a temple, (a fane, qv.) then app. (Voss.) furiotic et cause, when about to deliver the oracle, they were supposed to be seized with a divine fury; and this opinion they confirmed by the frequent shaking of the head, and other actions indicating madness.

FANCY, v. s. Various written,—Fansy,
-I-FUL. Fantasy, Phantasy.
-FULLY. To take or apprehend; to perceive
-FULNESS. or conceive the forms or images
-LESS. of things; to think, conceive or imagine; to depicture, delineate, or portray, the forms or images, the qualities or appearances of things; to appropriate them to other things; sometimes restricted to pleasing qualities; and thus, to fancy, or have a fancy for, is to like, to have a liking or desire for; sometimes opposed to, or distinguished from,—to reason strictly, to argue convincingly; and thus, to assume,

to suppose, to take for granted.

To fancy, as distinguished from ima- gination, may be ascribed the province of personifying, and of investing the personification with the qualities of real beings, supplied by memory or imagination.

Fr. Fan-taisie; It. & Sp. -tasia; L. Phantasia.

FANE, s. Also written Phane, (qv.) The habitation or abode, sc. of deified personages; the place in which their worship is performed or solemnized; a temple.

L. Fannus, a temple, from the Gr. Fan, by transposition ανω, and prefixing the Digma, Favos. And νωσ, from ναειν, habitare, to stant, talkative; one who promises more than he can perform.

It. Fanfarone; "Fr. Fanfarer,—to sound as sound, as trumpets; to challenge or brave with sound of trumpets; to brag, vaunt; make great flourish or bravado."—Cot.

FANG, v. s. -LESS. To take, seize, grasp. To underfang, i. e. to undertake, is not uncommon in our early writers.

D. Fangen; Ger. Fang-en; Dan. -er; AE.
Feng-an. See FINGER.

FANGLE, s. App. to—an attempt -ED. something new; a foolish innova--NESS. tion. The word is of rare occurrence without the epithet new.

Perhaps (Sk.) from the old word Fangles, capere, and this from A. S. Feng-an, (to fang), capere, rem aggredi, capessere, sc. novae capere.

FANNOM, s. "Fr. Fanon,—a scarf-like ornament worn on the left arm of a sacrificing priest."—Cot. **Bale*.

Ger. Fane, pannus lineus; Goth. Fana.

FANTASY, v. s. "Fr. Fantasier,—to Fantastical,—imaginary

-NESS. whimsical, capricious.

-TASTRY. Fantom,—an appearance; an
-TOM. apparition; a specter.

Wiclif (Mark vi.) renders the L. of the Vulgate, phantasma, fantum, and Chaucer
"Perfay, thought he, fantome is in min he."

Fr. Fan-taisie; It. & Sp. -tasia; L. Phantasia.
Gr. Φαντασία. See FANCY and PHANTASY.

FAP, ad. Mr. Douce says, that fap certainly means drunk, as appears from the Glossaries; and Mr. Nares declares, that he has met with it in no Glossary: and in this he is not singular. Goose-berries are in some counties called feabes or feaberries, and in Suffolk, fapes; whence Mr. Moore suggests that we may be helped to the meaning of the word:—Fap, sc. intoxicated with goose or fea-berry wine, and thus gen. drunk. Fea-berry, Sk. thinks, may be so called from fean, gefean, gaudere, to gladden; because these berries are pleasing both to the sight and palate.—Shak.

FAR, ad. av. -ness. Gone; gone to a distance, removed, remote.

Farther and Farthest are a corruption of Further and Furthest, (qv.); the regular corruption of Far, being farrer, farrest; also written Fer, ferrer, ferrest.—Goldyng.

Far is much used prof.

Goth. Fairs, fairsas; A. S. Feor, feorre, feorrest; D. Ferra; Ger. Ferr; from the A. S. Far-an, to go. A. Over.

FARCE, v. s. To stuff, to cram. (See -MENT. FORCEMEAT.) "They could wish, -KAL. your poets would leave to bee -KALLY. promoters of other men's jests, and to way-lay all the stale apothegmes, or old books, they can hear of (in print, or otherwise,) to farce their scenes withall."—B. Jonson. Farcing.—Sir T. More.

"By farce I understand, that species of the drama whose sole aim and tendency is to excite laughter."—Hurd.

Fr. Farce; L. Percire, to stuff or cram. A. fars, is said by Men. to be a mixture or medley of various sorts of viands; and app. (with It. Fars), to a species of comedy, quod rerum varietate farsa sit: because it is stuffed or filled with a variety of things, or with incidents of various kinds. See his Dict. Etym. and Orig. della Len. Del. in vv. Farce and Farsa. In-

FARD, s. -ing. Painting; also, any coloured or adulterate beauty. Cot. says, it is properly ceruse or white lead.

Fr. Farde; of uncertain etym. Men. derives from Lat. Fucus, thus: Fucus, fucardus, fuardus, fardus, fard: an etym. which, his editor says, cannot possibly be received.

FARDEL, s. A package, a bundle.

Fr. Far-deus; It. -dello; Sp. -del; D. -deel; from L. Farcire, to stuff, cram, or pack close.

FARE, v. s. -well, v. ad. s. To go or move on, to proceed, to advance, to succeed; to be treated or provided for.

Fare, the s.—the sum paid for going, for the passage. Also, treatment, provisions.

Made fare, in Chaucer, (Reeves Tale) may be interpreted by the word, ado; made ado; and seems (as Tyrw. observes) to have been derived from the Fr. v. Faire. And for other instances, see Tyrw. Gloss. to Chaucer.

The past p. is Fared, far'd, fart. Dan. Fart.

Fare, in Fare-well, is the imperative of

Far-an, to go or to fare. "So it is equally said in Eng., How fares it? How goes it?"—Tooke. And, cons., How is it with you? how proceed, or succeed you; what do you get; how are you treated; how provided for?

FARINA, s. -ceous. Meal; mealy.

Fr. Farineus, from L. Farina, meal, from Far, corn; far molitum.

FARM, v. s. By application, To farm is,—

-ER. To hire or take upon hire; to

-ERESS. hold or take for certain rents or

-ERY. sums to be rendered, or other

-ERSHIP. considerations required and per-

-HOLD. formed; to let land or other pro-

-ING. perty upon such conditions; to till or cultivate land.

"Farm or feorme, is an Old Sax. word signifying provisions; and it came to be used instead of rent or render, because anciently the greater part of rents were reserved in provisions; in corn, in poultry, and the like; till the use of money became more frequent. So that a farmer (farmarius), was one who held his lands upon payment of a rent or feorme; though at present, by a gradual departure from the original sense, the word farm is brought to signify the very estate or lands so held upon farm or rent."—Blackstone.

Fr. Ferme; Men. from the L. Firmus, qd. un lieu ferme, un closerie; a firm place, an enclosure: Fermer, v. also denoting to enclose, to fortify. Spel. & Sk., (adopted by Blackstone), that it is from A. S. Fearm-ian, formanian, victum prebere, to supply food; husbandmen or farmers (as they allege) not orig. paying their landlord money, then very scarce, but food (victum) and other necessary articles.

FARRAGE, s. App. gen. to—Any kind

-o. of medley or mixture.

-INOUS. "A kind of dredge or farrage cometh of the refuse and light corn purged from the red wheat far."—Holland.

L. Farrage, from Far.

FARRIER, v. s. -y. (Anciently written Ferrer.) App. to—a shoer of horses; and also, to one who undertakes the care or cure of the diseases of horses.

Fr. Maréchal ferrant; It. Fabbro ferrato or ferraro; L. Ferrus faber, a worker in iron; from the L. Ferrum, iron.

FARROW, v. s. To bear or bring forth.

A. S. Fara, porcellus, a farrow, a little hog, a young pig.—Sam. The L. Farris, or, with equal probability, (as Sk. acknowledges) L. Parere, has furnished this word. Jamieson decides for Farris. But the word may originally be northern Fara, (A. S. Far-an, to go,) is used in Sw. for coire; and in A. S. Fare, the s. is, familia, comitatus; and faras, generationes, (see Itre and Lye), and may have been app. to any fruit or produce of cotton, of going or coming together; and thus, to any thing begotten or brought forth.

FEE, s. & -ING. Any thing granted by one, and held by another, upon oath or promise of fidelity or fidelity; any thing paid, given, and received upon trust reposed of a faithful performance of duty; as a reward or recompense; a perquisite.

The Glossarist to G. Douglas explains Fee, beasts or cattle; whence, he adds, our Eng. Fee; quia olim sola præmia et munera erant pecora; because cattle were formerly the only rewards or gifts; but there seems no necessity for a second etym.

Sen. thinks, from the A. S. Feo, (Go. Fæth), pecunia, pretium, opes. Probably from the old Fr. Fi; L. Fides. (See FEALTY, FEARLESS, FEUD, &c.) -ON. outrageous.—Cot.

-Y, &c. "Fellon,—so called from the fierceness, the keenness, of the pain."—Sk. It is com. called a whitlow.

A. S. Felle; D. Fel; Fr. Fel-le, -on; It. Io, -lon. The A. S. Felle, Som. says, is crudelis, cruel, fell; it. bilis, gall, anger, cholera, melancholiness. The L. Fell, Voss. thinks, is from Gr. Χολή, (χ into f.)

FELL, v. To fall, or cause to fall; to -ER. strike, throw, or hurl down; to knock -ING. down; to hew down. See DUEL.
A. S. Fellan, gefellan; D. Veilen; Ger. Faelien; Sw. Fäl-la; Dan. -der, to cause to fall.

FELL, s. The skin or hide.

A. S. Fell; Go. Fili; D. Fel; which Jun. derives from L. Fellis, a skin or hide; and pellis, from Gr. Φέλλος, the bark or hide of a tree; observing that A. S. Fell was also so app.

FELLOE, s. The iron wherewith the cart-wheel is bound.—Som.

A. S. Felge; Ger. Felge; D. Velge, flexura, curvatura. Ger. Felgen; D. Velgen; A. S. Wælostan, volvere.

FELLOW, v. s. Fellow, lit. seems to be—LESS. a follower; a companion, an associate; one with whom others match -SHIP. or mate, suit or pair, unite or consort. And To fellow, is—to match or mate, to pair.

Fellow is much used pref.

Spel. (in v. Felagus.) says, from Sax. Fa, i. e. fides, and lag, ligatus; hence the Anglo-Normans, changing (according to their custom) g into w, pronounced it Felawe; and we, Fellow. And he quotes a passage from the laws of Edward the Confessor, in which Low L. Felagus ejus is interpreted, fide cum eo ligatus. Hickes (Gram. A. S. p. 6.) from A. S. Fel-gian, flig-gian, to follow: and in this etym. Minn., Sk., and Serenius are unanimous. Ithre (in v. Felago) is uncertain. Under Un-

FELON, s. ad. "Fr. Fellonnie, —felness, -IOUS. curstness, despatchfulness, ire, -IOUSLY. anger; untractableness, cruelty, -OUS. unmercifulness, outrageousness; -Y. also, disobedience; treachery, treason; any such heinous falsehood or offence, committed by a vassal against his lord, or by a subject against his sovereign, whereby he loses, or is worthy to lose, his estate."—Cot. "Felony, in the general acceptance of our English Law, comprises every species of crime, which occasioned at Common Law the forfeiture of land and goods."—Blackstone.

Sk. says, either from A. S. Fell-s; Fr. -on; It. -one, crudelis, cruel, fell;—or from feah, beneficium, stipendium; and Ger. Lon, pretium, sc. the crime that is punished by loss or forfeiture of the fee. Hickes (Gram. Franco-Theo. p. 95) is of the former opinion; and Spel. favours the latter: according to Hickes, the forfeiture of the fee was an incidental punishment, adjudged to the felness, cruelty or atrociousness of the crime. According to Spel. this forfeiture was the cause of the imposition of the name upon the crime so punished. Voss. (de Vitulis, l. 2, c. 6) proposes Ger. Faelen, vel feelen, errare, delinquere, cadere; this etym. is noticed by Spel., and rejected by Wach. quia non explet mensuram criminis. The common usage among our older writers, as well as among the Fr. confirms the opinion of Hickes. En-

FELT, v. s. FELTRE, v. * s. A hide, or skin; a covering.—* Fairefax.

A. S. Felt; D. Filt; Dan. Filt; Ger. Filtz; Fr. Feltre, feutre; It. Feltro; Sp. Fialtro; Low L. Felttrum. Wach. says, it may be derived either from Gr. Ἰλλος, arcare, densare, lonam cogere, or from L. Villus or Villorus. Sk. suggests To felt, (qv.) Spel. calls it pannus crassior ex pilla, proprie coactus, non textus; and Holland speaks of "wool of itself driven together into a felt without spinning or weaving, serving to make garments with." The word is probably a mere cons. usage of Fell,—the skin or hide.

FELUCCA, s. "Fr. Falouque,—a barge, or a kind of barge-like boat, that hath some five or six oars on a side."—Cot. "Falcatoria, (Du Cange,)—a species of ship; perhaps the same with our feloque or falouque." It. Filuca.

FEMALE, s. ad. Female, whether animal -IZE, v. or vegetable,—that which -MINE.† bringeth forth, which pro-

-MIN-INE, s. ad. duceth, which beareth off -AL. spring,—young of its own species or kind. -ALITY. Feminate is used by Berners as we now use Effeminate, (qv.); and H. More Feminized, in the same manner. "With halfe a beard, as a feminate man."—Golden Boke. "The serpent said to the feminized Adam."—More. Femininely.—Chaucer.

For Feme-covert, see COVERTURE.

* Shafesbury. † Chaucer. ‡ Goldyng.

Fr. Fem-elle, -im; It. -ina, -inaia; L. Femina, which Scal. derives from fortis, and fatus from fortis, coire; Voss., from ancient L. Fem, fatum, of the same meaning, i. e. coire, copulare, and therefore, figere, parere; and thus—femina, that which beareth, which bringeth forth.

FEMORAL, ad. Of or pertaining to the thigh.

L. Femur, the thigh; quia, says Perotinus, fem ac sustineat animal. Voss., from the obsolete Fes.

FEN, s. "The fen is a plashy inundation, -NISH. formed on a flat—without depth -NY. without lineal boundary—of ambiguous texture—half water, and half land—a sort of vegetable fluid."—Gilpin. "In modern speech we apply fen only to stagnated or corrupted water; but it was formerly app. to any corrupted, or decayed, or spoiled substance."—Tooke.

Go. Fani; A. S. Fenn; D. Fenn. "Fen, or fan is the past tense, and therefore past p. of fyngan, (to corrupt, to decay, to wither, to fade, to spoil in any manner;) and means,—corrupted, spoiled, decayed, withered." Nisus is said, by G. Douglas, to fall grufeling (grovelling) amid the fen or beistes blude of sacrefyce. And see Jamieson.

FENCE, v. s. (Properly, Fensus.) The -LESS. that which keeps safe or secure, which guards or protects; -ER. -IBLE, s. ad. a guard, security or protection; -IBLY. any hedge, inclosure, wall, -ING. mound, ditch, or other thing -FUL. built or constructed for security or safety, or protection.

FEND, v. -ER. Fender, i. e. defender, that which -ING. fends, defends or guards. A common word in speech, but not in writing.

* Gill West.

L. Fend-ere, (used only in composition,) i. e. arcere, depellere, to drive away or repel; and thus—to keep safe or secure, guard or protect. Perhaps A. S. Bindan or pyndan, to bind, to bind round, to inclose. De-For-Ob-Un-

FENERATION, * s. "Fr. Fénération,—usury or the practice thereof."—Cot.

Fenerator à fenore est cognominatus; fenus autem dictum à fetu, et quasi à feturd quâdam pecuniae parientis atque incrementis, (Far.)—the product or increase of money.

To fenerate, Cockeram explains, "To put money to usury."—Brown.

FENESTRE, s. -TRAL. Among the ancient Romans,—Openings in the wall to admit the light; (perhaps to admit air, vent-us;) a wind-ow.

D. Fenster; Ger. Fenster; Sw. Fenster; Sp. Huendela; Fr. Fenestre; It. & L. Fenestra; perhaps also fenestra, q. phœnœstra, that through which light is admitted.—See Voss and Wack. in v. Fenster.

FENIGREEK, s. A herb.

Fanogracum; Fr. Fenugrec.

FENNEL, s. A herb.

A. S. Fen-ol; Fr. osil; Ger. -chel; Dan. -nikel; D. Fenchel; all (Sk.) from L. Foeniculum, which Voss thinks may be from fenum, (hay,) quia ubi exaruit, feno similis sit. Isidorus, from foiverbas, because its juice sharpens the sight.

FENNOW, or FINNOW, pt. Waned, withered, decayed; cons. mouldy, musty.

In Kent, Jun. says, is mucidus, mouldy, from A. S. Fynig-ean, mucescere, to be mouldy; Som. says, to wax fenowed; and fynig, -fenewy. (See Fen.) Mr. Justice Blackstone has remarked, that in "the Preface to King James's Bible, the translators speak of fenowed," i. e. viewned or mouldy translations. (Note on Shak.'s Troil. & Cress. Act II. sc. 1.) See VIZZW.

FEOD. See FEUD.

FEOFF, or FIEFF, s. v. To feoff is—to -EE. give or grant, yield, surrender or -ER. give possession of, sc. a feud, feff, -MENT. or fee, (qv.)

Fee is the old Fr. Fé; L. Fides; and a fee,—any thing granted by one, and held by another, upon oath or promise of fealty or fidelity. En-IN.

FERACIOUS,* ad. -ITY.† Able to bear; bearing, producing, fruitful, fertile, (qv.)

**Thomson*. †Beattie.

L. Fer-as, -acis, bearing, from ferre, to bear.

FERAL,* ad. Of or appertaining to funerals; deadly.—Barton.

Feralis ab inferis, et ferendo; quod ferunt tum epulas ad sepulcrum, quibus jus ibi parentare.—Var. lib. v. Voss thinks from the Æolic accus. Φερα, feram; quæ enim fera magis effera est mortis!

FERDNESS,* i. e. Fearfulness. Ferdly is still used, Jamieson says, as Fearfully.

In the Gloss. of obsolete words in Wiclif's New Testament, we find ferdful,—fearful, terrible; but the reference is to Jer. xvii. Cant. vi. (which remain in MS.)—Chaucer.

FERE, s. -HEAD. Also written Pheer.

A fellow, a mate, an associate, a companion; also, company, fellowship.

A. S. Fera, ge-fera; socius, comes, sodalis, a fellow, a companion, a mate. We as yet sometimes say a feer in the same sense—Som. Perhaps (Sk.) from A. S. Fer-as, ire, profectaci; qd. itineris particeps, a fellow-traveller.

FERETORY, or FERETRY, s. A bier.

L. Fœtrium, from ferre, to bear.

FERIE, s. Any day of the week not *-IAL.** kept holy.—Bullokar.

-IATION.† **Dugdale*. †Bp. Hall. Brown.

L. Ferie (Voss.) was orig. Fesia, for which see FESTIVAL. The Gloss. to Wiclif says,—Feries, L. feasts, holidays. Levit. xiii. -fairs.

FERINE,* ad. Of or pertaining to a wild

*-INENESS.** beast; wild, savage, ferocious.

-ITY.† **Hale*. †Hammond. Bp. Taylor.

L. Ferinus, from fers, φηρα; Æolic for θηρα, from θη-ειν, currere, to run; so called from its speed, (Lenep.) ab impetu ferivlerio quo ruit.—Scheidius.

FERLY, s.* ad.† or FEARLE, s. Anything foreign, strange, and, therefore, surprising, wonderful; surprise, wonder.

**Mir. for Mag.* †Chaucer.

A. S. Færlie, ferlic, repentinus, sudden, unlooked for, (Som.) which Dr. Jamieson says is undoubtedly formed from A. S. Fæar, subitus, and lie (like), having the appearance of suddenness, i. e. of coming from afar; for fæar, subitus, is from A. S. Fær-an, ire; and thus ferly (sometimes written farly) is—as above.

FERMENT, v. s. To raise, to swell, sc.

-ATION. by the motion or action of internal

-ATIVE. parts; to cause or have an in-

*-AL.** ternal commotion or tumult, an internal heat.—Brown.

Fr. Ferment-er; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Fermentum, q. servimentum, à ferendo, (see Fer-vent.) quia massam in qua continetur, quasi servefacit, et attollit, turgidamque reddit; Voss. from Isidorus, (because it raises and swells the mass in which it is contained.) Re-UN.

FERMILLET,* s. Fr. Fermillet,—a small buckle or clasp, sc. to hold firmly or fast.—Donne.

FERN, s. -Y. A plant, so called, because it everywhere meets the traveller or way-faring man.—Sk.

From A. S. Fearn; D. Vaeren-kruyd; Ger. Faren-kraut, from A. S. Faran; D. Vaeren; Ger. Fahren, to go.

FEROCIOUS, ad. Fierce, savage, ra-

-IOUSNESS. venous.

-ITY. Fr. & It. Fer-oce; Sp. -oz; L. Ferox. See FIERCE.

FERREOUS, ad. Having the properties

-RUGINOUS, or of iron; irony.

-RUGINEOUS. L. Ferreus, from ferrum, iron, which (Voss.) may be so called, à feritate?

FERRET, v. s. "Fr. Fureter,—to ferret, to search, hunt, bolt out; pry, look, spy narrowly into every corner of."—Cot.

Fr. Furet; It. Pierretto; L. Fiera. Jun. says, they are thought to be called from Φωρ, fur, whence some name them ferusculi, because they are animals of wonderful subtilty in thieving stores.

FERRULE, s. "Fr. Virole,—an iron ring put about the end of a staff, &c. to strengthen, and keep it from riving."—Cot.

From L. Ferrum, iron.

FERRY, v. s. -AGE. A passage, sc. by water.

A. S. Fara; Ger. Fare; D. Vaer, oer; Sw. Faria; Dan. Farge. From A. S. Faran, to go. See FORD.

q. feather-n

FERTILE, ad. That can or may bear or -NESS. produce; productive; gen. with
-ITY. a subaud. of abundance or plen-
-IZE, v. teousness.—Brown. Om. -IZER.
-ITATE, v. Fr. & It. Fertile; Sp. -il; L. Fertilis, (from ferre, to bear,) by corrupt usage, that can or may bear; properly, that can or may be borne.
Fetlham uses Fertile as a v. In-Un—Also Con-
De-Dif-In-Of-Pre-Pro-Re-Suf-Trans-fer.

FERVENT, ad. Warm, glowing, burn-
-ENTLY. ing, ardent.
-ENTNESS. Fr. Fervent; It. -ente; Sp. Herviente; L. Ferveo, from fervere, to
-ENCY. warm, to be or cause to be warm.
-ID. See FIRM. Ef-
-IDNESS. -OUR.

FERULE, s. Any thing for beating or -A striking. App. to—a piece of wood -AR. or leather to strike the hand (at schools).

L. Ferula, & feriendo, from beating or striking.

FESCENNINE, s. ad. Verses so called by the Romans, from a town in Etruria, whence they were introduced.

L. Fescennini, & Fescinid, Hetruria civitate.

FESCUE. See FESTUE.

FESTAL, ad. Pertaining to a feast or -IVAL, s. ad. banquet; joyous, glad; to
-IVE. time of feasting and rejoicing;
-IVITY. of merriment or jollity.

Fr. & Sp. Festiva; L. Festus, festivus.

Mr. Gifford thinks, that in the expression festival exceedings, Massinger alludes to a dish in addition to the regular dinner, which at the Middle Temple still retains the name of Ex-ceedings. In-Un—

FESTER, *v. -TRY,* ad.* To putrefy, to suppurate; to generate corrupt or virulent matter, (met.) any virulent sensations.

**Jewell.*

Perhaps connected with Fr. Flastrir, which Cot. interprets, to burn in the hand or ear, to brand on the forehead, to mark for a rogue, with a hot iron. (Or Qy. Pester?)

FESTINATE, ad. Quick, hasty, speedy.
-LY.* **Shak. †Chapman.*

-ION.† L. Festinare, festim sive festim progredi; hoc est, festis sive denis gressibus, (Voss.) to proceed with thick or close steps; with steps closely, quickly following.

FESTOON, s. Gen. "A garland, bundle or border of fruits and flowers, esp. in graven or embossed works."—Cot.

Fr. Feston, qd. sertum festum seu festivum, a festal or festival garland.—Sk.

FESTUE, or FESCUE, s. A stalk or straw,
-UCINE,* and hence used for a wire or
-UCOUS,* stick employed by schoolmasters in pointing out letters to children learning to read; also for the gnomon of a sun-dial.
**Brown.*

D. Vaeco; Fr. Festui; L. Festuca, a stalk or stem. "Fr. Festui, & festue,—a straw, rush, little stalk or stick, used for a festue."—Cot.

FET, s. i. e. Feat, (qv).—**Bale. Drayton.*

FETCH, v. s. In old authors also written -ER. Fet.

-ING. Fetch, the s. is app. to any thing fetched, or sought for, fraudulently. And thus, a deceitful trick or artifice.

To fetch, implies,—to go or send for,
and bring or carry to, back to. And gen.—

To draw or derive; to deduce, educe or produce; and thus, to effect, to perform, to reach, to arrive at, to attain, to acquire.

A. S. Feccan, fet-ian; D. Fat-en, adducere, afferre, to bring or bear to.

FETID, ad. Filthy, nasty; having a foul
-IDNESS,* smell or stench.—**Boyle.*

-OR. Fr. Fétid; It. -do; L. Fetidus, from Fetere; and Voss. thinks that it may, from the filthiness of a fastus, be thence app. to any thing filthy or nasty.

FETLOCK, s. In a horse, the joint of the leg and foot, which locks or fastens them together, qd. feetlocks. T. H. (in Sk.) thinks, from the long locks of hair that grow there.

FETTER, v. s. To bind or fasten the
-ING. feet; gen. to bind, fasten or en-
-LESS. slave.—**Camden.*

-LOCK.* A. S. Feter-tan, ge-feter-tan; D. Fetena, compedire, qd. footen, fetter, as L. Pedica & pedibus. See MANACLE. En-Un—

FETTLE, v. To set or go about any thing, to dress or prepare.—Ray. Fettle may perhaps be considered as a dim. of Fé,
or Feat, (qv.)

FEUD, s. Hatred, enmity; hostility, quarrel,

A. S. Feahth; D. Feste, vecde; Ger. Fede. Syn.
says, A. S. Feahth, inimicitia, & Fah; Ang. Fes;
hostia, inimicus; and Foe, (qv.) any one hated, past p. of fean, to hate.

FEUD, or FEOD, s. That with which any

-AL. one is feoffed or enfieffed; any

-ALITY. thing granted by one and held

-ARY, ad. s. by another upon oath or pledge

-ATARY, or of fealty or fidelity. See FAN,

-ATORY. and FEOFF. In-

-IST.

FEVER, v. s. Sometimes, in very old

-ISH. writers, Fewer.

-ISHNESS. A hot distemperature of the

-OUS. whole body.

-OUSLY. Fr. Fiebre; It. Febbre; L. Febri.

-OUSNESS. & ferendo, (ferreo, ferreo, ferbis, by

FEUILLAGE, s. i. e. Foliage, (qv.)

**Pope.*

FEUILLE-MORT, s. (Fr. Feuille, and mort;) a dead leaf.—**Locke.*

FEUTER, v. "His speare he feutred," (Spenser); Mr. Todd says, "Made his spear ready." The phrase is in the Romance of King Arthur, folio edition, without date, sig. H l, "They feutred their spears."

Old Fr. Feutrer. See FETTER.

FEUTERER, s. A dog keeper; from Fr. Vautrier, or vauttrier; one that leads a lime-hound or grey-hound to the chase.—

Whalley.

Cat calls Fr. Fautré, a mongrel between a hound and a mastiff. And see Men. Le Orig. della Lin. Italiana, in v. Feltro, and Du Cange, in v. Cande Feltre.

FEVER-FEW, s. A plant: so called from its efficacy in removing Fever—as a Febri-fuge, (qv.)

FEW, ad. -NESS. Confined, limited, narrowed, small, minute; in number or quantity.

Ga. Fausi; A. S. Fea, faswa, and fewness; in which Jun. thinks that traces of Gr. ῥαυροί, pauoi, are manifest: p (ut suspe) omitted. Sw. Fes; Dan. Faa. Mr. Tooke has produced from G. Douglas the expression (unusual enough to modern ears) "Ane few meyne," i. e. many; to show that few and many are not (as is gen. supposed) in meaning opposite terms and contraries; "many means mixed or associated, (for that is the effect of mixing,) subaud. company, or any uncertain and unspecified number of things." And few must restrict or restrain, confine or limit this number, in the repetition of unity.

FEWELL, s. That which fireth or burneth, FUELL-ED, which kindleth fire; which in--FLA-meth, which continueth fire or flame.

Sk. says, Eaca seu pabulum ignis, qd. L. Focus; Fr. Feu,—and (Men.) Fr. Feu, fire, from L. Focus; as jes from jocus, lens or lieu from locus.

FEWMET. See FUMET.

FEY, or FAY, i. e. Faith.—Chaucer.

FEY, v. i. e. Fag, (qv.) g softened into y.

To foy a ditch, is to work hard at it, and thus, to cleanse or empty it.—Tusser.

FIANCE, v. s. To give, place or repose, faith, trust, or credit; to trust, credit or rely upon; to bind or pledge to the faithful performance of—part the marriage contract; to betroth.

Fr. Fiancee, (idem dare.) Af-

FIAT, s. App. to—An order, command, decree, sc. that something be done.

L. Fiat, imperative of Fieri, to be done: Let it be, or be it, done. Spenser writes Fiaunt, to rhyme with graunt.

FIB, v. s. To tell falshities or falsehoods, to speak falsely, to lie.—Common in speech.

Sk. says Fibby, a dim. of fable, from L. Fabula.

FIBRE, s. "Fr. Fibras,—the small strings
-IL- or hair-like threads of roots; also,
-OCA- the fibers or threads, or strings of muscles and veins."—Cot.

Fr. Fibras; It. Sp. & L. Fibra. A sinio, fiber, extremus.—Scal. in Varr. lib. iv. And Voss. thinks that fibras orig. denoted—rei ejusque extremitates, and then more sep. app. to the liver and to plants.

FICKLE, ad. Varying, changing, un-
-NESS. steady, inconstant; wavering,
-V. irresolute.

Perhaps, (Sk.) from L. Facilis, i. e. one who easily or asily, and for weak reasons, changes his opinion. The A. S. is Ficot, which may be from A. S. Wicel-tan; D. Wigghel-en, vacillare; Sw. Fjocka, huc illic vagari; to ramble this way and that. Hearne interprets Fikele, v. in R. Gloucester, To falter: thus showing the connexion between wicel-tan and wigi-tan, to beguile.

FICTION, s. A portraiture or image,
-IOUS. sc. of a likeness or resem-
-ITIOUS. blance: an invention or -ITIOUSLY. pretence (of a likeness or -ITIOUSNESS. resemblance,) and thus, a
-IVE. dissimulation, a giving or dis-
-ILE. playing of a false appearance, a false colouring.

Fictile, (L. Fictilis), made, worked, manufactured (à figulo) by the potter.

Fr. Fiction; It. Fizione; Sp. Ficcion, from L.  fingere, Actum. See FICTION.

FIDDLE, v. s. To use, to play upon, a
-ER. fiddle; met. to play, to trifle, to act,
-ING. triflingly, inefficiently.

Fiddle-faddle,—i. e. fiddle fiddle, an augmentative or emphatic repetition.

A. S. Fithle, fidicula; fithelere, fidicen; D. Fed-ele; Ger. & Sw. Fidel; a musical instrument, fidibus tensus. The L. Fidicula and Ger. Fidel are both also app. to an instrument (ex nervis) of torture. Ihre thinks that this instrument and the name of it were both of northern origin; and suggests the Go. & Isl. word Fidra, also written Fidia, and Atla, as the parent root.

FIDELITY, ad. -DELE,* ad. App. to—An attachment or adherence to a bond or obligation, to any obligatory covenant, engagement or connexion; an observance of, a regard to, good faith.—Hen. VIII.

Fr. Fidélité; It. -tà; Sp. -dad; L. Fidelitas, fideliis, ades; from fidere, and this from Gr. Πίστις, or πίστις, or from ῥοῦλος, for πιστις. The v. Πίστις, ex origine significabat ligare, to bind; and πιστις, ades, quæ nos persuadendo ligat; that which by persuasion binds or attaches.—Valckenær. See FAITH. Af-Con-De-Dif-In-Per-

FIDGE, v. To be restlessly active; like -ET, v. s. an over-busy, over-labouring per-
-ETY. son; to have the quick, unsteady motion or action of such a person.

Sw. Fika is,—tendere aliquò, citato cursu ferri; but fidge or fy, is probably the same word as fag and seague, (qv.)

FIDUCIAL, ad. Having faith or trust,
-ALLY. trusting, confiding; having or
-ARY, s. ad. holding upon faith or trust;
confidential.

L. Fiducia; from Fides, faith. (See FIDELITY.) Fidelitas, virtus fidelium. Fiducia,—constantia idem habentis.—Gerner.

FIE, or FYE, int. Used to express—dislike, disapprobation.

Lye observes, "that Fian, A. S. is odisse, to hate; and Tooke asserts, that Fie, is the imperative of the Go. and A. S. v. See FOE, FOH, and FIED.

FIEF. See FEOFF.

FIELD, s. Field is,—Land whose trees
-ED. have been felled, and thus fitted, pre-
-ISH. pared for cultivation; tilled or cul-
-Y. tivated land; producing corn or pasture. Again,—

Cleared or open land, open space, ample room, and thus fitted for armies, battalions or battle; met. for action or execution. And a field,—

The time or season passed in the field; a campaign; the events of a field; a battle.

A. S. & Ger. Feld; D. Feld; Sw. Feld. Helvigi-gus ingeniously, says Wach. derives from fallen,
i. e. that which has fallen by lot, because the ancients divided fields (agros) by lot. And hence, says Minns., the expression,—"My lot has fallen to me in a good ground."—Som., perhaps from rod-eis, colere terram. Tooke,—"This word by Alfred, Gower, Chaucer, &c. was always written Feld. It is merely the past p. felled, feld, of the
v. To fell, (fall-an, be-fell-an.) Field-land is opposed to wood-land; and means, land where the trees have been felled."

Tooke observes, in confirmation of his etym.
that in the collateral languages the same correspondence subsists between the equivalent v. and the supposed s. Ger. Fellen, fell; D. Vellen, veld; Dan. Fælde, felt; Sw. Faelia, felt. Feld written Felde, is constantly opposed to wood.
"The feld hath eyes, and the wood hath ears."
Chaucer. "In woode, in felde, or in citee."—
Gower.

FIEND, s. A hater, sc. of good; and
-FUL. thus,—a worker of evil; app.
-LY. emph. to—the devil and his
-ISH. ministers.

-ISHNESS. Go. Figanda, fanda; A. S. Fecnd, fynd; D. Vtande; Ger. Feind; Sw. Fiend; Dan.
Fiende, from Go. Fig-an; A. S. Feg-an, foan, fam, odisee, to hate.—Jun. Wach. and Ibra. The
p. p. of the v. Fian, to hate, meaning (subaud.
some one, any one,) hating.—Tooke. See Fiz, and Foz.

FIERCE, ad. Gen.—Impetuous, rapid,
-LY. ravenous, eager to attack or de-
-NESS. stroy; fearless, vehement, furious, violent, in attack or pursuit; and gen.—
furious, violent. And in B. Jonson, ("ferce credulity,")—violent, excessive.

Fr. Fier, farouche; It. Piero, feroce; Sp. Feroz; L. Ferus, from Fera, (Æol. Onpa, pro Onpa, à celeritate dictum, from On-iv, currere, to run.— Lennep.) Ferus and Feroz, Voss. observes, differ:
that animal is called ferus, quod nullo septo, aut custodie, servatur; feros autem ad mores pertinet.
Jun. suggests, whether Chaucer may not allude to the origin of this word in the expressions —"As sharp as fer," (Pl. T. v. 39,) and (quod proprie accedit,) "As ferus as any fer," (Test. Cr.
185.) According to the etym. of Lennep, app.
properly to—those animals which run after or pursue, sc. their prey. See Fiaz, Fzocrous.

FIFE, s. -ER. Also written, by Hackluyt,
Phiph, Phipher, (qqv.)

Fife, in Shak. (Mer. of Ven.) is—the fifer; and he is called—a wry-neck'd musician, because he always looks away from his instrument.

Fr. Fife; It. Piffero; Ger. Pfeife, which Wach.
derives from Puffen, or Pfuffen, to blow.

FIFTEEN, ad. i. e. Five and ten. See FIVE.

FIFTH, ad. -LY. i. e. That unit which fifth, or which maketh up the number five.

FIFTY, ad. i. e. Five tens.
-IETH.

FIG, s. A tree; the fruit of the tree.

A. S. Fic; D. Fighe; Ger. Felge; Dan. Fig-en; Fr. -ue; It. Fico; Sp. Figo; L. Ficus; perhaps from Gr. Fuan; or, as Voss. rather thinks, from Heb. Ṣe, grossus; the fig-tree producing (grossus) green fruit or figs when other trees produce flowers.
—See Voss. and Martin. in v. Ficus.

FIGARY, s. i. e. Vagary.

FIGENT,* ad. Unsteady, unfixed, quick.

*Beau. & F. Eastward Hoe.

Perhaps from Fidge or Fig, qd. Fidging.

FIGHT, v. s. To strike or hit, or beat,
-ER. with the hand or fet; to engage in,
-ING. carry on, contend in battle, in war;
to war, to combat.

A. S. Fechtan, fight-an; D. Fechtan; Ger. Fechten; Sw. Fekta; Dan. Fegter. Verba pugnant plerumque formantur à manu, says Wach.; and he derives from Gr. Hek-revau, pugnare, and that from Hek, the fist. Be-

FIGMENT, s. -AL. Any thing feigned.

L. Figmentum, from Fingere, Actum. See Fic-TION.

-ABLE. fashion or shape, to make into
-ATE. form or fashion, to delineate,
-ATELY. depicture or portray the shape,
-ATION. form or image; to invest or
-ATIVE. clothe with figures. Met.—to -ATIVELY. imagine or conceive, express
-ATIVENESS. or declare, similarities or resemblances, representations or
-ATED.* allusions, types, symbols.
-IST.† To make a figure, emph.—a great figure, an important figure, a handsome figure.

A figure, app. to—the forms of numerical or arithmetical characters, and thus, figures

FILACEOUS, ad. Filament,—as Fr.
-LAM-ENT. Filaments, little strings, threads
-ENTOUS. or hairs in veins, plants, roots,
&c.; the beard of a root.—Cot. See Fila.
L. Filum, a thread.

FILANDERS,* s. The filanders are probably thread worms; worms thin as a thread; from the L. Filum, a thread.
*Brown.

It. Filandre; "Fr. Filandre,—the filander, small worms that breed in bruised, surfeited, or foul fed hawks; also, nets to catch wild beasts with." And Filandre, ad. "Streaked with, or full of, small threads, fibres, filanders."—Cot.

FILBERD, s. A tree; the fruit (the nut) of the tree.

Filberd exists in no other language than the Eng.; and it is not very probable that our ancestors alone were so classical as Gower's lines suppose.

"——— Phillis

Was shape into a nutte tree
That all men it might see:
And after Phillis Philberd
This tree was cled in the yerd:
And yet for Demophon to shame,
Into this day it beareth the name."—Gower.

Another origin (of as little value) is given by Peacham in his Emblems, 1612.
He is describing an Eng. fruit-garden:—

"The Persian peach and fruitful quince,
And there the forward almond grew,
With cherries knowne no long time since,
The winter warden, orchard's pride,
The Philibert that loves the vale,
And red queen apple, no envide
Of school-boys passing by the pale."

Upon this, he observes in a note, "The Filbert so named of Philibert, a king of France, who caused by arte, sundry kinds to be brought forth; as did a gardener of Otranto, in Italie, by clove-gillflower and carnation, of such colours as we now see them."

Jun. says, -forte à multis barbis; and Sk. -full and beard; qd. plenius barbâ et lanugine. Tooko and Todd have noted the passage quoted above from Gower: the latter, as supplying a legitimate etym.: the former, probably, as supplying an etym. of the same character with that which he has produced from Chaucer of the word Cokold. Virgil's Philis, (Philis amat corycæ) has a claim as good as Gower's.

FILCH, v. s. To pill or pilfer, to steal, -ive. to pillage, to purloin.

-ER. Jun. says, Filich, flich, suffurari, clam subducere, capitare; and from Fr. Piller, Sk. seems to think it may be derived.

FILE, s. To dirty, to pollute, to corrupt, FILTA. to contaminate; in R. Brunne, met.—to disgrace or degrade.

-LY. Filth,—that which fleth, fouleth, -INER. or dirtieth; dirt, pollution.

-INERD. * Wiclif. † Chaucer.

-LESD. † A. S. Fylas, afylan, and befylan. "A fyl-as, inquinare, contaminare, fedare, to defile, pollute or make filthy."—Som. De-

FILE, v. s. -ING. To brighten, to smoothen, to polish, to burnish, to refine. Met.—to give smoothness or polish, refinement or subtily.

Fr. Filet; It. -ore; Sp. -ar; A. S. Foolan; D. Filten; Ger. Feil-en; which Jun. thinks may be from that φαλιν-ειν, which Hesychius interprets λαμπρυνειν, splendendum reddere. Wach. —that it may be from L. Pol-ire. Af-De-En-Un-

FILE, v. s. To draw out threads, to prolong, to extend in length; and thus,—to move in a line or file. Also,—to put upon a file or thread, string or wire, or other similar substance; to pass such file through any thing.

Fr. Filer; L. Filum, a thread. De-En-Pro-Un-

FILIAL, ad. Of or pertaining to a son; -ALLY. relating to, having the character -ATION. of a son.

Fr. & Sp. Filial; It. -ale. To this ad. formed from the L. s. Filius, a son, we have no equivalent from our own Eng. s. "son." Ad-Un-

FILI-BEG, FEIL-BEG, PHIL-BEG, s. "The feil-beg, i. e. little plaid, also called kelt, is a sort of short petticoat reaching only to the knees, and is a modern substitute for the lower part of the plaid, being found to be less cumbersome, especially in time of action, when the Highlanders used to tuck their breeches into their girdle."—Pennant.

Genl. Filleadh, a fold, plait, or cloth, and beg, little; or perhaps Goth. 1st. Fila, a light garment, and beig-a, to surround. A piece of dress worn by men in the (Scottish) Highlands instead of breeches.—Jamieson.

FILI-GRANE, or -GREE, ad. -GRAINED.

"Sp. Filigrana, fligran-work; which is curious fine work in silver or gold, or any other metal; as fine as threads, and therefore has its name from filum, thread."—Delpino. Filigrained, or (as there written) filgrain'd (work) is described (by Evelyn) in the Pop's Dictionary, (1690,) to be "Dressing boxes, baskets, or whatever else is made of silver wire work."

Fr. Filigrane, from the It. Filigrana, composed of filum, and granum, (a very old invention)—Men.

FILL, v. s. To occupy or take possession -ER. of all, or the whole, void, vacant, or -ING. empty space; as to fill a glass, i. e. the cavity or hollow of a glass; to take possession, to possess,—space unoccupied; met. the mind, i. e. to occupy all its thoughts; to occupy or engage, wholly, completely, entirely; so as to leave no vacuity, no deficiency or want.

Goth. Fuljan; A. S. Fyllan; D. Volten; Ger. Fullen; Sw. Fylla; Dan. Fylde-er, implere.—See FULL. Re-Un-Under-Up-

FILLET, v. s. A slight bandage, (redimiculum), wrought of threads.—Sk. A slight bandage or girdle.

Fillet of veal,—the more muscular part of the thigh; perhaps so called, because large and strong tendons and nerves, exhibiting the appearance of threads, present themselves in that part.—Sk.

To fillet,—to bind, surround or cover with a fillet, or bandage.

Fr. Fillet, a little thread, string or twist; L. Filum, a thread.

FILLIP, v. s. -ING. To throw out the finger or thumb,—the one from the other— withholding it: app. met. to a quick, sudden, helping action or motion. Vox & sono ficta.—Lyc. Sk. and Mins.

FILLY, s. i. e. A foal, &c. applied to the female, or, as North expresses it, the mare colt; met. to a wanton young woman.

FILM, v. s. -Y. A cover with a thin, slight skin.

A. S. Film, cutis, a skinne, a filme. Filmes, pellicule; skales, thin skinne.—Som.

FILTER, v. s. To strain or pass through -TRATE, v. felt; gen. to strain.

-TRATION. A. S. Felt.—Pannus vel lana coactilis; Barb. L. Feltrum; Ger. Fils; D. Filt; It. Feltro; "Fr. Feutre, a filter; a piece of felt, or thick woollen cloth to distil, or strain things through."—Cot. See Fils in Wach., Feltrum in Du Cange, and Martinius.

FIMBLE, ad. Grose says,— "The female hemp; soonest ripe and fittest for spinning, but it is not worth half so much as the carle, (qv.) with its seed." (Essex and Sussex.) Miller calls it the male, and he is probably right; though it may have taken its name (fimble, corrupted from female) from a supposition that it was the female plant. It is the male plant that is barren.

FIMBRIATE, v. App. in Heraldry to a border; as a cross, having a narrow border or hem, of another tincture, is called, a fimbriated cross.

L. Fimbria et fibra, extremitates rei, non culjusvis, sed incisæ; sic ut nunc accedet, nunc recedat.—Voss.

FIN, s. The organs by which fish balance
-NED. and move themselves.

-LESS. A. S. Finna; D. Finne; Dan. Finne.
-NY. Jun. and Sk. think, from the L. Pinna or penna; since the *fin*s (pinne) are to fish, what the wings are to birds.

FINANCE, s. "Wealth, substance, riches,
-IAL. goods; also a prince's revenue, or
-IALLY. treasure," (or that of any other
-IER. person or persons.)—Cot.

Fr. Fin-ance; Sp. -anza. (See Du Cange, Wach, and Men.) Sk. says, from the old, and, in that sense, obsolete Fr. Finance, finis, an end; qd. Finantia. Bullokar has Finance, an end; and Men. (Diet. Etymol.) Finance, pecunia, quæ exsolutâ lîa finitur; in his Orig. della Ling. Ital. (MS. note.) Finance, q. medium ad finem, sc. ways and means to a final settlement. The old It. Finanza is, finis. Men. however, suggests the Sw. Finna; Ger. Finden, invenire, to find, (A. S. Findan.) The L. Finis, a fine, (see Du Cange), seems sufficiently to account for the application of the word in Fr., as in Eng.

FINCH, s. A bird.

To pull a finch (says Tyrw.) was a proverbial expression, signifying, to strip a man, by fraud, of his money, &c.

In D. Fincke, Sw. & Dan. Fincke; and so called from the sound vink, vink, which this bird utters.—Lye.

FIND, v. s. Find may be explained to -ER. mean—To seek, and, cons. to see
-ING. or perceive; to come to or meet with; to reach, attain or acquire, to discover, to detect, to invent; to obtain, to procure, to provide.

Spenser and some others write the old pret. Fand:—Common in Sc. writers.

A. S. Findan; D. Finden; Ger. Finden; Sw. Finna; Dan. Find-er. Helvigius (Wach.) prefers the L. Find-ere; Wach. himself suggests the L. Ven-ire, quomodo invenire est in rem venire. The A. S. Findan, invenire, and fund-ian, niti, to labour to come to a thing, (Som.) are the same word, and mean, to seek or search or look for, and consequently to come to, (invenire,) or find. Ven and Fin, are the same radical letters. FINE, s. The end or the point, the -AL. boundary, or bounding point or
-ALLY. line to which our view or course
-LESS. is directed; when or where our
-ISH, v. s. progress ceases or is to cease;

FINE, v. ad. To finish highly, to polish
-LY. to cleanse, to purify, to brighten, to
-NESS. embellish; to render or make clear
-ER. bright or brilliant, elegant or
-ERY. beautiful.

-ING. Ger. Fein; D. Fyn; It. & Sp. Fine; Dan. Fin; Fr. Fin. M. Guyot (says Men.) from ancient L. Finus, signifying bellus venustus. Du Cange (in v. Finus) from finitus, qd. finished, highly finished, polished. Res, cui nihil addi potest. See FINESSE, and FINICAL.

FINE, v. s. -ABLE. Any thing (as a sum of money) paid at the end; to make an end, termination or conclusion of a suit, of a prosecution; a mulct or penalty. "For as much as *fin*s levied in our court ought & do make an end of al sutes, and therfore are called *fin*s, chiefly when after waging of battel, or the great assise in their cases they holde the last and *fin*all place for ever &c."—Rastall.

L. Finis. Spel. (after enumerating the various legal usages of the word) says, "In none of these significations was the word known to our country men ante seculum Normanicum." See Finis in Du Cange. Fr-

FINESSE, s. -ING. Fin-ness or re-fin-ment,—nicety, polish, policy, to an excess and thus, guile or wiliness, cunning, subtilty. "Where unnecessary *fin*ness wanteth accept true meaning playnesse."—Udall. "You'll mar all with your *fin*ness."—Jonson. "Brevity and succinctness of speech, is that which, in matters of wit, and *fin*enesses of imagination, (we call) epigram."—South.

Fr. Fin-esse; It. -ezza. See FIN.

FINGER, v. s. -ING. To fang,—take or catch, to hold or handle, to touch (with the finger;) to take or touch.

A. S. Ger. & Dan. Finger; D. Finger; Sw. A. S. Fengan; Ger. Fangen; D. Fingren; Dan. Fanger, capere, prehendere. Finger, quod prehendit; that which fange, seizes, catches.

FINGLE-FANGLE, s. i. e. Fangle-fangle
See FANGLE.

FINIAL, ad. L. Finis, an end. In Sosthenius it seems app. by Holland to the ridge (fastigium); in Pliny, to a bounding or terminating edge, (personas tegularum extremis imbricibus.) It is now chiefly used for the Gothic ornament which finishes a pediment, pinnacle, &c.

FINICAL, ad. Too fine, too refined; too
-CALNESS. nice; effeminate.

-KIN. From Pine, (qv.) and Fin-ness.

FIPPLE, s. A stopper, sc. of a wind instrument. L. Fibula, a clasp or fastener.

FIR, s. A tree; the wood of the tree.

Sw. Fara-trac; A. S. Fuar-wudu; L. Pinus, a pine tree. Som. Sk. and Jun.—Ables; D. Fueren; Dan. Fyrr. Sk. says, perhaps from Fire, (D. Fyrr;) wood which may easily be set on fire.

FIRE, v. s. To ignite, to kindle, to burn;

"Consider, says Socrates, whether this name, sup. is not of Barb. origin; for it is by no means easy to adapt this to the Gr. tongue; and it is manifest, that the Phrygians thus denominate fire, with a certain trifling deviation."—Plato, in Culyto, by Taylor. It is difficult to suppose that our northern progenitors had no name for the element of fire, until they borrowed it from the Greeks; it is more probable that there was some common origin for both the Gr. and Sax. in the northern languages; and that origin seems to present itself in the A. S. Fyr-s-las, fyr-litare, ex-candescere, (to burn-s;) the usual pref. Be, or its cognates, Pe, Fe, or Fe, will account both for the Gr. and Northern words. Wach. has remarked, that in Heb. Ur, vel Uur is, flamma; that Baar is arid; and he notices the kindred terms in Gr. ωυρ-ωυρ; L. Ur-ere, Bur-ere, Fur-ere, Fer-vere; and A. S. *Fyr-s-an. FIRK, v. Steevens truly says, that this word is so variously used by the old writers, that it is almost impossible to ascertain its precise meaning. "To ferk your belly up, flounder like."—Massinger.

Sk. refers to—To fly; but adds, that it may be from L. Fericare, a frequentative of Ferire, as Fodicare, of Fodere. The It. Fera, or Sferza, a rod or whip. Men. derives from Ferire; feritus, feritius, ferilia, feza.

FIRKIN, s. A vessel containing nine gallons, i. e. the fourth of a barrel, or thirty-six gallons.

Sk. writes Ferkin, and Mina.—Fireken; the latter derives it—A Ferendo, quod facile feratur. The former prefers A. S. Feower; Ger. Vier, four, and the dim. kis; qd. Jeowerkin or wolerkin, that is, quadratulus, respectu sc. majoris vasis; and in confirmation, he refers to Tierce, (qv.)

-IFY, v. cealed design.—*Shak.

-ING. A. S. Fiscian, fisc; D. Fischer, fisch;

-Y. Ger. Fisch; Sw. Fiska, fisk; Dan. Fisk.

-Y. Jun. (Gloss. Go. in v. Fisk) has no doubt

-INESS. that this word, common to almost all European languages, is of the same origin with L. Fisc-is. But what that is, he acknowledges to be very obscure. Voss. presents three etyms. with little confidence in any of them. See Fisc.

FISK, v. To fish the tail about, whiska rumpan.—Seren. And Cot. has "Troiterre, a fishing huswife." In Gammer Gurton's Needle, (act i. sc. 2.) the edition quoted by Todd reads, "Fisking with her tail." In the edition 1575, reprinted in the A. B. Drama, vol. i. reads "Frysking." See To Fiske.

Sw. Fiska, from Foesa, instigare; and this from A. S. Fyr-on, agere, abigere, fugare, to drive, to drive about.

FISSILE, s. That can or may be cleft

-URE, v. s. or split. Fissipede, —cloven-

-IPEDE. footed.—*Boyle.

-ILITY. L. Fissilis, that can or may be cleft; from Findere, to cleave.

FIST, v. s. -Y-CUFF. To hold fast; to gripe fast or firmly; also, to strike with the fist or hand fast closed.

"If I but fit him once; if he come but within my vice."—Shak.

A. S. Fyst; D. Fuget; Ger. Faust. Wach. and Mina. (optime, says Sk.) from Fassen, capere, prehendere, constringere, i. e. to hold fast, (A. S. Fæstianan.) And from A. S. Fæst, firmus, Jun. derives it; quod validissima sit manus, omnium digitorum nodis in unum pugnū veluti compactis atque arctissime complicatis.

FISTULA, s. A pipe of reeds, or other -ARY. things having the hollowness of a -ATED. pipe.

-OUS. L. Fistula, q. φυσήλλα, à φύσα-αι, flatus distendere, to stretch out or distend by blowing.—Voss.

FIT, s. -FUL. A fit is—1. A fact, feat, or performance; and thus app. (as an act in a play) to—parts or portions of a song or poem, of music or dancing.

2. A fact or feat, an act, affect, or effect; and thus app. to—particular acts or effects; to violent and sudden affections, to paroxysms of temperature or distemperature of mind or body. See Fir, infra.

An ague coming by fittes; febris per intervalla recurrens. It seems to be from D. Fitis, signifying—swift, quick.—Jun. Perhaps, (Sk.) so called, q. Fights, for they are conflicts and struggles of nature. It is not improbably the Fr. Fait; L. Factum, done; any thing done, a feat, a fact; an act. Dr. Percy remarks, that, "Our ancient ballads and metrical romances being divided into several parts, for the convenience of singing them at publick entertainments, were in the intervals of the feast sung by fits or intermissions."

FIT, v. ad. To make or match, to suit; -LY. to adapt, to accommodate, to -NESS. adjust, to conform. -TER. To fit out,—to provide or furnish with things fit or suitable. -TINGLY. Shak. H. More.

-MENT.† Kilian says,—Fitten, (Fland.) Con-tedness.† ventre, quadrare, et accommodare; and this Jun. would derive from Fitis, frequens, citus, agilis. Sk. more reasonably, from Fr. Fait, factum; qd. factum, i. e. aptum ad hoc. And thus, Fr. Faiscis is, neat, feat, comely, handsome, proper, well-made, well-featured, well set-together. —Cot. Will it do? Will it fit? Will it suit? are equivalent expressions. Be- Re-

FITCH, FETCH, or VETCH, s. A plant. Fr. Vesse; It. Venza, voccia; L. Vicia, which Var. derives—à vincendo, because it has claspers like a vine, (De Re Rustica, l. 31.

FITCHAT, s. -CHEW. An animal. D. Viesse, fasse, vitche; Fr. Fisau. A fish or falmari, Sk. says, the fetid ferret, perhaps from L. Fatere, or putere, to stink. Lye,—from Fiest, Fr. Fessir, which Cot. says is to fyete, to let a fyete. It. Vessare; D. Vieslen, L. Viesire, which Voss. thinks may be formed from the sound, or be from Gr. βέσσει, (ejecto δ.) from βέσσειν, flatum ventris silentio emittere. See To FIZZLE.

FITCHING, s. i. e. Fixing. Nisi videro in manibus ejus fixuram clavorum: "But I see in hise handis the fitchyng of the nailis."—Wiclif. Fr. Ficheur,—a fixing.

FITTERS, s. Small bits or pieces. To beat or cut into fitters; (Sk.) frustulatum seu minutatim concidere, comminuer; from It. Fetta, a small segment: from the v. Fendere, L. Findere, to cleave.

FITTON,* i. e. Fiction, (qv.)

**Jewel.* Bp. Hall. B. Jonson.

FIVE, ad. A number equal to the fingers of one hand; the toes of one foot.

Five is frequently pref. Go. Fimf; A. S. Fif; D. Vif; Ger. Fünf; Sv. & Dan. Fem. The etymologists are content with Gr. Pente. Without doubt, (Wach.) from varra, because five fingers are all.

FIX, v. To fasten, join or unite closely, -ABLE. inseparably; to connect or bind; -ATION. to put or place, set or stick fast or firmly, immovably; to settle -EDLY. -EDNESS. steadily.

-IDITY. Fr. Fic-ier; It. -care, aggere; Sp. Fizar; L. Fig-ere, fix-um, to fasten. -ITY. Ad- Con- De- In- Post- Per- Pre- -TURE. Trans- Un- -URE.

FIZZ, v. FIZZLE. Or, To fist, as Jun.; To feist, as Sk.; or To fyiste, as Cot. writes it. See FITCHAT, and FISK.

FLABBY. Probably Flappy.

FLACCID, ad. -ITY. Soft, loose, faint, relaxed, (lax,—see letter F.)

L. Flaccidus, from faccere. The origin, says Voss., is Gr. Βλαβος, h. e. mollior, softness.

FLACKET, s. A vessel. See FLASK, and FLAGON.

A. S. Flaza; D. Flesche; Ger. Flasche.

FLAG, v. s. -GY. To hang loose, and drooping; to droop; to be or become flaccid, lax, languid or faint, weak or feeble (to lag). To flake, in Gower, ("Her herte began to flake and beate,")—to move to and fro, (to flicker.)

Flag, (the plant,) so called, because on account of the slenderness of its leaves it is moved by any wind: twigs, withies.

Flag, (of a ship. &c.)—because it flies in the wind. To flag, cons., from the loose or floating position of a flag, unless impelled by the wind.—See Sk. and Jun.

Flaggy,—also cons. lanky, flabby, (qv.) Flekes, in R. Brunne,—flags, twigs, (Hearne,) withies.

A. S. Flaggan, volare, to fly; D. Flaggen, volitare, and cons. faccere, laxari, to fly or float about, to hang floating, loose, &c. in the wind. Use

FLAG, s. -STONE. Ray says, that the surface of the earth, which they pare off to burn, the upper turf—and Mr. Moore, that the portion of clover land turned at once by the plough—is called flag.

Woodward tells us that flags of stone are no other than strata.

The origin of the word appears to be A. S. Flagan; D. Flaggen, degubere, to flag: to strip off, to separate or divide into flakes. See FLAKE.

FLAGELLE,* v. To whip, to scourge, -ATION. to lash. See DISCIPLINE.—"Bela -ANTS. Fr. Flageller; It. & L. Flagellare, to whip or scourge. The Flagellatores (who are also called Flagellantes) were sectaries and heretics, says Du Cange, about the year 1261. Cockeram has the v. To flagellate.

FLAGEOLET, s. A pipe, whistle, flute.

—Cot.

F. Flageolet, which Men. derives from L. Flare, to blow.

FLAGITIOUS, ad. Ardently lustful,

—LY. libidinous; shamefully profligate,

—NESS. atrociously wicked.

L. Flagitium, from flagitare, to demand or require eagerly, idque cum clamore, aut convitiis; hence, flagitii and flagitandi were words which signified ardentem amatoriam sollicitationem ad stuprum; then app. ad stuprum ipsum, omnique ea quæ molitise ad libidine committeretur.—Voss.

FLAGON, s. “Fr. Flacon,—a great leathern bottle.”—Cot.

Fr. Flacon, flascon; It. Flasco; Sp. Flasco; D. Flasche; Ger. Flasche; A. S. Flase, a flask, (qv.) In Low L. Flasco. Hesychius has φλασκον, a species of cup. Voss. (de Vitis, l. 2, c. 7) thinks all are from Ger. Flasche; but not noticing the existence of A. S. Flase; but the meaning of the word and the cause of the application are still wanting.

FLAGRANT, ad. Flaming, ardent,

—ANTLY. burning, fiery; app. to any glaring crime or offence,—shame-

—ANCY. less or notorious.

—ATE, s. “Greenhill. †Lovelace.

—ATION.† Fr. Flagrant; It. & Sp. ante; L. Flagrans, from flagrare, to burn; and this from flare, to blow; incendium, quod flatus alitur. Con-De.

FLAIL, s. A beating or threshing tool.

Fr. Flagen, flau. Lacombe has “Flaeller, batte avec un flau.” Roquefort has both the a. Flaeller, and s. Flacl. D. Flegel; Ger. Flegel; from L. Flagellare, to whip, to beat.

FLAKE, v. s. —Y. To part, separate, or divide; to form into flakes or flags, or separate parts or portions: gen. app. to such as are broad, thin and flat.

**Pope.* Congruere.

Fr. s. Flaguet; It. Fiocco. The It. v. Fioccare; D. Flanken, to, pingere, to snow. The Ger. Flock, Wach. says, is pars avulsa lane, nivis, &c. and he refers to the v. Flucken, gñucken, carpere, vellere, to pluck, pull, or tear away. Born. has Flacco, succini, siccæ nivis, flakes of snow or such like. Jun. seems inclined to refer to D. Fliegen, to fly. Sk. decides from L. Fioccos: three, Flage, pars avulsa; Snoeflage, flocculus nivis; and he derives from Flacco, dividere, partiri, to divide or separate: and this leads us to D. Flagg-ten; A. S. Flagan, (flig-an.) to flay, to strip off, and thus—to separate or divide, sc. into flakes or flags. See FLAC-STONE, and FLAK.

FLAM, s. s. A lying story or fable; a false pretext; a vagary. And—

To flam,—to put off, impose upon, cajole with such story or pretext.—“Ford.

Sk. doubts.—A. S. Fligma, vagus; qd. rumor vagus, a flying rumour; with us, it denotes a lying story or fable.—Fligma is from flame, flight; and this from the v. Flans, to fly. And thus, Sk.’s explanation is correct.

FLAMBEAU, s. “Fr. Flambeau,’ is (gen.) a light; or any thing that yields a flame, and is carried in the dark, for light.”

—Cot.

From Fr. Flamber, to flame, (qv.)

FLAME, v. s. Flame is app. to the blazing

—Y. light thrown forth from a burning substance; met. to —LESS. warmth or brightness of thought or feeling.

—SHIP.* To throw forth or emit a flame

—M-ABILITY. or blazing light; and gen.—

—ATION. to burn, to heat, to warm, to —BOUS. glow.—“B. Jonson.

—IVOMOUS. Fr. Flamber; It. Fiammare; L. Fiammare, from flamma, and this from Gr. φλεγμα, from φλεγειν, ardere, urere, to burn. En-Is-Under-Un-

FLAMEN, s. A Roman priest.

—INICAL. L. Flamen, so called, says Voss., a —INESHIP. flameo, sc. flameo colore velamenti capitis; from the flame colour of the covering of the head.

FLANK, v. s. —ER, v. s. Flank, the s. is app. gen. to the long or lengthened side of any thing; part. to—

That part of an animal which extends from the ribs to the thigh.

To flank,—to be or lie, to stand or be stationed, on the side; and thus, to cover or protect, guard or defend it.

Fr. Flank, s. Flanquer, v.; It. Flan-co, -chegolare; D. Lanche; Dan. Flank; Ger. Lank and flanke; from Gr. λαγων, itia, (Men.); ingeniosus credo quam verius, (Sk.) The D., Ger., & Eng. Lank, seem to direct us to A. S. Leng-lan, to long or lengthen, to extend: the difficulty is to account for the F. Wach. says, preposito digamma Kolloco;—perhaps b into p, and then into f: be-lank, pe-ph-lank, plank, ph-lank, flank. (See F.) Un-Om. FLANKARD. E. Hall.

FLANNEL, s. A manufacture of wool.

Pannus spongiosus, bibulus et mollis; perhaps, says Sk., from Lanula, dim. of lana, wool.

FLAP, v. s. —PER. Jun. says, Flap is the extremity of any thing soft and pendulous, and which is shaken by any slight motion. To flap is—

To move, fall or strike with a flap; that is, with the motion of such soft and pendulous substance.

A flap-dragon is a small inflammable substance set on float in a glass of liquor. To swallow this unhurt while flaming was a proof of dexterity in a toper, and candle ends were sometimes used as the ne plus ultra of the exercise. In our times, raisins in hot brandy form one of the Christmas gambols of children.

A flap-jack appears to have been a kind of pancake.—See Nares.

Sk. thinks with T.H. that the v. is from It. Flappare, flaccescere; and this either from L. Flabrum, or flaccescere. The s. sc. a fly-flap, from D. Flabbe, muscarum colaphus, which Mins. says, is from the sound made in striking at flies. The similarity observable in the applications of the words, flap, (qv.) and flap, leads to a suspicion that they have the same origin; f pref. to the latter. See F.

FLARE, v. To feel or cause to feel, to throw forth or emit, a broad, dazzling, glaring light.

Sk.—Flare in one’s eyes, oculis instar lucis obversari; I know not whether from D. Flederen, X 2 vollitare, vagari, qd. oculus circumvollitare, circa oculos vagari; to flit or fly before or around the eye; glaring light.

FLASH, v. s. To have or give a dazzling, -ING. glittering or shining appearance; to -Y. throw forth or emit a sudden and transient blaze or flame; and gen. (lit. and met.)—to throw or rush forth suddenly, so as to produce a shining or showy appearance.

"A flash," Grose says, "is a supply of water from the locks on the Thames, to assist the barges." And Pegge, in his Supplement, "Any pool of water."

Flashy,—showy, vain, spiritless; and thus,—tasteless, insipid.

Jun. from Gr.  $\phi\lambda\sigma\varsigma$ , flame; Sk. from the v. To blaze. It is not improbably from the v. To fly, to flit, to flicker; A. S. Flieccian.

Flashy, ad. Sk. is inclined to derive from L. Flacidus; but it appears merely a cons. usage of the v.

FLASK, s. -ET. Ray calls a flasket, a bottle made in fashion of a barrel; and Grose,—a long, shallow basket.

A. S. Flasa; Ger. Flasche; Dan. Flaske; It. Flasco; Sp. Flasco, faseo. See FLAGON.

FLAT, v. s. ad. Flat is (by usage at least) -LY. opposed to round; and thus, -NESS. having a plane superficies; level, -TEN, v. extended, prostrate;—and also, -TISH. to eminent or elevated, or projecting; and thus, low, depressed, dejected, sunk;—also, to deep; and thus, shallow.

Met.—1. Downright, positive.

2. Depressed or dejected, spiritless, inanimate, lifeless, tasteless, dull, stupid. A flat,—one easily gulled or deluded.

Fr. & D. Plat; Ger. Flach; Dan. Flad; It. Platto; Gr.  $\pi\lambda\alpha\tau\omega$ , platus, platto.—Men.

FLATIVE,* ad. Blowing, windy, swollen -TU-LENT. with wind, puffy, vain.

-LENCY. *Brewer. †Bacon. Holland.

-OUS. L. Flare, to blow; which, with the -OSITY,† Gr.  $\phi\lambda\upsilon\omega$ , Voss. thinks—sono facit. Con- E- In- Per-flato.

FLATTER, v. According to the etym. -ER. of Men.—To breathe or whisper -ING. sc. praise or pleasing words into -INGLY. the ear;—of Jun., to smoothen or -Y. soften down, to soothe or lull, to please or gratify, sc. by praise or pleasing words, or actions.

Holland has coined the s. Flatteress, and Boyle the av. Flatterously.

D. Flat-tem, -teren; Dan. Flat-terer; Fr. -er; which Men., supported by various preceding etymologists, derives from Flatore, a frequentative of Flare, to blow. Flare, flatum, flatus, flator. Jun. thinks that it may have been formed from Flat, because it is peculiar to flatterers, planâ explicatâque manu (with a flat hand) demulcere caput aut genas eorum, (or, according to the common phrase, to smoothen down those) into whose favour they would insinuate themselves. The L. Palpare, is to touch or stroke gently and softly, and thus, to caress, to flatter; and palpum, a gentle stroke, flattery. Out- Un-

FLAUNT, or FLANT, v. s. To move with an airy, flying motion; in a gaudy, giddy, showy, ostentatious or daring manner.

In Cot. in v. Gorgiaser, (but not in our lexicographers' Mins. Sk. or Jun.) It is probably from File-on, to flee or file. File-oned, flam'd, flamst, flant or flaunt.

FLAVOUR, v. s. -OROUS. "Fr. Flairer,—to scent, smell; also, to perfume, cast a smell, yield a savour, breathe out a scent."—Cot. Also app. to the taste.

Not in our early lexicographers. Perhaps from the Fr. In-

FLAVOUS,\* s. L. Flavus, yellow, from the Gr.  $\phi\lambda\epsilon\gamma\text{-}\epsilon\upsilon$ , to burn.—\*Smith.

FLAW,* ad. L. Flavus, yellow.—*Chancer.

FLAW, v. s. -LESS. Any thing flayed or excoriated; and thus, a defect, a defeasance, imperfection, fault, a weakness. Soda, flayed or stripped, from the top or surface of the earth, are in the North called fans. And further,—

Any thing flayed, stript, rent, or torn off; a rent; a rush, a gust, a blast, a torrent, a tumult, a storm. "A great flaw of wind took me."—Hackluyt.

Jun. from Gr.  $\phi\lambda\alpha\text{-}\epsilon\upsilon$ , to break or bruise; Sk. from A. S. Flæh, albugo, a white spot in the eye; Tooke, that it is the past p. of the A. S. v. Flæm, to flay. (qv.) In Hackluyt, Drayton, &c. It is app. to a blast, a gust; from L. Flare, to blow, say some etymologists.

FLAWN,* s. "Fr. Flans,—flawns, custards, egg-pies."—Cot. *Chancer. B. Jonson. Fr. Flans; Ger. Flader; D. Flaede. Of unknown etym.

FLAX, s. A plant from which thread is -ED. wrought.

-EN. A. S. Flæx; D. Flas, elack; Ger. Flach.

-Y. Jun. from  $\phi\lambda\alpha\text{-}\epsilon\upsilon$ , to beat or bruise. Sk. from L. Filius. Wach. from  $\pi\lambda\epsilon\kappa\text{-}\epsilon\upsilon$ , to weave, or  $\pi\lambda\alpha\kappa\omega$ , cavaries.

FLAY, or FLEA, v. -ER. To strip, pull, rend or tear off—the rind, skin, or other superficial coating.

D. Flaen; Sw. Flå; Dan. Flæ-er; A. S. Flæa, excoriare, deglubere, to flay, to pull, to pull off the skin or rind.—Som. D. Flaen, elæphen. See

FLEA, s. An insect.

-BITE. Flea-bite,—any trifling wound

-BITING. or pain; any thing minute or trifling.

A. S. Flæh; D. Floy, eloo; Ger. Flah; which Sk. Jun. and Wach. think is so called from the nimbleness of its flight from the fingers of those who would catch it. A. S. Flæa; Ger. Flöhe, to fly. It is more probably from the A. S. Flæa, to flæ or flay, from the effect of its bite upon the skin.

FLEAK, or FLAKE, s. An occasional gate or hurdle, set up in a gap.—Grose, North. A rack for bacon, &c.—Pegge, York.

Probably both so called because made of felch of wood. See FLAKE.

FLEAM, s. A kind of lancet, pointed like a broad arrowy head, wherewith chirurgeons use to open a vein.—Cot.

D. Flæma, Fr. Flamette, or A. S. Flæ, an arrow. Sk. says, from Gr. and L. Phlebotomum.

FLEAR, v. a. or FLEER, v. A fear is, -ER. perhaps, a fling; and thus, a scoff, -ING. scorn, sneer; and it probably has the same origin, i. e. To flee or fly; and the r.—

To express mockery or scorn; also, assumed civility.

Jun. thinks of kin to A. S. Fleored-ian, nugari; flead, nuga, toys, trifles. SK. that it is from the v. To leer, (f prefixed.) Mr. Brocket has "Flire, to laugh, or rather to have a countenance expressive of laughter, without laughing out. lal. Flire, subridere." And Dr. Jamieson, To fyre; lal. Flire, subridere, amplus ridere; Su. G. Flir-a, oculis petulantius ludere. See also Serenius. See FLIRT.

FLECK, v. -ER, v. To mark or cover with broad spots; to variegate with spots.

SK. says, Flecked, maculatus, (spotted,) from Ger. Fleck; Sw. Fleck, a spot; Dan. Flek. It is probably no other than flaked, i. e. having flakes, sc. of various colours. Flickering (Chaucer) is, flickering, (qv.)

FLEDGE, v. ad. To feather; to clothe or cover with feathers.—Holland.

D. Fledderan; Ger. Fliegen, volare, to fly; and com. plumescere, to be or become feathered or able to fly. In- Un-

FLEE, v. To flee, and To fly, are by usage -ER. distinguished; the latter implying -ING. the motion of wings; the former, not.

To move away, run away quickly, speedily, with the swiftness of flight; to go or pass away swiftly.

Den. Flyer; Sw. Fly; A. S. Fle-an, (see To FLY.) fugere, evadere, to flee, to run away, to avoid, to escape from.—Som.

FLEECE, v. s. To shear or flay, and to -ER. fleece (by usage) are distinguished: -ING. To shear, is to strip off the hide or -Y. skin; to fleece, to strip off the wool only; and met. to strip or despoil of wealth or property.

To fleece is also, to cover with fleece, sc. of wool; and met. to form into, to overspread with, the resemblances of such fleece.

A. S. Fleas, fleece, flay; Dut. & Ger. Flies; from the A. S. Fle-an; D. Flaen, excoiare, deglubere, to shear or flay. L. Vell-us, from vell-ere, to pluck. In all places they use not to shear sheep: for the manner of plucking their falls continueth still in some countries.—Plin. b. viii. c. 48.

FLEER. See FLEAR.

FLEET, s. -PRISON. App. to an estuary, into which the tide flows or flows. That which floateth; a collected number of ships.

The Fleet-Prison, so called, because situated upon the side of the water that floateth in from the river Thames, called Fleet-ditch. See To FLOAT.

Fr. Flotte; It. & Sp. Flota; D. Flote; Dan. Flod; A. S. Fleotan. Fr. Flotter; It. Flottier; Sp. Flotar; D. Floten; to float. The A. S. Fle-ota, Jun. adds, is the frequentative from flou-an, flare.

FLEET, v. ad. -NESS. To swim, to skim along the surface; and thus, to move along swiftly; to pass away suddenly; to pass away.

Mr. Grose says, "Fleet,—to skim or take off the surface or cream; whence fleet or fleeted milk," (North.) "I shall fleet their cream bowls."—Green, Collier of Croydon. See also Moore's Suffolk Words.

Fleet, ad.—Swift, speedy, rapid.

To fleet or fit, (see FLIT.) fluere, fluare, says SK. from "A. S. Fleohtan, fluctare, to float, to wave up and down, or to and fro."—Som. See To FLOAT, and To FLOW.

FLEGM, or FLEAME, s. FLEGOMATIC. Also written Phlegm, (qv.)

"Natural fleume is a humour cold and moist, white and sweet, or without tast, ingendred by insufficiency decoctiō in the second digestiō of ye watry or raw partes of the matter decoct called chilus."—Sir T. Elyot.

FLEM, v. A. S. Flym-an, is to cause to -ER. fly; to banish.—Chaucer.

-ING. Tytw. says, Fleme, Sax. to banish; Flemer, banisher. In A. S. Fleam, fuga; fema, fyma, Fyming, exul, profugus. Flyman, in exilium mittere, ex legem reddere.—Eye. SK. explains femed, daunted; feming, conquest; femer, expeller.

FLESH, v. s. Flesh is app. to the component substance of animals, -Y. (beasts, birds, and fishes,) distinguished from their bones, muscles, -LESS. vessels, &c. -LY. -LINESS. To the body, as distinguished from the spirit. -LING. -MENT. To animal food, as distinguished from that of fish or vegetables.

To corporal or bodily sensations or desires, carnal or sensual appetites or passions.

To flesh, is to train or invite to by an appetite for, or love of, flesh; to inure to, to indulge in, fleshly appetites; and thus, gen. to train, to invite, to inure, to indulge, to glut or satiate.—Shak.

A. S. Fleam; D. Fleesch; Ger. Fleisch. In A. S. are also found various immediate derivatives, Flasche, fleshy; flesclinesse, fleshliness; fascmet, flesh-meat. In Go. Leik, and in A. S. Lic, are caro, corpus, cadaver. (See LICH.) Hickee (Gram. A. S. p. 191) and Lye, think that Lic (according to the earliest usage,) denoted corpus inanimatum, but go no further than Go. Leik, having the same usage, for the origin. Jun. (Gloss. Go.) says, Leik, caro, item corpus, ac denique etiam cadaver. Wach. declares the word to be difficult and abstruse, and that the cause of obscurity is to be found in the many changes which it underwent before it received its present form. First, he adds, it was (Belgic) Lyf, substantia viva, from Leeven, vivere, to live. 2dly, Lich, and Leich, (Germania,) corpus animatum. 3dly, (Gothic,) Leik. 4thly, the A. S. Lic, agreeing with the Go. Leik; and which afterwards, with the Æolic digamma pref., was written Flæc, and, with the sibilant s inserted, Flæsc. He concludes that Luf, caro viva, subs. app. to caro mortua, was the original of the Ger. Fleisch, Eng. Flesh. Perhaps (SK.) from the v. To flou or flay; because the flesh is not placed upon table unless with the skin flayed or stripped off. Fleece and Flesh have probably the same origin. is minutely described by Ascham in his Toxophilus.

Fr. Flèche; Sp. Flecha; It. Freccia, frezza, sagitta; all (Sk.) from the v. To fledge, (qv.) volitare, plumescere, to fly about, to feather. The Low L. Flecharius, from flecha, was the name given to him who made the arrows, not who merely fledged or prepared them with feathers.—Du Cange.

FLEWED, pt. Flews are the large hanging chaps of a deep-mouthed hound.—T. Warton.

Not in our early lexicographers. Perhaps from D. Flauus, languidus, remissus, (fagging.)

FLEXIBLE, ad. That can or may be -IBILITY. bent; opposed to, stiff or rigid;
-IBLENESS. (met.) that can or may be (easily) inclined, or induced, or -ILE. persuaded; pliant, inconstant,
-ION. unsteady, infirm.
-OR.
-UOUS. Flex-animous, — bending, inclining, persuading, the mind.
-URE.
-ANIMOUS.* **Prynne*.

Fr. & Sp. Flexible; It. Flessibile; L. Flexibilis, from flexere, flexum, to bend. (A. S. Fleg-an, to ply.) Circum-De-In-Re-lex.

FLICKER, v. -ING. To fly or flutter about; to move flutteringly; to have or use an unsteady motion.

A. S. Fliccer-ian, (Flic-ic-er-ian); D. Fliiggeren; Ger. Flickern; Sw. Fleckra.

FLIGHT, v. s. That which fieth,—as a -Y. flight of birds; also app. to the -INESS. motion or action itself,—as the flight of the birds; also to a motion, equaling, or endeavouring to equal, the flight of birds; (met.) to the mind,—as the flights of fancy, &c.

To flight,—to put to flight, to cause to fly.

Flights is a name used in Archery, for long and light arrows employed in shooting rovers, i. e. uncertain lengths. See Bow.

Dan. Flugt; Sw. Flugt; A. S. Fliht; the third pers. sing. of indic. of Fliegan, to fly, (the terminating th changed into ht.)

FLIM-FLAM, ad. i. e. Flam-flam. See FLAM.

FLIMSY, ad. -INESS. Having the slightness, the weakness, of a mere flam or fable; slight, weak, forceless.

Perhaps from flim or flam, (qv.)

FLINCH, v. To shrink or draw back from,
-ER. out of the reach of; to withdraw or
-ING. retreat; to give way, to fail.

Either (Sk.) from the v. To fling, qd. to toss himself this way and that, as he usually does who wishes to free himself from the grasp of an enemy; or from A. S. Fliccerian, to move quickly, to move or shake the wings, as birds do when struggling to free themselves from the net. It is (as fling also is) more probably from A. S. Fleon, to fly from, i. e. to evade or endeavour to escape from. (Fleon-ic-ian, Fleu-ic,—Fleuch or Flinch.)

FLING, v. s. -ING. To cause to fly, to throw, to cast; (met.) to throw or cast,—a sarcasm, a scoff, a taunt.

From A. S. Fleon, (Fleon-ig-an, Fleong,—Fleng or Fling), to fly, or cause to fly. Though Sk.

thinks from L. Fligere, to strike, to dash, (existing in the compounds affligere, configere.) And Vit. Rev. (he adds) from flying, qd. to set a thing flying. Serenius says, "Sueth. Fluaga, jacere, item cum precipitantia ferri."

FLINT, s. Flinty, (met.) is—very hard,
-Y. excessively hard or rugged; and
-INESS. thus, cruel, unfeeling, without sympathy or compassion.

A. S. Ger. & Dan. Flint; D. Flinta; Sw. Flinta; which Wach. derives from Gr. Πλινθος, to strike, because stricken to produce fire. But does not agree with this, but has nothing better to propose.

FLIP, i. e. Flip, (qv.)

FLIPPANT, ad. Nimble, quick, perdy
-ANTLY. heedless.

-ANCY. Not in our older lexicographers. Perhaps from flipping; having the nimble motion of any thing flipped.

FLIRT, v. s. ad. -ATION. To toss or throw; to use a quick, short action of tossing or throwing; met. to cast or throw a taunt or scoff; to act with giddiness, with wantonness.

See To FLIRT: from which Flirt or Flurt is probably derived. Fleer, flered, fler'd, flirt, and the v. formed upon the past p. Sk. thinks it var. a sono facta.

FLIT, v. "To flit,—to remove. 'Two

-TING. flittings are as bad as one fire,' i. e.

-ER, v. household goods are as much

-Y." injured by two removals as by

-INESS,† one fire."—Gosse, North. See also Brockett.—H. More. †Ep. Hopkins.

See To FLIRT. A common word still in the North of England. Sk. quotes from Chaucer, "That by no craft I might it flit," and explains, "to move, remove, or take way." Matrim flutantis opus, in Boethius (b. iii. met. 9.) is by Chaucer rendered "work of fltering maker. And in b. iii. pr. ix. flutabant, flterem.

FLITCH, s. A side, sc. of bacon.

A. S. Flecca; Fr. Fleche de larde; a flitch or side of bacon. Perhaps from Flake in its com. app. to a broad, flat piece or portion, separated from a solid body. Hall speaks of a flitch of a beeve.

A. S. Fleot-an; D. Floten; Fr. Flotier; It. Flottare; Sp. Flotar. A. S. Fleobtan, from flou-an; whence fluere, fluare, to flow, to float, or as sometimes written, to feet. Over-Re-

FLOCCI-PEND, v. To weigh, to estimate or value, not a hair.

L. Flocçi, and pendere. A Latinism in which the old Chroncler Hall indulged.

FLOCK, v. a. -MELE. To follow, sc. in numbers or multitudes, in crowds. To collect or assemble, in multitudes; to crowd together or move in crowds.

By transposition of the letter l, from Folk, (qv.) And see Flock, and Folk, in Jun.

Flock-mete, -A. S. Flock-mætism, gregatim, (in herds or flocks,) from floc, grex, and met, a part or portion.

FLOCK, s. -BED. A lock; perhaps a Flake, (qv.)

Fr. Floc; D. Flocke, a flock or lock of wool.—Min. The Fr. Floc, Men. derives from L. Floccus. In A. S. Floccas is, as rendered by Som. Floccini, floci nivis; fakes of snow or such like. See FLAKE.

FLOG, v. -ING. To lash or scourge, to strike, to beat.

From L. Flagellare, to flagellate, (qv.)

FLOIT, s. A strife or contest. See FLOUT.

From A. S. Flit-an, contendere, rixari, to contend, to strive. "He had a great flout and batayll with dynars carykkes."—Fabyan.

FLOOD, v. s. That which has flow'd; opposed to ebb. App. to a mass of water; also emph. to the general deluge: a deluge, an inundation; met. abundance, profusion.

A. S. Flop-an, to flow. Flowed, flow'd, flood,—D. Flood; Ger. Fluss; D. Flood.

FLOOK, s. -Y. Also written Fluke.

The crooked part of the anchor which is infix into the earth.

Sk. calls it ros nautica. I know not (he adds) whether from Ger. Pflog, D. Floeph, a plow; from its manifest resemblance to a plow, both in form and in action, sc. the action of cutting into the earth.

FLOOR, s. v. -ING. App. to—The base or basis (within a room or building) upon which we stand, tread or go.

A. S. Flor, -ware, -ware, -ware; Ger. Flor; Sw. Flo, -var; D. Floor, clever, pavimentare; Sk. suggests, so called because, at least in the season of spring, they were strewed with flowers, (Scythia.)

FLUX, v. s. ad. Flux (the disease) is

-ATION. sometimes in our old authors -IBLE. written Fliz, (qv.)

-IBILITY. To flux, is to reduce from a -ILITY. solid to a fluid or liquid state;

-ION. and thus, to melt; also, to pass -IONARY. out, clear or cleanse out, to -IONIST. purge.

-IVE. Flux, the s., is a flowing (away); -URE. an issue or passage; a flowing (together,) a confluence, a concourse.

Fluxions,—a branch of Mathematics.

Fr. Flux; It. Flusso; L. Flux-us, from fluere, to flow, (qv.)

FLY, v. s. To fly and To flee, are by usage

-ER. distinguished: the former very -ING. commonly implying the motion of wings, the latter not. To flow seems to have the same radical meaning.

To move, go or pass away, quickly, speedily; with the speed or quickness of a bird on the wing; to move or remain, or cause to move or remain, in the air, like a bird; to escape, to evade, to avoid.

A. S. Flie-an, fliegan, volare; D. & Ger. Fliegen; Sw. Flyga. See FLEE, and FLIGHT. Over- Out-

FOAL, v. s. -ING. The young of a mare or ass, &c.

Goth. Fula; A. S. Fola, fole; D. Füllen; Ger. Füllen; Sw. & Dan. Fole. Ithre thinks, from A. S. Fyllan, sequel, to follow; because the foal or fly follows the dam even more anxiously than other animals. It is not improbably from Goth. Fyllan; A. S. Fyllan; D. Füllen; Ger. Füllen, to fill: that with which (sc. the mare, &c.) is full or filled.

FOAM, v. s. -Y. To throw forth or emit foam or froth; met. to rave or rage.

A. S. Fæm, spuma, fomes, froth; Fæmen, spumare, to foam or froth.—Som. Chaucer (as Jun. has noticed) writes Fomes. Setiger spumæ humoris notavit; "The bristled bore marked with Fontanel.—"Fr. Fontanelle, a running sore, or an issue made for a grief or sore," (Cot.); from fontaine, a fountain or spring.

Fr. Fons, fons; It. Fonte; Sp. Fuente; L. Fons. Sk. adds, qd. salutis; Jun., fons lustralis. See FOUNT.

FOOT, a. s. Foot,—that which carrieth, -LESS. beareth or supporteth; upon -ING. which we stand or move. Also -INGLY. app. to the posture suited or FOOTLESS* prepared for motion, for proceeding; to the position, state or situation; the lower part, the basis, the foundation, the pediment.

To foot,—to move, tread or go upon the foot; to move with the foot, to strike or seize with the foot; to have or cause to have a foot.

Foot-cloth, is sometimes app. to the horse that wears the cloth or housing.

Foot-hot,—straightway; lit. (adds Sk.) with a hot foot, a hasty foot. And Tooke,—"Foot-hot means, immediately, instantaneously, without giving time for the foot to cool; so our Court of Pie poudre, (pie poudre), in which matters are determined before we can wipe the dust off one's feet." See in Tooke, the examples collected; and Fute-hate in Jamieson.

Foot is much used pref.—"Camden.

D. Foot; Ger. Fuss; Dan. Fod; Sw. & A. S. Fot; Go. Fotus, which Jun. derives from Gr. Πῶς, L. Pes, (ph?) It may be from A. S. Fettian, to erry, sc. that which carrieth, which beareth. Under-

FOP, s. One puffed up with vain-glory, -PRAY. ostentatiousness, sc. of his person or dress. -LING. Sk. thinks, & Teut. Fobis or Fofus, a kind of fungus; he should rather have said, from D. Pof, fungus; Fofsen, to puff, efflare inanes glorias. -NESS.

FOR, pr. "I imagine (says Tooke) the -ASMUCH. word For (whether denominated -SOMUCH. pr. co. or av.) to be a s. and to -THY. have always one and the same single signification,—viz. Cause, and nothing else. Though Greenwood attributes to it eighteen, and S. Johnson forty-six different meanings; for which Greenwood cites above forty, and Johnson above two hundred instances. But with a little attention to their instances, you will easily perceive, that they usually attribute to the pr. the meaning of some other words in the sentence. Jun. (changing p into f, and by metathesis of the letter r) derives for from the Gr. Πῶς. Sk. from the L. Pro. But I believe it to be no other than the Go. s. Foirna,—cause."

Tooke's theory proceeds upon this principle, "That prepositions as well as conjunctions are to be found among the other parts of speech." Thus, Frum, the A. S. s. has supplied From, the pr. without any corruption. But there is no s. found in A. S. which will, unchanged, supply For, the pr.: some noun then must be sought, from which it may have been corrupted; and Tooke fixes upon the A. S. Fair-ina, cause, as furnishing a meaning, which would account for every application of the pr. For: and this remark will be appropriate to other etyma.—e. g. Of, (qv.) from Af-ora. See also Ad, At.

Upon the passages from Chaucer and P. Plouhman referred to by Tyrw. in his Gloss., Tooke observes, that though their construction is awkward and faulty, yet is the meaning of For equally conspicuous. The cause of putting on the habergeon, of the advice not to open the gate, of sewing the sack, being respectively,—that the heart might not be pierced, that the rose might not be stolen, that the wheat might not be shed:—

"And next his shirt an baketon,
And over that an habergeon,
For percing of his herte."

"Some shall sow the sacle
For sheding of the wheat."

"Therefore for stealing of the rose
I rede her nat the yate vnclose."

And so in the instances from Ford, B. Jonson, and Massinger, (upon which Gifford writes, as others had done before him, that For means for fear, and prevention), the cause of having him wormed, of having two or three officers, of putting the platters far enough, being respectively,—that he might not run mad, that they might not fail, that they might not reach.

In R. of Gloucester,—the cause of their choosing a fair place and strongly walling it, as a castle, and storing it well, being,—that they might abide the assault of the king:—

"A fair place heo cheson hem, and there heo gonne arore
Walles wyde and strong ynow, casteles as hit were,
And a stordie hit wel ynow, and here god ther
inne bere,
For to a bide the kyng, gef he wolde a sayle hom there."

In R. Brunne,—felony being the cause of the outlawry: "He was outlawed for a felone."

In P. Plouhman,—weariness being the cause of his falling asleep: "Me by fel for to slepe, for weyrynesse of wandryng."

In Wiclif,—the cause of the superior value of the widow's cast, being,—that others cast part of their "plentee," but that she of "her poverttee keste alle thingis that sche hadde." "Treuly I seye to you that this pore widow keste more than alle that kesten into the tresore, for alle kesten of that thing that thei hadden plentee of, but this of hir poverttee keste all thingis that sche hadde al her lyf lode."

Forthy,—A. S. Forthi, quamobrem, wherefore, (says Som.) i. e. this cause—or this being the cause.

Ihre considers For, (pro), and Fore, (præ), to be the same word, and they undoubtedly consist of the same radical letters; but it by no means follows, that they have undergone the same course of corruption.

Dan. For, forde; Sw. For.

FOR, pref. In composition, as D. & Ger. Ver; Sw. Fær; Dan. & A. S. For. Sk.—negat et auferit, denies or takes away; perhaps from L. Foras. Lye observes that A. S. For is inseparably pref. to words, and is variously rendered by the L. præ, Ab, Con, &c. &c.; and that sometimes it has an ill, and sometimes a privative signification. Kilian as variously renders the D. Ver; and Wach. and Ihre are equally liberal in their interpretations of the Ger. Ver and Sw. Fær.

The writers of the middle age (Lye) seem to have formed Fræ, from the L. Præ; as Fræ-beorht,—præ-clarus. Wach. considers For and Fræ to be the same.

Tooke accounts for this inseparable pr. in the following manner:—"From the L. Fores, foris, the Fr. had For; and of the Fr. Fors, our ancestors (by their favourite pronunciation of th) made Forth. Fors, in the prepositive and conjunctive use of it, the Fr. have latterly changed to Hors, but they have not so changed it when in composition. From the Fr. we have many Eng. words preceded by For, with this meaning; as Forfeit, Forclose, &c. and we had anciently many more." See FORTH.

Hence For, pref. to such words, is equivalent to—out, through—out, thoroughly, utterly, extremely; or to—out, out of, off, away.

FORAGE, v. s. -ER. To fodder,—to supply, provide, procure or purvey fodder; to go forth in quest of fodder; and thus,—to pillage, to plunder, to ravage; to make an incursion, sc. for fodder, spoil or pillage; and in Shak. (as the commentators say,)—to range abroad.

Fr. Fourrage; It. Foraggiare; Sp. ragear. Jun. Eforrage, pabulum, qd. foderage, from Foder, (qv.)

FORAMINOUS, ad. Having holes through; bored, pierced, penetrated, perforated.

L. Foramen, from Forare; and this from Foris, forth, quia qui forat, facit ut forinsecus via sit et inspectio, (Voss.); because he who makes a hole through, makes a way or passage forth or out.

FOR-BATHED,* pt. Thoroughly, utterly bathed, steeped, soaked.

*Surrey. Mir. for Mag.

FOR-BEAR, v. To hold or keep off or -ANCE. away from; to abstain, to withhold, -ER. to refrain; and thus, met.—to temperate, to moderate.

A. S. Forðaran, abstinere, and thus, parcere. Comp. of for, (i. e. forth), and bear. Tyrw. (on Rom. of the Rose) also says,—to abstain, i. e. to hold or keep away from; and so,—forbear itself, is forth-bear, i. e. to bear forth or away from; to hold off or away.

FOR-BID, v. To bid forth or away from, -D-ANCE. sc. any thing doing or to be -ENLY. done; to command not to do; -ENNESS. to hinder from being or doing; -ER. to prohibit, to interdict; and in -ING. Shak. ("He shall live a man for-bid," Macbeth,) to be under the consequences of interdiction.

A. S. Forbeodan; D. Verbi-eden; Ger. -eten; Dan. Forbyde; Sw. Förbjuda, to bid forth, or away from, sc. any thing to be done; to prohibit. The Go. Faurbiudan, as Ihre has noticed, is used -sensus generalis imperandi; in the general sense of bidding or commanding; and so Forbode appears to be used in R. Gloucester, ("Baldwin was forbere to cease of the building of a new Chantry,") for augmenting the force of bid. Un-

FOR-BLOWN,* pt. -STORMED. Thoroughly, utterly blown, or stormed.—*Gower.

FOR-BOD, pt. The old pret. and past p. -BODE. of Forbid. Now Forbade.

-BODEN.

FOR-BOUGHT,* pt. (For, i. e. forth, out, off.) Bought off.—*Gower.

FOR-BRAKE,* pt. Utterly brake; or, as Tyrw. says,—broke off.—*Chaucer.

FOR-BRUISED,* pt. Utterly, extremely, and thus, (as Tyrw. says,) sorely, bruised. *Chaucer.

FOR-CARVE,* v. -CUT,* v. To carve or cut through or off.—*Chaucer.

A. S. For-carfan. For, i. e. forth, thorough.

FORCE, v. s. To force, in modern usage, -EDLY. is,—to have or give strength or -EDNESS. power; to strengthen, to fortify; -FUL. to use, exert or employ strength or power; to compel, to over- -LESS. power, to subdue; to effect or accomplish, to acquire, by strength -ER. or power, by violence;—to violate. -MENT. -IBLE. The usage by Chaucer and Cam-

-ING. den appears to us extraordinary. Tyrw. explains the word in the passages from the former, thus; "No force,—no matter. I do no force,—I care not. I do no force of your divinites,—I care not for your divinity. No force of death,—No matter of death." Jamieson (in v. For) says, "This v. (i. e. the especial usage of the v. in such instances as those explained by Tyrw. and by himself in his Dictionary,) is formed from the Fr. phrase, (in Cot.)—Je ne fait point force de cela: I care not for, I force not of, I am not moved by, that thing."

The L. phrase, Parvi, nihili pendere,—I value little, nothing,—is of equivalent meaning, i. e. "I weigh, give or allow (little, no) weight. I do no force,—I give or allow no force, no strength, no weight—to your divinity."

"Force or Forse,—a cascade or waterfall. Su. Go. Fors, a cataract. The High Fors in Teesdale is an object of great sublimity."—Brocket.

Fors, (in Sc.)—a stream or current.—Junisson. See FORS in Junisson and Ihre.
Fr. For-cer; It. -sore; Sp. -sar; Low L. Fortis, from Fortis, strong. See FORTIFY, and CONVERT. De-El-En-In-Over-Un-

FORCE-MEAT, s. i. e. Forced meat, stuffed meat. See FARCE.

FOR-CEPS, s. The iron or steel with -CIPAL,<sup>2</sup> which we take or hold any -CIPAT-ED,<sup>1</sup> thing.—<sup>1</sup>Brown. <sup>2</sup>Bacon.
-ION.<sup>3</sup> Forceps (Voss.) dicitur quasi Ferri-cipis, hoc est, Ferrum, quo quid cepimus sive prehendimus.

FOR-CLOSE, v. -URE. Usually written Fure-close.

To close thoroughly, utterly; to shut out or exclude; to block out, close up, to debar.

Fr. Forclorre; for, (Fr. Fors, or hors, forth, out,) and close, (L. Clausum, from claudere; Fr. Clorre.)

FORD, v. s. -ABLE. To go or pass through or over; gen. app. when shallow water is to be passed:—or met.

Ford is p. p. of For-on, ire, transire, to go, to go over; a place gone over or through. Upon the past p. the s. To ford has been formed. Un-

FORD-O, v. To do, or put or turn forth or out, sc. out of doors; and thus, to undo. Also, utterly done, (in Shak.) overdone, sc. with labour; and thus, tired, wearied.

In Chaucer, (Frankelynes Tale,) "I am for-do," says Troke, "is, I am forth-done, i. e. done to go forth, ceased to go forth, i. e. out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors." Som.—"Fordom, fordom, perdere, perstruere, to destroy, to undo." D. For-don. But this is merely a consequential signification; he that is forth-done, turned out of, deprived of, house and home, "who may there no longer dwell," is cons. undone.

FOR-DRIVE,<sup>2</sup> pt. Driven forth, utterly, away.—<sup>1</sup>Chaucer.

A. S. For-drifen; D. Ferdryoen, expellere.

FOR-DRUNKEN,<sup>2</sup> pt. Thoroughly, utterly drunk, extremely drunk.—<sup>1</sup>Chaucer.
A. S. For-dranken, inebriare.

FOR-DWINE,<sup>2</sup> v. To consume, to waste. to vanish, utterly away.—<sup>1</sup>Chaucer.

A. S. For-dwinnan; D. For-dwinnen; For, i. e. forth, and dwine or dwindle, (qv.)

FORE, pr. L. Præ; A. S. Foran, fore; D. Voor, voor; Ger. Für, vor, prior or anterior in space or time. In the diagram by Wilkins, for the clearer explication of the local præ, it is placed at the front of the figure of the man, and described as referring either to motion or rest. A-Be-

Fore is very com. written pref; and some few words so formed will require a separate explanation. Many such compounds have descended from A. S. Foran- or fore-accenden, to fore-shew, præ-ostendere. Fore-gan, to fore-go, præ-ire. Fore-sægan, to fore-say, præ-dicere. Fore-thencean, to fore-think, præ-meditari. Before ss. it is an ad.; as Fore-head, fore-head; Fore-ship, fore-ship.

FORE-BODE, v. s. -ING. To see or discern; to shew or exhibit, before, or prior; to prognosticate.

A. S. Fore-bodian, præ-nunciare. Un-

FORE-BY,<sup>2</sup> av. i. e. Forth-by, out by. <sup>1</sup>Spenser.

FORE-CAST, v. s. -ING. To cast in one's mind before hand.—Mins.

To cast or throw (met.) the mind or thoughts forward; to think, to meditate, on what is future, on what is to be or come to pass; to foresee or provide, to anticipate.

FORE-FATHERS, s. Ancestors; gen. those who have lived before.

FORE-GO. See FORE.

FORE-HAND, s. ad. -ED. Any thing taken, placed, done, before; the fore, leading, or chief, part, place or station.

FORE-HEAD, s. The front, or anterior part of the head; above the eyes.

A. S. Fore-head; D. Feur-hoofd, frons, anterior pars capitis.

FOREIGN, ad. Out, or away from, ex-ER. ternal; and cons. extraneous, a-NESS. moved or removed, alien, strange, irrelevant.

Fr. For-ain; It. -estier; Sp. -aneo. From L. Fores, foris; Fr. Fors, forth, out. Equivalent to A. S. Ut-landic; D. Uttlandsch, outlandish; Uttlander, an outlander.

FORE-JUDGE, v. -MENT. To pre-judge or prejudicate; to judge or deem before, sc. trial, examination, proof.

FORE-KNOW, v. To know before; to -ER. have a prescience of, a foresight

-ING. or providence; to foresee, to fore-LEDGE. weat, (qv.)—<sup>1</sup>H. More.

-ABLE.<sup>2</sup> D. Feur-kennen; Ger. Forkennen. Un-

FORE-LOCK, s. The lock, sc. of hair, at the fore or front part of the head; gen. the front.

FORENSIC, ad. -AL. "The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend: thence all sorts of disputations in public assemblies or courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches for or against any person or thing whatsoever, but more especially in civil matters, may come under the name of forensic disputes."—Watts.

L. Forensis, from forum.

FORE-SAY. See FORZ.

FORE-SEE, v. To see before, sc. any

-SEER. thing happens or comes to

-SIGHT. pass; any thing future, or

-SIGHTFUL.<sup>2</sup> that can or may, or is to, be.

<sup>1</sup>Sidney.

A. S. Fore-seon; D. Feur-sien; Ger. För-sehen;

Sw. Försees, prævidere, to see before. Un-

FORE-SHEW. See FORE.

FORE-SHORTEN, v. -SHORTNING. To shorten (to the eye) parts that come or stand forward.

FORE-SKIN, s. Un-

FORE-SPEAK, v. To speak or bespeak, before; to predict, to foretell, good or ill; to fore-doom; and, as witches were supposed to possess this power,—to be-witch, to enchant.

A. S. Fore-sprac-an; D. Vour-spreken, proloqui.

FOREST, s. A forest, no doubt, was a -ED. place of forclosure or exclusion, a -ER. place from which the many were excluded or shut out; and to this effect, Cot., (though probably wrong in the component parts of the word,)—Fr. Forest,—a forrest; a great (and privileged) wood or woody wilderness; some (Frenchmen) have gen. interpreted it (from L. words, foris, and sta), a place whereto the access and entry is forbidden, by the owner, unto others; and hence, it seems, that privileged fishings or large waters (wherein none but the lords thereof could fish) were also termed forests.

Fr. & D. Forest; Sp. Florista; It. & Low L. Foresta; Ger. Forst, forst. Foraster is not uncommonly contracted into forster or foster. Voss. (de Vit. lib. ii. c. 6) is in doubt whether forestum be of L. origin, and so called, quia foris esset, sive extra urbem, et agros; or whether rather the Gauls and others received it from the Normans. Spel. says, so called from the av. Foris or foras, quasi pars forastica seu exterior, hoc est, foris culta et habitata. Sic Gallia, For, and rest; It. Fore, and resta; illud notent quod foris restat. Thus (he adds) a desert, a place deserted and abandoned to wild beasts. He quotes from the Book (qui Niger dicitur, i. e. the Black Book of the Exchequer,) forastica regis est tuta ferarum mansio: q. ferastia, hoc est, ferarum statio. This opinion is ridiculed by Camden. Others (as Du Cange notices) from foris stent. Wach. derives Ger. Forst, from the v. Furen, pascere, nutrire, to feed, to nourish; as L. Nemus, from Gr. Nemai, to feed. Grotius (he tells us) derives from horst, (in Eng. hurst, qv.) & being changed into f. Af-Dis-In-

FORE-STALL, v. -ER. To intercept, to prevent, to preoccupy; to anticipate the occupation or possession; and thus, further, to deprive of the possession.

D. Stallen, staellen, and Fr. Estaller, are, to lay open wares upon a stall; to place or set upon a stall. A. S. Fore-stallan, or fore-stellan, is cons. interciperi, to intercept, i. e. in its way to its stall or station, before it reaches its stall or station, on its road to the market.

FORE-TELL, v. To prophesy, to pre-ER. dict, to pronounce. -ING.

FORE-THINK, v. -THOUGHT. See FORE. Un-

FORE-TOKEN, v. s. -ING. To pre-signify, to foreshew.

A. S. Fore-tacn-tan; D. Vour-teeckenen, pre-signare.

FORE-WARN, v. -ING. To look at, direct the view to, beforehand; to give notice, to caution, to admonish, to apprise, sc. of any thing to come, of consequences. A. S. For-vearnan, to look at or after, to take heed or be cautious. Un-

FORE-WEET,* v. To know before, to -ER. foreknow.—Chaucer. -ING.

FOR-FARE,* v. To go forth, to go away, to depart, to decess, to perish.—Chaucer. A. S. For-faran, to fare or go forth; D. Ver-vaeren, abire, exire, exitum habere, and thus, perire, to perish; Tyrw. says, To fare ill.

FOR-FEAR,* v. To fear or frighten thoroughly, utterly; and thus, Forfered, as Tyrw. says, is—much afraid.—Chaucer.

FOR-FEIT, v. s. ad. To do away or lose—ABLE. to do or put away—a property or -ER. right; to alienate or lose (by a -ING. misdeed or transgression).

-URE. Fr. Forfaire, (for, forth, out; and faire, to do.) Low L. Foris-facere, (q. extraneum facere, says Spel.) to do, or cause to be, out or away from, and cons. transgredi, to transgress, to do amiss, i. misdo. And also, rem suam (sc. ex delicto) amittere, to do away or lose his property, sc. for some crime. Thus Fr. Forfaire is explained by Cot.:—"to sin, offend, commit a fault, misdo, transgress, trespass against; also, to forfeit." And in Chaucer,—Forfalle, to do amiss or misdo. Un-

FOR-FEND, v. To utterly fend or defend; to keep off, to ward off; to prohibit, to forbid, to avert.

As we say, God forfend it, i. e. May God avert or prohibit it; from our fore, for before, and Fr. Défendre, vetare.—Sk. But it is more probably from for, i. e. forth, (Fr. For), and fend, (L. Fend-ere,—used only in composition,—arcem depellere.)

FORFEX, s. App. by Pope to—a pair of scissors.

Forfex dicitur quaal ferrisfacta, ferrum quo quid facimus; the iron or steel with which we do or make any thing.—Voss. And see FORCARE.

FORGE, v. "Fr. Forger, to forge, make, -EDLY. frame, compose, hammer, devise, -ER. coin, invent."—Cot.

-ERY. To form, frame, or fabricate; to -ETIVE.* invent or contrive; to fabricate, sc. any thing counterfeit; to form or make any thing wrongfully to resemble, or in imitation of something else.—Shak.

Fr. For-ger; Sp. Jar; which Men. deducit from fabrica; v. s. fabricare, fabricari, forgere. Re-

FOR-GET, v. s. Anciently written Foryth.

-FUL. To get,—to cause or suffer to get -FULLY. or go forth, pass out or escape -FULNESS. sc. from the mind or memory; -T-ER. from the recollection or remem- -ING. brance; to lose or omit the re- -INGLY. collection or remembrance.

A. S. Forgytan; D. Ver-gheten; Ger. gessen; Sw. Förgetas. For, (qv.) i. e. forth, and get,—to get forth or out, sc. of the mind or memory. Un-

FOR-GHERD,* i. e. Foreyard or fore-court.—Wiclif.

FOR

FOR-GIVE, v. Anciently also written

-REM. For-give.

-RE. To give forth or away, to give up utterly; to relinquish, to remit, to release, to resign, (sc. a right or claim to payment or retribution; anger or resentment;) and cons. to pardon, (perdonner.)

A. S. For-gif-an; D. Vergeven; Ger. Vergeben; Sw. For-gifas; (for, i. e. forth, and give;) to give forth, out, or away, remittere, condonare, to remit or release, and cons. to pardon, (per donare.) Un-

FOR-GNAW, v. pt. Thoroughly, utterly, gnaw, quite gnawn.—Gower.

FOR-GO, v. To go forth or away from; to leave, to relinquish, to quit, to resign, yield or give up; to renounce.

A. S. For-gas, to go forth or away from.

FOR-GROWN, v. ad. Thoroughly, utterly grown, over-grown.

Chaucer. Surrey.

FOR-HAIL, v. To distract, to distress.

Spenser. Browne.

Sw. Forhalla. The Glossarist (E. K.) to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, says, "Draw or distress;" it may be from For, i. e. forth, and hale, to drag or pull along.

FOR-IRKING, v. ad. Thoroughly, utterly irking; sorely troubled.—Mir. for Mag.

FORIS-FAMILIATE, v. A son is said to be forisfamiliaris, (forisfamiliaris;) when he has received from his father a share or portion of his inheritance, and is to expect no more.—Spel. Blackstone.

Low L. Forisfamiliaris is, to place, drive or eject any one foris familiaris, forth from his family.

FOR-JUDGED, v. pt. Judged out of or without law or right, i. e. wrongfully; also, without delay.—Chaucer.

FORK, v. s. A fork,—any thing so divided —EDNESS. as to have two or more pointed —Y. prongs; the barbed point of an —INNESS. arrow. To fork,—

To cleave, or split, or otherwise divide, into two or more prongs: to move with a fork.

Forked, in Shak.—"a fork'd one;" one having forked horns, sc. those of a cuckold; (met.) so divided as to point more than one way; and thus, having two courses or directions, two purposes or meanings.

A. S. Ferc; D. Furche; Ger. Furche; Sw. Fork; It. Forca; Sp. Horca; Fr. Fourche, fourcher; L. Furca. Of uncertain etym. Wach. thinks it may be possible to trace it back to Brachen, to break; quia furca est ferrum bisulcum aut trisulcum, adeoque in fronte ruptum.

FOR-LAY, v. -ING. To lay forth or out (mares) for.

D. Verlaeghen, insidiari, to beset. Forth, and lay; to lay forth or out, sc. in wait for.

FOR-LEFT, v. pt. i. e. Utterly left, entirely left.—Chaucer.

FOR-LESE, v. To lose utterly.

Chaucer.

Ge. For-lusar; A. S. For-leosan; D. Ver-lezen; Sw. For-leas; Dan. Forlitter.

FOR

FOR-LETE, v. To let forth or out, to let pass, to omit, to neglect, to quit, to resign, to renounce.—Chaucer. Gower. Holland.

Mr. Tyrw. says, to give over, to quit. A. S. For-letan; D. Ver-letten, -letten, preter-mittere, omittere, to let pass or omit.

FOR-LORE, v. To lose or cause to lose

-LORE. utterly; to deprive, to take

-LORENESS. away; and the past p. Forlorn, still in so common use, is—

Utterly lost, deserted, forsaken, destitute, solitary.

Chaucer. Gower. Spenser. G. Fletcher.

Mr. Tyrw. says, utterly lost. It is A. S. For-leoran; D. Ver-loren; Ger. -lahren; Dan. For-lorer; Sw. Forlora; Fr. ad. Forlore; Sw. Forlesa. See FORLESS.

FORTH, av. -WITH. Forth, is—out, away from; through, thoroughly; out in a direct course, straight on, onward.

Forth-with, is with-out, sc. delay, loss of time. Vox sanè elegantissima, in the opinion of Sk. Forth is used before many words, to which it might with equal propriety be subjoined. As forth-bring, i. e. bring forth or out.

A. S. Forth; D. Voord; Ger. Fort, furt—ed. says Sk., from L. Fortis, foras, vel perre. The Gr. Gopa (Tooke) became Dor. Φοπα, and L. Fupa, whence foras, foris; and whence It. Fuora, fuori, and Fr. Fora. And of Fr. Fora, our ancestors (by their favourite pronunciation of li) made forth. (See Fox, in Composition.) For, in the passage from Chaucer, (Rom. of the Rose) "Loke out of lond thou be not fore," Toke interprets For, forth. Tyrw. considers it to be the past p. of Fare, A. S. Far-as, to go.

FOR-THINK,* v. To grieve, to vex, to regret or be sorry for.

**Not uncommon in the older writers: Wiclif, Chaucer, &c.*

A. S. For-thencen; perperam cogitare de—Id. To think wrong or rashly concerning (any thing). And Sk.; molestas cogitationes habere, to have troublesome thoughts; and thus, dolere, to grieve.

FORTIFY, v. To strengthen, to defend, -FICATION. to confirm, to assure, to embolden.

-FIER. or encourage.

-TUDE. Fr. Fortifier; It. -care; Sp. -car; L. -FYING. Fortis, strong, anciently Fuellig; from Gr. ἔρκεν, from ἐρρε-ειν, sepire, to fence, to defend. Re-Ūn.

FORTILAGE,* s. A little fort, (qv.)

**Spenser*.

FORT-NIGHT, s. Fourteen nights.

A. S. Fecwætern, (four, and ten), and nicht, night.

From Fortis.—Foss. Fr. Fort-uit; It. & Sp. -uito; L. Fortuitus; (fortis & ferendo;) est enim for, prout res fert, as things happen or fall out. See FORTUNE.

FORTUNE, v. s. Good hap, good luck; -ATE, any hap or luck; success, good -ATELY, or bad; any thing happily or -ATESSA, luckily acquired, attained or -*ABLE** possessed; as a good estate, -LESS† riches, wealth. The v. To for-
-TE,† v. -TE, is—
-OUT.‡ To happen or cause to happen; to give luck or success to.

*Bible, 1551. †Spenser. ‡Chaucer.

Fr. Fort-une, -uner; It. Sp. & L. Fortuna, anciently Fortuna, from fortis or fortius, anciently fortis or fortius. Fortuna uxoris, bona notat; uxor dicebant, Fortis fortuna, i. e. fortis bona; uxor duxit dixerunt fortuna; [sed καταχρηστικῶς tum extrema significatio, ut et de adverso evenit interpretatur.]—Foss. And thus it appears, that fortuna, (from fortis, strong, and so far good,) was orig. used adjectively with for, denoting good hap, good luck; then simply, hap or luck. (See FORTVIT.) Be-Com-In-Mis-Un-

FORTY, ad. Four times ten.

FORUM, s. L. Forum. Varro maintains, a ferendo, because people brought into it their suits for determination, or their goods for sale; or from foras, because it was in the open air. See FORENSIC. Circum-

Fr. Fosse; L. Fossa, a ditch; fossus, the past p. of fodere, to dig. Et-Re-fession.

FOSSET. Properly written Faucet, (qv.)

FOSSEL, s. ad. -IST. By recent mineralogists Fossil appears to be restricted to such forms of organic bodies, animal or vegetable, as have been penetrated by earthy or metallic substances.

Fr. Fossile; L. Fossilis, fossile, that may or can be digged or dug; from Fossus the past p. of fodere, to dig.

FOSTER. See FORESTER.

FOSTER, v. To feed; to nourish or to -ER, nurse, to cherish; to rear or -ING, train up. -LING. A foster-brother,—one fed, nursed as a brother; -father,—one -*IDOE** who feeds, rears, as a father does. -ESSE.† *Raleigh. †B. Jonson.

A. S. Fostrian; D. Voedieren. Probably the same word as A. S. Fothre; D. Voederen, to fodder, to feed; Dan. Fostrer. In A. S. Foster-bearn, (or foster-child;) foster-brother, -fader, -moder.

FOTHER. See FODDER.

FOTHER, s. Father,—a weight, relates (says Ray) properly to lead, and signifies a certain weight, viz. eight pigs or 1600 lbs. Tyrw. says,—A carriage load; an indefinite large quantity.

Sk.; A fodder or fother (from Ger. Fuder),—vectura, or as much as can be contained and carried in a cart. Perhaps from Ger. Feukren, vehere, to carry.

FOUDRE,* s. FOULDER.† "Fr. Fouldroyer,—to dart or cast thunderbolts; to strike, burn or blast with lightning." (Cot.) from Fouldre or foudre, a thunderbolt, and this from L. Fulgur, lightning.

*Chaucer. †Spenser. En-

FOUL, v. ad. To dirty, to pollute, to con-
-LY, taminare. The ad. is app. more -NESS, extensively;—

Dirty, polluted, impure; and thus, disgusting, ugly, odious, disgraceful: opposed to fair,—as foul weather, foul play.

Go. Fuls, foetidus; Dan. Fuul; A.S. Fyl-an, ful-an; D. Fuylen, polluere, contaminare, to pollute, to contaminate, to ste, (qv.) Un-

FOUMART, s. i. e. Foul-mart. An animal (Sk. thinks) of the weasel or ferret kind.

Mart, or Martin; Fr. Martin, mart; Sp. Mar-ta; It. -tino; Low L. Maries. Written by Walton, Fulimari, (see FITCHER.) and by Jun. Fulimar.

FOUND, v. To put, place or lay deeply; -ATION. to place or lay the bottom, -ATIONLESS. ground or basis, i. e. that -ER. upon which any thing may -RESS. stand, be raised or established, from which any thing may rise or spring; and thus, to build or establish, to raise or erect.

Fr. Fond-er; It. -are; Sp. Fundar; L. Fundare, which (Voss.) may be from Gr. Βυθός, interpreted by Hesychius, Βυθός, profunditas, depth. Co-Pro-Re-Un-

FOUND, v. To melt or reduce to a liquid -ER. state, to pour.—**Ford*.

-ERY. Fr. Fon-dre; It. -dere; L. Funders, to -RESS.* melt. In-Re-

FOUNDER, v. -OUS.* A ship is said to founder, when she goes to the bottom.

To come to the ground, to the bottom; to sink; to fall; to fail, to be in a ruined or ruinous state or condition.—**Burke*.

Fr. Fondre; It. Sfondare. (See TO FOUND.) Sk. gives two reasons for deriving from the same origin as the v. To found; one is sufficient. Quod in fundum (i. e.) terram cadit, sc. equus; because he (the horse) falls to the ground. "His hors lepte aside, and foundered as he lepe."—Chaucer. G. Douglas renders ruentem,—foundering.

FOUNDLING, ad. s. i. e. One found; a child found, (previously lost or exposed.) Dan. Funden.

FOUNT, s. (The origin) whence the water

-AIN. pours or wells forth from the -AINLESS. earth. Gen., the origin, source, -FUL. spring; first principle or cause.

Fr. Font-aine; It. -e, -ana; Sp. Fuente; L. Fons. Var. says, Fons, unde funditur e terra aqua viva. See FOUR.

FOUR, s. One less than five, (qv.)

FOURTEEN, Fourteen,—Four and ten.

FOURTEEN. Goth. Fidwor, fidur; A.S. Fower; -TEENTH. D. & Ger. Vier; Sw. Fyra; Dan. Fire.

The Eolians (says Jun.) wrote veropa, from veropa; whence, he thinks, the Goth. Fidwor.

FOURBE, s. Fr. Fourbe, is a wile, guile or deceit.—Cot. Denham applies the word to the deceiver.

FOUTY, s. Fr. Foutu,—Un foutu, a scoundrel, a fellow of small account.—Cot.

Dr. Jamieson gives instances of the usage of this word in Sc. writers; it is still common in the north of England.

FOWL, v. z. That which flieth; a bird.

-ING. To fowl,—to hunt, pursue, destroy, -ER. fowl.

D. Fog-hel; Ger. -el; Sw. Fogel; Dan. Fugl; A.S. Fug-el; pass. p. of Fleog-an, flogan, foglan, volare, to fly.

FOX, s. An animal, which may be so -ERY. called from his slyness and cunning, or from his rapacity.

-Y. -ISH. "Fox was a familiar and favourite

-LY. expression for the old Eng. weapon, -SHIP. the broad-sword of Jonson's days, as distinguished from the small (foreign) sword."—Gifford, B. Jonson. Archdeacon Nares (Gloss. ad v.) inclines to think that fox was not a cant term, but a specific name for some kind of blade manufactured in England; perhaps, with the steel browned, which might give occasion for the name; or it might be named from the inventor.

Goth. Fauh; A.S. Fox; D. Fox, sease, sech; Ger. Fuchs; Serenius from Su. Goth. Fox, deipere. And Wach. remarks, that the Ger. Fuchs, is frequently dolo capere; and Fox, decipere. Goth. Fig-an, inimicitias exercere. A.S. Fram, (whence the Eng. Foe.) may be the root. The A.S. Fax, seas, hair (see FAXED.) has also been urged.

FOX, v. (See the s.) To deceive, to intrap, to insnare; and thus, to intoxicate, to make drunk.

FOY, s. Fr. Foy,—Faith.

FRACT,* v. A breach or rupture; a

-ION. breaking of an integer or entire

-IONAL. whole into parts; a separation,

-IOUS. a discontinuity. Barrow term-

-URE, v. s. Fractions,—fracted numbers.

FRAG-ILE. Fragile,—that can or may be

-ILITY. broken; easy to be broken;

-MENT. brittle; and therefore, weak.

-MENTARY. Fractious; as a fractious temper, —a temper easily disturbed or broken; fretful, peevish: a word common in speech.

Shak.

Frango, (Voss.) prius fuit frage. Fr. Frangere; L. Fractio, from Frangere, fractum, to break: which Voss. says, may either be from the Heb. Frangere, frangere; or from the Gr. Frangere, frangere; or from the Gr. Frangere, frangere; with f pref. Frang, or frac, with the difference of cognate f for b, is Drac, trac. See BREAK. Am-In-Con-Re-

FRAGOR, s. A breach; a rupture; a crash. This word occurs in Herbert's Travels, for fragrance: he talks of the fragour of gardens, the fragor of musk. L. from Frangere, to break.

FRAGRANT, ad. Breathing forth,

-ANTLY. issuing forth, throwing out, a

-ANCE. scent or odour; sweet to the

-ANCY. sense of smelling; an agreeable perfume, odoriferous.

It. Fragrante; L. Fragnans, from the neut. frago, for frango; Voss., who adds, from frango on 1. En: Quoties incendium significatur, quod fractu alitur, per f (fragras) dicimus; quod fractu specie major est, per b dicimus (frangit).

FRAIL, ad. Easily broken; liable

-NESS. easily overcome or persuaded; weak

-TY. or infirm, unsteady or unstable.

Corrupted from Fragile. (qv.) Fr. Frail, fragile; It. Frail, fragile; Sp. Frágil; L. Frágilis, that can or may be broken.

FRAIL, s. A frail for figs or raisins.

So called a fragilitate. Fr. Petit panier frail.—Mins. But Sk. truly observes, that frailty or brittleness is not at all a characteristic of some and profess the lt. Frigit, an enfolding or interweaving of bows, from L. Flagella, (see FLAGELLATE), especially app. to the vine: the shoots of the vine. The old Fr. Frage, fralais, is said by Rousset to be a basket of rushes. See Nares; and Moore's Suffolk Words.

FRAISCHEUR, s. "Fr. Fraischeur,—coolness, freshness; newness; lustiness."—Cot.

A word (Sk.) which I have met with only in the English Dictionary: from Fr. Fraicheur, moderate coolness. It is used by Dryden.

FRAKNES. See FRECKLE.

FRAME, v. s. -ER. See TO FORM.

A. S. Fremman, faccere, facessere, formare, efficere, to make, to frame, to effect.—Som. Mis-Re-Us.

FRANCHISE, v. s. ad. -MENT. To free, to set at liberty; to give freedom to, to endow with the liberties and privileges of a free citizen, town, or state; to endow.

Franchise, in Chaucer, is, (as Tyrw. interprets it),—frankness, generosity. "To do so high a cherlish wretchednesse, ageins franchise, and alle gentillesse."

Fr. Franchis; lt. Francare. Spel. says,—Franchi, quasi seruati, i. e. seruati. Jun.,—Franchi, a liberata gente Francorum. Sk., Franchi; unde, u. sicut, ortum est Francorum et Francie nomen, et libertatem olim gentis insignem. See FRANK. De En- or In-

FRANGIBLE, ad. -ILITY. That can or may be broken.

Fr. Frangible; L. Frangere, to break. See FRAGILE Un-

FRANION, s. A companion.

Mr. Todd, (Spenser, vol. iii. p. 283, quotes from Heywood's Edward IV.: "He's a frank franion, a merry companion." &c. And it may be from A. S. Fraon, a friend.

FRANK, s. A Frank, or French coin.

Nomus Francicus.

FRANK, v. s. ad. "Frank, free; at liberty; -LY. subject unto no man; exempt from -NESS. subsidies, duties, or services; also, frank, liberal, bountiful, courteous, gracious; also, valiant, hardy, bold, courageous; also, plain, round, open-hearted; sincere, honest."—Cot.

To frank,—to free, sc. letters or other things from payment of postage or other charge.

A frank,—a letter, &c. so freed. See FRANK, infra.

See FRANCHISE. Fr. Franc. Cot. fully explains the usages of the ad. Franc, m. franche, L.

FRANK, v. ad. -LY. "Fr. Franc,—a frank or stye, to feed and fatten hogs in."

—Cot. A frank or franch,—a place where animals are freely fed, liberaliter saginatur. To frank fowl,—to stuff or cram fowl; from the ad. Frank, free; qd. birds freely fed.—St. Perhaps Eng. Rank, adj. may be the origin.

FRANKINCENSE, s. Mins. says, Frankincense,—free incense. To the same purport, Sk. and Jun. Incense freely and liberally offered.

FRANKLIN, s. "There is scarce a small village in which you may not find a knight, an esquire, or some substantial householder, commonly called a franklyn; all men of considerable estates."—Fortescue.

From Frank, (qv.) Sk. says, Libertus, libertinus, municeps. And Spel.—Qui liber tenet; libertus, municeps.

FRAPE, s. Hearne says,—Frape, clutter, -LER. hurly burly; from Fr. Frappé, -LING. struck, knocked, rapt, &c. Bullo- -PET. kar,—Frape, a company, a rabble. Gifford,—that Frapler is a quarreller, a bully.

Perhaps from Fr. Frappier; and of the etym. of Fraper, Men. acknowledges that there exists a great diversity of opinions; the A. S. Rap-an, fre-mere, is, perhaps, the true origin. See F.

FRATERNAL, ad. Fraternal,—of or -N-ITY. pertaining to brothers or brethren, v. thren, to brotherhood; to those -IZATION. united or conjoined as brothers -IZER. or brethren; brotherly.

To fraternize, is a word revived, not created, during the Fr. Revolution. Cot. says,—

"Fraternizer,—to fraternize, concur with, be near unto, agree as brothers."

Fr. Fraternité; lt. -ale; Sp. -al; L. Fraternus, from Frater, a brother. Cot.

FRAUD, s. Deceit, guile, cheating, -FUL. treachery.

-FULLY. Upon the word Fraud, in Milton's

-UL-ENT. Paradise Lost, b. 7, Richardson

-ENTLY. (followed by others) remarks,

-ENCE. that "Milton, who so constantly

-ENCY. makes L. or Gr. of Eng., does it here, and extends the idea of the misery, the punishment, consequent upon the deceit, as well as the deceit itself." The word in Milton, ("And into fraud drew many,") has no other meaning than in other writers, —viz. deceit, treachery.

Fr. Fraude; lt. Fraude, frode; L. Fraus, (i. e. Fraud-s) of uncertain origin. May it not have sprung from the A. S. Reaf-ian,—raef, rae, rae-ed, rae'd, raud, with the pref. be changed into p, ph, f; and have been orig. app. to—violence, violent robbery. De-

Low L. Frattare. Cot. says, "To hire a ship of burden; and to fraught or load her, hired." (See FRIGHT.) The edition of Chaucer quoted by Jun. reads, "Frä her shippes new." Over- Un-

FRAY, v. s. -ING. To rub, to ruffle, to put out of order, to disorder, to confuse or confound, to disturb, to harass; to raise a broil or quarrel, to quarrel. And, cons.—

D. Fretis, crassus, fretis; Ger. Fressen, to eat, to devour, to prey upon. Jun. says, he thinks that Fret was formerly used for comedere, rodere, manducare, to eat, to gnaw, to chew or chaw; and afterwards was transferred to those whose bitter cares corrode their irritated mind, mordent atque ardent. A fretful man, like the envious man in Ennius, is one, ipse suum cor edens. Fretit, he adds, the Eng. apply ad animum aegrè ferentium aliquid, quod minimè possunt conquiere, to the mind of those who bear impatiently any thing which they cannot digest. FRÊT, s. s. -IÆT,* v. To cut or carve into many parts, which rise, jet forward or project.

Fret, (in Music, probably from the It. Fratto),—a break or stop to the continuity of sound.—North.

Jun thinks, from A. S. Frat-wian, ornare, adornare, exornare, to trim, to deck, to adorn, to garnish. Sk.—from It. Fratto, fractus, as it is a kind of work distinguished by frequent fractures and incisions; or by being broken or cut into many parts.

FRETE, or FRÊT. See FRITH.

FRIABLE, ad. -ILITY. That can or may be separated or sundered; easy to be sundered or reduced to small particles; easily crumbled.

Fr. Friable; L. Friabilis, from friare, to separate or sunder. Un-

FRIAR, s. Gen. app. to—A brother of -LY. a religious order or community.

-LING. Fr. Frère; It. Frate; L. Frater, a brother. Dis-

FRIBBLE, v. s. -ER. To be weak, to act weakly, frivolously, triflingly, idly; to trifle.

Corrupted from Fr. Fricole. See FRIVOLOUS.

FRI-BORGH, s. "Every hundred was divided into many freeborghs or tithings consisting of ten men, which stood all bound for the other."—Spel.

A. S. Freo-borh, fræ-junior: from A. S. Freo, liber, free; and borh, vas, a security. See BOROUGH; and see also Friborgh, in Spel. Gloss.

FRICASSEE, v. s. or FRICASS. To parch, to dry, to fry.

A word (Sk.) lately introduced into our country. From Fr. Fricassée, from c. Fricasser; and this from L. Frigere, qd. cibus frigus, frictura, frizatura.

FRICATION,* s. Sir T. Elyot has a FRIC-TION. chapter "Of fricasies, or rubbing, or bynges." And B. Jonson appears to use the word Fricace in an exactly similar manner, though by some supposed to apply it to the medicament rubbed.

Friction,—a rubbing, or motion of one or more things in close contact with others.

*Bacon. Brown.

L. Fricare, fricatum, frictum, to rub, (which Ven. derives from the Chaldee and Syr.)

FRIDAY, s. A. S. Frige-dæg; D. Vriid-dæg; Ger. Frei-tag; which Wach. thinks is so called from Friga, the wife of Woden and mother of Thor; from whom Wednesday and Thursday are respectively named. See also Mareschal on the word Frieg-dæg; and Verstegan. Jun. (Gloss. Goth. 409,) from a deity called Fricco, whose province it was to bestow peace and pleasure upon mortals.

325

FRIDGE, v. -ING. To rub, to rub to and fro; to move to and fro.

"To fridge or frig about, from A. S. Fric-an, to dance."—Sk. It is from It. Freg-are; L. Fric-are, to rub.

FRIEND, v. s. To act as a friend or well-wisher, as one who loves, who -LY, ad. av. wishes well; who would benevolently serve or favour, support or protect.

-SHIP. Go. Frigonda; A. S. Freond; D. Friend. Manifestly (says Jun.) from the Go. Frigon, to love, whose pl. is frigonda, loving. And Tooke,—"Friend, i. e. friland, freond, the p. p. of Frian, freon, to love, means (subaud. any one, some one,) loving." Upon this pl. the v. To friend has been formed; Befriend is now the usual word. Af- Be- Un-

FRIEZE, s. -ED. A warm cloth of coarse manufacture.

D. Fries, fries; Fr. Frise, drap de frise; Sp. Frisa, perhaps so called from the Frisians, (in Friez-land.) See MEN. and SK.

FRIEZE, or FRIZE, s. In Architecture, the flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice.

Fr. Frise; It. Fregio; Sp. Friso, which Men. thinks may be from L. Phrygionæ, à Phrygiæ, who were the reputed inventors of ornaments in dress, architecture, &c. Be-

FRIGATE, s. "Commissioner Pett invented that excellent and new ornament of the navy which we call frigate."—Evelyn.

Fr. Friga-te; It. -ta; Sp. Fragata; which (Sk. thinks) may be from It. Frèpare, to rub or polish; or frègiare, to adorn; a ship much rubbed or polished, or adorned. Wach. from Go. Farjan, remigrare, to move with oars; but a name so originating would, as Ferrarius objects, apply to all vessels moved with oars. It has perhaps the same origin as Brig, or corrupted from Brig by change of B into the cognate F.

FRIGHT, v. s. To feel or cause the -EN. feeling or sensation of dread or -FUL. terror; to terrify.

-FULLY. Fright-ful, (as in Browne,)—-FULNESS. full of the sensation of fright or terror; (fearful.) In Ford,—full of things or appearances which cause the sensation of fright or terror; (dreadful.) "See how the frightful heards run from the wood."—Browne. "When first they ventur'd on a frightful shore."—Ford.

Go. Faurhtan; A. S. Frihtan, terrere, to fright or affright, to terrify, frighten or make afraid.—Som. D. Fruchten; Ger. Furchten; Sw. Frukta; Dan. Frygter. Af- Un-

FRIGID, ad. Chill or cold; met. without

-ITY. vivacity or liveliness, sensi-
-LY. bility or spirit; dull, heavy,
-NESS. torpid.

-GORIFIC. Fr. Froid; It. & Sp. Frigido; L. -GEFACTIVE. Frigidus, from Frig-ere, which (Voss. says) is either from Gr. Frigein, rig-ere, to stiffen, or from frigus, shuddering. Perhaps Go. Baig-an, A. S. Birg-an, to strengthen. In-frigidate, Re-frigerate.

FRIM, ad.* Grose says,—"Handsome, rare, well-liking, in good case; as, a frim tree or beast, a thriving tree or beast," (North.) **Drayton*.

In A. S. Freom, or freomic, is strong, stout.—Som.

FRINGE, v. s. -Y. "Fr. Franger,—to fringe, to edge or set with fringe; also, to crumple, wrinkle, jag or snip on the edges."—Cot.

Fr. Frange; It. -gia; Sp. -ja; D. -gie, frangie; Dan. Frynse; Ger. Frausen, which Wach. would derive from Gr. Περικερα, cingere, circumdare, inserto &c. Others derive the word Fringe from L. Fimbria. See FIMBRIATE. Be-

FRIPPER, s. -Y, s. ad. A dealer in things worthless; furniture, clothes, or other articles. "Which kind of collections are like a fripper's or broker's shop, that hath ends of every thing, but nothing of worth."—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Watts.

From Fr. Fripper-is; It. -is, a shop for worn-out clothes. From L. Fritolium, worthless, (see FRIVOLOUS.) Voss. deduces Fritolarii, sellers of worthless furniture, clothes, &c. And hence may the Fr. & It. have sprung.—See Sk.

FRISK, v. ad. s. "Fr. Frisque,—frisk, -AL.* lively, jolly, blithe, brisk, fine, spruce, -ER. gay."—Cot.

-FUL. To frisk,—to dance briskly; to jump, -ING. leap, skip or caper, gaily, blithely, -Y. frolicsomely.—**B. Jonson*.

Sk. (without noticing A. S. Fric-ian, saltare,) says, from It. Friskare, alacriter saltitare; and this from Fr. Frisque, alacer, vividus, agilis, lætus. Brisk and Frisk are probably the same word; differing only in the first letter, (the cognates b and f;) and Fresh seems only to differ in the application.

FRITH, s. An outlet; a passage out.

Sk. says, Frith, æstuarium, from L. Fretum; but as the word exists neither in It. nor Fr., this is very improbable; and Dr. Jamieson remarks, that Fretum itself may, with more probability, be viewed as orig. Go. The Sw. Flaerd, Ihre thinks, may be from Fera, proficisci, sen terra, sive mari, and thus, navigare. Frith or Frith seems properly app. to an outlet or passage out, from A. S. v. For-an, to go; of which Ford, (qv.) is the past p. Hackluyt writes, "Fret, frete, or straight, of Magellan;" and Sir T. Brown, "strait, fret, or channel," immediately from L. Fretum.

FRITH, s. -Y.† A wood; because among the Saxons woods and groves were esteemed sacred, and considered as the places of asylum or sanctuary, (Sk.) in which those who fled to them were saved harmless.

**Fabyan. Drayton.* †Shelton.

A. S. Frith-ian is—protégere, immunem vel quietum præstare, vel custodire; to protect, to defend, to acquit, keep and save harmless, secure.—Som. And from this v. the s. Frith, as Sk. thinks, was app.—as above.

FRITINANCY, s. L. Fritinnire; formed from the sound. Spoken of swallows and other small birds.—Voss. **Brown.*

FRITTER, v. s. A fritter,—any thing small—fried.

To fritter,—to prepare in small portions for frying; and, gen. to reduce to small particles.

Fr. Fritons; friture, a frying; frit, fried. From Fr. to fray, (qv.)

FRIVOLOUS, ad. Weak, trifling, idle; -OUSLY. of no value, no stability.

-OUBNESS. Fr. Fricol-s; It. & Sp. -o; L. Frivolus. Voss. adopts the etym. of Budæus, fricare, i. e. conterere, to bruise, to crumble; fritolium, being equivalent to fribile, that may be bruised, broken, or crumbled; and thus infirm, weak, of no value. See FAIBLE, and FAIPPE.

FRIZZ, v. "Fr. Frizer,—to frizzle, crisp

-ZLE, v. s. curl, (as water,) blown on by a

-LING. gentle wind, ruffle, braid"—Cot.

-SEUR, OR Fr. Fris-er; Sp. -ar; D. -ren. From the s. Frize, (qv.) Fr. Fris, Ma, thinks the v. is formed.

FRO, av. In old writers, and still in common speech, Pro is used as a pr.; it is a constant use adverbially, in opposition to To. See FROM.

FROCK, s. An upper garment or vestment, so. to cover the whole body, or the rest of the clothing.

Men. from L. Floccus; Voss. (more probably is Sk.'s opinion) from Ger. Rock; but whence, he adds, is rock?—from A. S. Wron, tegere, to cover; qd. wrocc, tegumentum, a covering. Voss. (de Vit. c. 8) calls it vestis monachalis. (See ROCK, ROCKERY.) Spel. also has said, Idem forte quod Roccus. The London labouring people at this day call the garment which they draw on over their other clothing, a froc.—Spel. Gloss. Arch. Un-

FROE, s. App. by Drayton, Bean & F. and others, to—a Bacchanalian woman. Mr. Brocket says,—a slattern, a lusty female; Grose,—an idle, dirty woman.

From D. Frow; Ger. Frau, a woman.

FROG, s. -HOOD. An animal.

A. S. Frocca, froce; D. Forsck; Ger. Frosch; Dan. Froe, (the animal;) so called, Sk. thinks, from the hoarse sound they utter; & resuscitant sono.

Frog,—of a horse's foot,—perhaps of the same origin as Fridge, or Froise, or Fresh, (qv.)

FROISE, FROYSE, s. More moderately Fraise.

Moore, (Suffolk Words,) calls it—a pancake.—**Gower*.

Frisura; either from L. Frizare, frigare; or from Fr. Froiser, to bruise, crush, break, crumble; because in the preparation of this kind of food eggs are beaten up, and mixed with meal softened with water.—Sk.

FROLIC, v. s. ad. To leap through joy;

-LY. to bound, to spring with joyfulness

-NESS. or gaiety; to be sportively gay or

-SOME. joyful, to play gay or sportive tricks.

D. Frollich; Ger. Fröhlich. Ger. Fröhlich, gaudio extilire, to leap through joy; from fröhlich, and lachen, exultare.—Wach. Ger. Fre, from A. S. Free, free; and lachen, from A. S. Le-an, ge-luk-an, to like, to please.

FROM, Frø, pr. Dan. Fra; A. S. From, fra, à, abs, ex, de.—Som. In Ger. From, the significations of which Wach. undertakes to settle; and he says that From signifies, 1st, Motum de loco, motion from a place; whence A. S. Fram-geon, aufugere, proci fugere, to fly from, to fly far. 2d, Absentiam à loco, absence from a place; whence A. S. Fram-standan, ab stare, to stand from. 3d, Fram is an av. of order, signifying præ; whence, he observes, Go. and A. S. Frama, principium, beginning.

Harris says, that from denotes the detached relation of body, as when we say, "These figs came from Turkey." So as to motion and rest, only with this difference, that here the pr. varies its character with the a. Thus, if we say, "That lamp hangs from the ceiling," the pr. From assumes the character of quiescence. But if we say, "That lamp is falling from the ceiling," the pr. in such cases assumes a character of motion.—Hermes, b. ii. c. 3.

Tooke denies that From (or indeed any other word) can have so versatile a character as that ascribed to it by Wach. and Harris; and asserts this pr. to be that same Go. and A. S. s. Fram or frama, which Wach. conceives to be itself derived from the pr.; and he considers the word (though used as a pr.) to have one clear, uniform, and unequivocal meaning, viz. beginning, origin, source, fountain, author. He further proceeds to show, that the characters of quiescence and motion, attributed to the pr., belong to the respective vv. hang and fall. Johnson, he observes, gives seventy different instances of the use of From, and twenty different meanings: a few of these instances it will be proper to explain, whence it will appear, that Johnson has transferred to the pr. the meaning of some other word in the sentence.

Thus, "To take from your power, to take from your side, to draw from a case;" privation (ascribed to the pr.) is expressed by the vv. take and draw.

"From steel receives;" reception, by the s. receives.

"From his secret cloud uttered;" emission, by the v. utter.

"To start from the goal; to free from jealousy;" separation and exemption, by the vv. start and free.

From refers to time as well as motion.

FRONDATION, s. "Frondation, or the taking off some of the luxuriant branches and sprays of such trees, especially whose leaves are profitable for cattle, is a kind of pruning."—Encyclop.

Fr. Fronde; L. Frons, frondis, a leaf; which Yon. derives from Gr. Bpovov, pullulare, to put forth, to bud.

FRONT, v. s. Front, from Lat. Frons, —AL. is equivalent to the Eng. —IER, s. ad. v. Fore, the fore-part, the face. —LESS. And To front, v. or affront, —LET. (qv.)— stand in the front or fore-part; to oppose, to face.

Fr. Front; It. Fronte; Sp. Fronte; L. Frons, perhaps from apponere, quia frons cogitationum curarumque index; but Var. (Voss. adds) ab oculorum foraminibus nominatum ait. Ad- Con- Et-

FRONTISPIECE, s. A view, sight, inspection of the front; the front-view; any thing viewed or seen in or at the front.

Fr. Frontis-piece, the frontispice or fore-front of a house.—Cot. It. & Sp. Frontispicio; Mid. L. Frontispicium, frontis inspectio, from Frons, the front or fore part, and specere, to see.

FRORE, ad. Frosted, frozen, rigid, stiff —Y. Mr. Todd, in his Spenser, (vol. i. p. 45.)

FRORNE calls Frone, a passive pt. of the v. To freeze. Frone (whence Frone) is more probably immediately from D. Froor, deerooren, to freeze.

FROST, s. "Frost is the past p. of Frys-an,

—ED. to freeze; formed thus,—frosed,

—Y. fros'd, frost."—Tooke. See To —ILY. FREEZE.

—INESS. A. S. Ger. Sw. & Dan. Frost; D. Frost.

FROTH, v. s. To throw or issue forth,

—Y. froth or foam.

—INESS. Frothy, (met.) — insubstantial, rapid.

Sw. Fragga; Dan. Fraade. Ihre, Jun. and Sk. content themselves with the etym. proposed by M. Casaubon:—Gr. Apfor, spuma. Perhaps Fray-eth or Froy-eth, the third pers. of To fray, (qv.)

FROUNCE, v. s. —LESS. To wrinkle, to contract or draw together—as wrinkles; to ruffle up, to plait or twist, or fold; to frown, (qv.)

Fr. Froncer, l. e. plaiser et rider, to plait, to wrinkle.—Men. Salmassius says, Frontiam vulgo rugam aut plicam appellamus, à fronte, quæ rugis maxime contrahi solet et cæperari.

FROUNCE, s. A disease among hawks; when a dirty white foam gathers in wrinkles about the mouth and palate.

From Fr. Froncer, rugare, complicare. See FROUNCE, ante.

FROUZY, ad. Frowz.* The Glossarist to Spenser says, "Mustie or mossie." Perhaps from the D. Frow, a woman; in the North, Frow is app. to an idle, dirty woman.—Grose. Dr. Jamieson says,—a lusty woman. See Frow, in Jamieson.

**Spenser*.

FLOWARD, ad. Averse or perverse;

—LY. morose.

—NESS. From A. S. Fram-weard, (aversus, morosus,) averse or averted, and therefore morose; opposed to—toward, towardly.—Sk.

FROWN, v. s. To contract or draw toge-—ER. ther, sc. the forehead, the brow.

—ING. **Langhorne*.

FRUBBISH. See FURNISH.

FRUCTIFY, v. To bear or cause to bear, -IFICATION. or bring forth or produce; to -FEROUS. fertilize, to make or render productive, profitable, useful.

-U-ACTION. **Pyrrhus*.

-OUS. Fr. Fructifer; It. Fructifera; Sp. Fructifera; L. Fructus, from Frui; and frui is a word—quod pertinet ad omnia, unde utilitatem capere est; from Gr. Φωπος, useful; and this, from Φωπειν, to bear.—Voss.

FRUGAL, ad. Thrifty, husbanding, or -LY. careful of, his stores; temperate in -ITY. the use of them; economical.

Fr. Frugalitas; It. Uità; Sp. Uidad, from Frugi, (see FRUCTIFY). Frugi is—propriè, unde frugum possit habere, sive quo frui queas.—Voss. Also app. to one, who was fruitful or serviceable to himself or others, by his thrift.

FRUGIFEROUS, ad. Bearing, or bringing forth, fruit.

L. Frugifer; from frus, frugis, fruit, and ferre, to bear. See FRUCTIFY.

FRUIT, v. s.* To bear or bring forth or -AGE. produce.

-ERER. The s.—that which is borne or

-ERY. produced; and thus, an effect or

-FUL. consequence, whether a benefit

-FULLY. or the reverse.

-FULNESS. Fruition,—the possession, use

-ION. or enjoyment, of the fruit; and,

-LESS. gen. enjoyment.

-LESSLY. Fruitestere, (in Chaucer),—a

-LESSNESS. female seller of fruit.—Tyrw.

-IVE.* **W. Mountague*.

Fr. Fruit; It. Frut-ta, -to; Sp. -to, from L. Fructus, from Frui. See FRUCTIFY.

FRUMENT, s. -RY. Mins. says,—Fru-mentis, pottage made of wheat—also of various other kinds of grain.

Fr. Fromentis; Sp. Frumentada; L. Frumentum,—a frumento, from corn, grain, of which it is made. Also written Frumentary.

FRUMP, v. s. To mock, to gibe, to flout, to scoff.

A word common among our elder writers. Sk. transcribes from Mins. Ger. Krumb, crooked; or from Crumptelen or Rumpelen, (qd. serump: see F.) to turn up the nose, as those use who scoff or deride. In his second edition, Mins. decides for the latter. The Ger. Krumm, crooked, (Krumpen, to crook, to contract, to wrinkle,) is cognate with Eng. Crumple. Frump, whatever may have been its origin, and Frampold, are probably connected.

FRUSH, v. Frush, s.—of the foot of a horse. As the "Fr. Froisser,—to crush, burst or break in pieces; also to crush, quash, bruise; also, to dash, knock or clatter together."—Cot. See FRUISE.

Fr. Froisser is, by Casen, derived from Fressus, the past p. of Frendere, to bruise; and by Men., with less plausibility, from Frangere, to break.

FRUSTRATE, v. ad. To disappoint, to -ATING. render fruitless, to avoid or an -ATION. nul; to deceive, defraud, balk or -ANEOUS.* beguile, the hopes or expecta -ATORY.† tions.—South. †Cot.

Fr. Frustrer; L. Frustrare, from Frustra, which Voss thinks is from Fraudare; quia quod frustra sit, fraudes desiderium ejus, qui id facit.

FRUTICANT, ad. Bearing fruit, fruiting.

L. Fruticans, from frutis, fruticis, fruit.

FRY, v. s. To dry, to parch, to heat;—app. to a particular mode of dressing or cooking victuals.

Fr. Frire; It. Friggere; Sp. Freyer; L. Frigere, from Gr. Φρυγ-ειν, which Voss considers to be formed from the sound.

FRY, s. App. to—A numerous progeny, or race, or offspring; a swarm (part of small young fishes).

Fr. Fray, the spawn of fish; Freyer, to rob; also, to spawn as fishes. Men from Fricus, quia pisces affricis coeunt. Sk. from the Dan. Fread, spuma, froth.

FUB, v. s. -BERY.* A fub or fubs, is, perhaps, one fubbed or fobbed, cheated or gulled; and thus app. to a fat, chub-headed person. See TO FOE.

Fubs, Fubby, are in common speech app. to children.—Marston.

FUCATE,* ad. Coloured, varnished.

-CUR. **Sir T. Elyot*. †Holland.

FOKE,† s. L. Fuce-re, -sum, to stain or tinge with a colour or dye.

FUDDLE, v. To fill, sc. with strong drink; to intoxicate.

Still a common word in the Northern parts of England. Sk. observes, that the Sc. use Fall, and the Ger. Foll, pro ebrio,—for drunk; and that hence Fudle may be formed by the insertion of the letter d, (it is perhaps Fut-dle; and this mean—as above explained.

FUDGE, int. Perhaps from Fough or Faugh, (qv.) and used as equivalent to—bamboozle, humbug.

FUEL. See FEWEL.

FUELLE-MORT. See FEUILLE-MORT.

FUGITIVE, ad. s. The s. is—One who -NRAS. may or can fly: app. to one

-GAC-Y.* who does fly; a runaway.

-IOUS.† The ad.—able to fly; volatile.

-IOUSNESS.† fleeting.

-ITY.† **Milton*. †Boyle. †Ecclyn.

Fr. Fugitif; It. gitivo; Sp. itivo; L. Fugitivus, from Fugere; Gr. Φευγ-ειν, to fly. It. Subter-fuge.

FUGUE, s. Sk. has Fugue, which, he says, he had nowhere seen, except in the Eng. Dictionary; and which he explains, "A certain harmony or consent in Music." Cot. has the same word, and calls it, "A chase or report of music, like two or more parts in one." Bacon writes Fuges.

It. Fuga, from L. Fuga, flight.

FULCIMENT, s. FULCRUM. That which underprops, supports, sustains or upholds. App. to the central prop, upon which any thing may turn.

L. Fulcimen, from Fulcire; "Fr. Fulcr, to under-set, underprop, support, sustain, uphold."—Cot.

FULFIL, v. To fill full, to complete; -LER. and thus, to accomplish, to per -LING. form fully or completely, to supply.

Fr. Fulgent, p. p. of Fulgere; Gr. Φλαγ-ειν, ardere, to burn. Et. Pre-Pro-Re.

FUM

FULIGINOUS, ad. -LY. Consisting of, resembling, that black substance, which is condensed from the fat smoke of things burnt, and which adheres to the flue or walls.

L. Fuligo, (perhaps Fumiligo, from Fumus, smoke.) nigrum illud, quod ex pingui uotum fumo condensatur, et camino, vel parietibus adheret.—Voss.

FULL, ad. s. as. See To FILL. Full is -Y. much used pref. It is also much -NESS. used affixed, with no other necessary limitation than that of cautious discretion:—Fearful; i. e. full of the feeling of fear; also of that which causes or excites the feeling:—handful, mouthful; i. e. of any thing, any substance,—bread, water. Various words with this term. formerly in common use, have ceased to be so, and others are of modern creation. It receives the terms ly and ness, with the same limitation.

Go. Full; A. S. Full; D. Vol; Ger. Volt; Sw. Full; Dan. Fuld, past tense and past p. of A. S. Fyllan, to fill, (qv.) Over-

FULL, v. -ER. To tread or trample down, beat or press down; and thus, to thicken.

A. S. Fyllian, fullere, polire vestes, to full a piece of cloth.—Som. D. Follen, telam laneam rudem subigere pedibus, subaltando identidem fulsum sicut vestimenta calcare, premere, et densare, (Kilian.)—to trample upon, press, and thicken cloth. Fr. Foulter, to tread or trample on, from L. Fello, from Gr. Nukow, or rather, Voss, thinks, fullores, of the same signification, viz. to thicken.

FULMINE, v. To throw forth light or -ATE, s. lightning; to act with the effect -ATION. of lightning, (or thunder, the accompaniment of lightning;) to menace or denounce with the noise or loudness, the swiftness of thunder.—Spenser. Milton.

L. Fulmen, ad eo, quod ignis propter splendorem fulget; fulgor, fulmenque et fulgur.—Varro, lib. IV.

FULSOME, ad. Foul, gross, rank; and -LY. thus, nauseous.

-NESS. Mr. Tyrw. interprets Fulsumness, satiety; and Jun. says, Nauseous, whatever from the great abundance provokes nausea, from full, plenus. Wallis also considers it to be a comp. of full and some. Sk. adds, —or qd. Foulsome; and in this he appears to reach the truth.

FULVID, ad. Tawny, yellow.—H. More. L. Fulvidus; fulvus, from fulgere. See FULGENT.

FUMAGE, s. "Mention is made in Domesday Book of Fumages or Fuage, commonly called smoke farthings, paid by custom to the king for every chimney in the house."—Blackstone.

From L. Fumus, smoke.

FUMBLE, v. To do any thing, to act, -ER. inefficiently, inaptly, bunglingly, -ING. weakly; to act with imbecile effort -INGLY. or exertion, where the thing aimed at is scarcely touched or reached.

D. Fumelen; Sw. Fumla. Manibus ultro citroque pertentare ut solent, qui in tenebris obambulant.—Ihre, who thinks the L. Fumus to be of the same family. Sk.'s interpretation is, Impet tractare seu rem aggredi, to handle, manage or attempt any thing foolishly or inaptly.

FUN

FUME, v. s. To smoke, to vapour, to -Y. evaporate, to exhale; and met.

-IGATE, v. to effervesce with any ebullition

-IGATION. of passion; to swell or glow

-ING. with any idle fancy or vain conceit.—Evelyn. Brown. Udall.

-INGLY. Berners. Lord Cobham (in

-ID. Foze.) Evelyn. Wilson. Sir

-ISH.† T. Elyot. Holland.

-OSITY.‡ the Eng. use the v. To vapour; He fumeth and vapoureth, from L. Fumus, smoke, exhalation. Sk. prefers Ger. Fausm, foam; to foam through passion. In A. S. Fuman, spumare, to foam. Per-Sub- Un-

FUMETTE, s. "Fr. Fumées,—the dung or excrements of deer, called by woodmen fewmets or fewmishing."—Cot.

Sk. thinks from the L. Fimus. Men.—Fumés de cerf; cervorum stercus; from Fimaia, fumata, fumée.

FUN, s. -NY. Sportive, mirthful drollery.

Funny, ad.—common in speech.

Not in our old lexicographers, Sk. Jun. or Mina. Perhaps from Fain, A. S. Fagen, lætus, hilaris; and thus, jocosus, jocosely, jesting.

FUN-AMBULATORY, ad. Funam-

-ULO. bulo,—a walker or dancer upon a

-ULOUS. rope.—Brown.

Fr. Funam-bile; It. & Sp. -bulo; L. Funambulus; from funis, a rope, and ambulare, to walk, to move about. Evelyn, in his Numismata, speaks of a cat under the name of a Funambule Turk.

FUNCTION, s. -ARY. Performance of an object, of an office or duty; an office, faculty or power.

Fr. Fun-ction; It. -zione; Sp. -cion; L. Functio, from Fungi. Inest in hac voce notio, (says Voss.) perficiendi ac perducendi ad finem, a notion of performing and bringing to an end. And he derives it from Finit, the end. De-funct, Per-functory.

FUND, v. s. -HOLDER. Now app. to—Any stock; and To fund, to place or invest money in the (public) stocks.

The L. Funda, a sling, a net, was also app. to a bag or purse, formed like a net, (a reticule,) fortasse quia nummos ille infunderent effunderentque; or from its likeness to a sling. Cot. says,—the tax or aid which in the year 1412 should have been imposed on every arpent (acre) was called fond de terre. Fond, he says, is also,—a merchant's stock, whether it be money or money's worth. Re- Un-

FUNDAMENT, s. The bottom, ground, -AL, s. ad. or basis; i. e. that upon which

-ALLY. any thing may stand or rest, be set, raised or established; from which any thing may rise or spring. Used formerly as we now use Foundation. "He diggide depe and set the foundement on a stoon."—Wiclif.

"Fundamental is a metaphor taken from the foundation of a building, upon which the fabrick is erected, and without which it cannot stand. So that fundamental principles are such as are presupposed to the duties of religion (one or more) and such, as are absolutely necessary to the doing of them."—Glanvill.

Fr. Fundament-el; Sp. -el; It. Fondamentale; L. Fundamentalis, fundamentum, from fundare, to lay deeply. See FOUNDATION.

FUNERAL, s. ad. Written by our old -ERALLY. writers, Funerals. Funeral is -ERAL. app. to—The performance of the rite or ceremony of burial -EST. or sepulture of the dead; the burial, sepulture or interment.

Funest (Fr. Funeste; It. & Sp. Funesto; L. Funestus, deadly, pernicious,) seems a favourite word with Evelyn.—Brown.

Fr. Funérailles; L. Funus. Either from Funis, a torch, because funerals were performed by torch light; or more probably from Funer, cadere, slaughter, because properly it is—of a man slain.—Voss.

FUNGE, s. "Those excrescences in -G-Us. manner of mushrooms, be named -OUS. fungi."—Holland. Plinie.

-OSITY. Funge,—one who has no more brains than a toadstool has substance; an empty-headed fellow.—Burton.

Fr. Fungus; L. Fungus, from fundere, (in the opinion of Scheidius,) effundere se, et late crecens; pouring itself forth, and spreading widely.

FUNK, v. s. Cons. the v.—To stink, to stew, to fume

A word (says Lye,) familiar in the university of Oxford: to be in a funk. In old Flemish, he adds, Fonck, is, turba, perturbatio. Sk. thinks from the Ger. Funk, scintilla, qd. nidor seu odor, e lignis seu carbonibus exhalans. In R. Brunne, "Be beten alle fonkes," be beat all to funks, or till they stink again.—Hearn. Perhaps from A. S. Fynigean, to corrupt, to spoil in any manner; past p. Fynig-ed, fynig'd or fungd, funk, corrupted, spoiled.

FUNNEL, s. That through which any thing pours, or is poured, usually, into other vessels:—and shaped suitably to its purpose.

Quasi Fundell.—Jen. Contracted from L. Infundibulum, (Sk.) from In, and funderc, to pour in.

FUR, v. s. App. to—Skins with soft, -IER. downy hair; also, to a coating or -IERY. covering formed upon the tongue, -RING. from the exhalation of the stomach; within a kettle or other vessel, from the ebullition of water.

Fr. Fouirer; It. Foderare; Sp. Aforrar; D. Fooderen; Ger. Futtern. In A. S. Fodder, and Go. Fodr, is theca, vagina; and Jun says,—"Notum est thecas lino lanæque duplicari, instar veetium levidensa pellicibusque suffulturam, atque inde nomen hoc vaginæ inditum." (Goth. Gloss. p. 164.) In Low L. Fodratura, or fodratura.—See Spei. I see (says Wach.) the tree and branches, but not the root.

FURBELOW, v. s. To plait or fold, in many folds; to supply, to overlay with plaits or foldings; met. to overlay with ornaments.

Sp. Farfala, or faibala; It. Faibala, which Duchat derives from Ger. Fald-plat.

FURBISH, v. Various written, Frobish, Frublish, Furbush.

To rub, to polish, to give brightness or polish to; to rub till bright; to rub up.

Fr. Fourbir; It. Forbire, detergere, polire, nitorem conciliare, to wipe or rub, to polish, to give brightness to. Sk. derives from Ger. Farb, colour. Men. traces it from L. Purpur.

FURCATION, s. Division like a fork.

L. Furca, a fork, (qv.)

FURDLE, v. -ING. To fardle, (qv.) i. e. to bundle or pack up.

FURL, v. To bundle or pack; to roll, fold or wrap up.

Velum contrahere seu compiccare, to draw together or fold the sail. Lye knows not whether from the v. To curl. It is probably a contraction of Furdle or fardle, (qv.) It is written Fardle by Beau. & F. Fearle, s., in the Mir. for Mag., may mean, the flag, qd. the flag of triumph; the palm:—"The one of knighthood bare the fearle." Un-

FURLONG, s. A. S. Furlang; Low L. Furlongus, quasi, (says Spel.) a furrow long, that is, bounded or terminated by the length of a furrow; i. e. id quod uno progressu arastrum describit antequam regreditur; and this, he adds, equals 40 perches, (or poles, each = 217½ feet,) or the eighth part of a mile. It is likewise, as Mina. says, the eighth part of an acre.

FURLOUGH, s. Leave of absence.

Dan. Forloos; D. Ferlof, leave or permission to go forth, out, or away.

FURMENTY. See FRUMENTY.

FURNACE, v. s. That which heateth; usually app. to a fire inclosed, and, on that account, burning with greater force.

Fr. Fournaise; It. Fornace; Sp. Hornaca; L. Fornax, from ancient formax, calidus; Gr. Geopos, from Geopos, to heat, to burn. See FIAR.

FURNISH, v. s. To supply, to administer, to accoutre, to provide.

-ING. to fit, suit, equip or accomme-

-NI-TURE. usefulness, convenience or or-

-MENT.† nament.

*H. More. †Brende. Spencer.

Fr. Fournir; It. Fornire; Sp. Ar. Men. derives the Fr. from the It., and the It. from the L. Ornare; ornatam armis, furnished with arms. Dis- Re- Un- Under-

FURROW, v. s. To cut or cleave asunder; to cut or mark out in hollowed lines; to hollow out, to indent lineally.

D. Foren; Ger. Furchen; A. S. Fyr-ica, ge-scindere, sulcare, to cleave or cut asunder. Us-

FURTHER, v. ad. av. Further, or Farther,

-ANCE. (improperly written Farther;) is

-ER. the regular comparative of Farth;

-ING. and the Eng. v. is formed upon

-MORE. this comparative.

-OVER. To move or cause to move farth.

-THEST. on the way, away, to a greater distance; to remove; to promote, to prefer, to advance; and thus, to aid, assist, or help.

A. S. Forth-ian, ge-forthian, promovere, juvare, to promote, further, advance, assist or help.—See D. Voorden; Ger. Befuerdern; from Forth, (qv.) See also FAB.

FURTIVE, ad. Obtained by theft, stolen.

Fr. Fur-tif; It. & Sp. -tivo; L. Furtivus, from Fur, a thief.

FURY, s. s. Fury, s. is app. to—A violent act, energy or exertion
-IOUSLY. of (fery, burning) feeling,
-IOUSNESS. of anger, of rage, of madness,
-IAL.† of raving passion, of fervid enthusiasm; also, to persons.

†Pelham. †Chaucer. †Wyatt.
Fr. Fure; It. & Sp. -s; from L. Furor; for which Voss. proposes four different etyms.; the more probable of which seems to be the Gr. θυρεω, ferri, impetu quodam ferri et abripi, whence (as Voss. remarks) θεοφορος, qui numine affatur, quales dicuntur furere. But see FIAR. Is-furite (Em.).

FURZE, s. Gorse, whinn, furzen bushes, -EX. thorn, broom, butchers' broom.—-Y. Som.

A. S. Fyrs, genista, spinosa, ruscus, furz. Perhaps (Sk.) from Firs, because this plant, from a dryness peculiar to itself, is especially fitted for firs. It is perhaps from the A. S. v. Fyrs-las. See Gorse, and letter F.

FUSCOUS,* ad. Having the appearance of any thing scorched, browned, or burnt.

**Barke.*
Fr. Fuscus; L. Fuscus, κατα το φασκειν, utitur, to scorch. Ob-

FUSE, s. To melt, to reduce to a liquid -IBLE. or fluent state; to liquefy.

-IBILITY. "Common fusion, in metals, is, -BLE, ad. made by a violent heat, acting -ION. upon the volatile and fixed, the dry and humid, parts of those bodies."—Brown.

L. Fundero, fuserem, to pour. Af. Circum- Con- Ef- In- Inter- Re- Sub- Trans-

FUSEE, s. -SIL. A spindle; that around which any thing is spun, winded, or wound.

Fusil, in Heraldry, Fr. Fuseau,—a charge either resembling a spindle, or somewhat longer than a lozenge.

From L. Fusus, a spindle.

FUSEL, s. A fire-steel for a tinder-box.

-IL. —Col. Any thing easily fired or -ILKEN. ignited.—Men.

Fr. Fusil; It. Focile, fucile, igniarium. Casen., from Focillus, a dim. of focus. Men.,—focus, foci, fociles, focile, and fucile.

FUSS, s. A hurry; an unnecessary haste or bustle, undue importance. Fussy is a common word in the North: a fussy fellow, a busy, (meddling,) self-sufficient fellow.

A. S. Fys, promptus, ready, very prompt, ready, quick, and nimble.—Som. Fys-an, agere, abigere, fagere, festinare, to hasten, to hurry, to drive hastily away.

FUST,* s. See FOIST.—*Purchase.

FUST, v. To taste or smell of a foul or -Y. mouldy caak; to be or become

-ILARIAN.* mouldy or musty.

-ILUGS.† Fustilugs may be found in Sherwood and Cot.: the latter exp.—Coche, a fustilug, a woman grown fat by ease and laziness.—**Shak.* †Jun.

Fr. Fuste,—fusty, tasting of the caak, smelling of the vessel wherein it hath been kept.—Col. The Fr. Fuste, a caak, Sk. thinks, may be from A. S. Fæst, firmus, (qd. vas firmum.) See FOIST, FOISTINESS.

FUSTIAN, s. ad. -IST. App. met. to—

A style of speaking or writing affectedly fine, or inflated; mere stuff, bombast.

Fr. Fustaine; It. -agno; Sp. -en; Low L. Fustanum; which, Bochart thinks, is so called from Fustat, a city of Egypt, whence the cloth, called fustian, was first introduced into Europe.

FUSTIGATE,* v. -ION.† To act, to strike, to beat—with a stick or cudgel.

**Foze.* †Fuller.
Fr. Fustiger, to cudgel; from L. Fustis, a cudgel or stick.

FUTILE, ad. Silly, trifling, nonsensical;

-ITY. talking overmuch, loquacious;

-OUS.* empty, inane.—**Howell.*

Fr. Futile; It. -tà; Sp. -dad; L. Futilis, that can or may pour forth; from obsolete futere, to pour forth; and thus, to pour forth nonsense, to talk overmuch, to blab, talk idly.

FUTURE, s. ad. That which is to come,

-LY. which is to be or to happen in

-ITY. time to come, hereafter.—**South.*

-ITION.* Fr. Futur; It. & Sp. -uro; L. Futurus, from ancient Fuo; Gr. Φω-ειν, nasci, fieri, esse.

FUZZ, s. Sk. says, Fusballs,—quasi foist

-Y. or foist balls, a species of fungus;

-BALL. whence Fuzzy is app. to any thing fungous and light. See FITCHAT.

FUZZLE,* is probably a corruption of Fuddle, (qv.)—**Burton.*

FY, int. Hate this; abhor this; shame upon this.

See FOH. The imperative of the Go. and A. S. v. Fi-an, to hate.

FY, term. L. Fi-eri, to be or become or cause to be; to make; as To terri-fy,—to cause to fear or be afraid. Words with this term. are formed as they are wanted; e. g. codify, acidify, silicify, &c., and the common subderivatives, as codi-fication.

G.

G is of double force in our tongue, and is sounded with an impression made on the midst of the palate. Before A, O, and U strong, (or hard,) or before the aspirate H, or the liquids L and R; or in the ends of words, except the qualifying E follow it; and then the sound is weak (or soft,) rag, rage. Before U the force is double, (or two-fold); as in guile, and languish. Before E and I the powers are confused; and uttered, now strong, (or hard,) now weak, (or soft.)—B. Jonson.

It is softened into the guttural Y. As, gon, yon; get, yet; gate, yate; ge, or ghe, ye; ghon, you.

Wilkins remarks, that G has the same affinity with C, as D with T.—G has in the pronunciation an almost imperceptible compression of the larynx, which C has not. G presents itself as a literal root in various Go. Gr. & L. words. See its cognate letter C, and Gē.

GA, i. e. Go, (qv.)

GAB, v. s. To gabble,—to talk quickly, -BER. rapidly, noisily, and thence, -BING. senselessly; to make a confused -BLE, v. s. noise; similar to rapid, indistinct -BLING. utterance. See To JABBER.

Holland translates exserti, (sc. dentes,) gabbing teeth and gabbed tusks,—standing forth or out of the mouth.

A. S. Gabbas, deridere, ludere, illudere, to scoff, to mock, to delude, to flout, to gibe or jest. Hence, perhaps, the Fr. Gab-er, (It. -bars.) D. -beren, our own Gab-be, -ber, nugari, joculari. Hence also, I take it, our Gibberish.—Som. Tyrw. says, "Gabbe, Fr. to talk idly, to lye. Gabbe I of this? Num id mentior?" Gab, the s., is still in vulgar use: "To have the gift of the gab," i. e. the gift of speaking plausibly and fluently; of making the best of a bad cause.

GABARDINE, s. An upper garment; a loose coat or frock, thrown over the other clothing.

Fr. Galleverdine, galeardine; It. Ga-cardina; Sp. -bardina. Fr. & Sp. Gab-an; It. -bano. Gaban is derived, by Men., from Cappa; cappanum, gappanum, gabum, (see CAPP.) By Sk., from Fr. Cab-ane; Sp. -ana; a cabin, a cot; qd. a cottager's garment: perhaps (he also says) from Ger. Gabe, a gift; qd. a garment given annually by masters to servants and dependants; by us called a livery, from the Fr. Livree, to deliver.

GABION, v. s. Baskets filled with earth for the defence of cannoniers.—Mins. and Cot.

It. Gabbione; Fr. & Sp. Gabion, corbis terræ oppletus,—a basket filled with earth; from It. Gabbia, which Men. derives from L. Cavea, a cave; for (Sk. adds) it is like a large cave. But see CAGE.

GABLE, or GABEL, s. -LER. A portion given: and hence, a tax raised or levied (in England) with common consent by act of parliament. And such taxes were commonly called, gifts and benevolences.

Low L. "Gab-ella, -ellum, -ium; vectigal, portorium, tributum, exactio, census, from Sax. Gaf-ol, or -el."—Spok. See also Foss. de Vitilis, lib. II. c. 8. "Gaf-el, tribute, tol, custom; a subsidy; yearly rent, payment or revenue."—Som. "Fr. Gabbeler,—to pay custom for; also, to impose a custom, lay an impost, on."—Cot. Ger. Gabel; from Gabe, donum, (says Wach.), and this from A. S. Gefe, gyfe, a gift. Sk. also derives A. S. Gaf-el, (i. e. gaf-dæd), from A. S. v. Gif-an, dare, to give.

GABLE, s. i. e. Cable, (qv.)

GABLE, or GAVILLE, s. App. to—The GABLET, triangular part of the wall in GABLE-END, cluded between the extremities of the sloping sides of the roof, or the face of the building.

Ger. Gibel; D. Geel; Sw. Gefuel; Dan. Gand; Low L. Gabulum; summitas vel frontispicium domūs. From Ger. Heben, to raise, to heave, upwards, as if properly written Gehevel, (Kilian); from Gr. Κεφαλή, the head, (Jun.); from Heb. (Helvigi.)—See Wach. The Go. Gibla, Jun. explains, Pinna, sive summa structura totius extremitatis.

GABY, or GAUBY, s. Perhaps a Gop-y or Gauppy; a gaping "dunce, fool or block-head."

GAD, s. -FLY. A goad, or any thing that goadeth, that pierceth or stingeth; any thing pointed, or tending to a point; a long stick or pole; a sceptre; a piece of metal; a wedge, a pointel.

A. S. Gad, cuspis, stiga, stimulus, the point of a weapon, a spear or arrow-head, a sting, prick or goad. Gad, gadd, gade, i. e. goad. Hence (happily) our gad of Steele or iron. I. massa chalybea viri ferri.—Som. And Gad-fly, qd. goad-fly, quisiaster stimuli pungit; because it pricks like a goad.—See Sk. and Lye (in Jun.) Mina, because she makes the cattle gadde up and down with stinging them. See GAD, v.; and GOAD.

GAD, v. To go, to go about, in and out, -DER. up and down; to be frequently, -DING. constantly going; to stray, to -DINGLY. wander, to rove, roam, or ramble -DISHNESS. about.

-LING. Probably formed upon the past p. of the v. To go or gas: go-ed, gode, or go-ed, gude.

GAFFER, s. Father, in common speech; old father, or old fellow.

"A. S. Ge-fader, compater, susceptor, a god-father. Hence, happily, our Gaffer."—Som. See GAUMER. Jun. thinks it may be corrupted from A. S. Gefere, "a fellow, a companion, a man." (See FERR.) Lye, (in Jun.) a corruption of God-father.

GAFFLE, s. Delpino calls Sp. Gafas, the bender of a cross-bow. The gaffel, Mr. Nares asserts, is the lever by which the bow was drawn. Cot. renders Bend-age, the gaffle of a cross-bow.

The spur with which cocks are armed is also called gaffle.

A gaffell for a cross-bow. Sp. Gafe, from B. Gafel, a fork; in A. S. Gafas.—Mins.

GAG, v. s. -GER. To shut up, block up, (sc. from speaking,) to confine from speaking.

The gag was a species of torture. See Goggare, in Du Cange.

From A. S. Cagg-ian, obscurare, to shut fast as lock.—Tooke.

GAGE, v. s. Gage, v.—To bind to certain performances or fulfillments; to pledge, to stake.

The s.—That by which a man is bound to certain fulfillments.

Fr. Gager, gage; It. Gaggia,—all (Sk.) from L. Vas, cadis. Tooke,—from A. S. Cagg-ian, obscurare, to shut up, to confine. Dis-En-fer-

GAGGLE, v. -ING. To gaggle like a goose, from the sound or noise (Mins.) which they make,—gag, gag.

D. Gag-hen, -helen; Ger. -en. See CACKLE.

GAIN, s. & ad. To gain is—to acquire;
 -ER. and thus,—to attain or obtain,
 -FUL. to reach, to get, to procure, to -FULLY. win.
 -ING. Gain, used adjectively, is cons.—
 -LESS. Diligent, active, expert, apt, fit,
 -LESSNESS. suitable, convenient, ready.
 -LY. See Ray, Gross, Brocket, Moore, and Nares, and also Gain in Jamieson. All the provincial usages noted by the four former come easily within this cons. application.

The A.S. Ge-winfel, (gainful), is,—striving, labouring or contending for; and thus, in Beas. & F. "You will find him gainful;
 but be sure ye curb him." may signify,— full of strife, contention or resistance.

SK.—from Fr. Gaigner; Men. and Jun.—Fr.
Gagner; Sp. Ganar; It. Guedagnare, from Ger.
Ge-winnen, locat. It is the A.S. Ge-win, question; Dan. Gewin. (See also Winnen, in Wach.)
 And Tooke,—"Gain, i. e. any thing acquired, is the past p. of the v. Ge-winnan, acquirere," to acquire, i. e. to seek for, to labour to obtain; and, cons.—to obtain, (to win.) Un-

GAIN-COME, s. Coming again; return.
 *Chaucer.

GAIN-GIVING, s. A giving against;
 giving way against; misgiving.—*Shak.

GAIN-SAY, v. To contra-dict, to deny,
 -ER. to oppose, to object.

-ING. Gainst, and say; contra and dicere. Un-

GAINST, pr. For against, (qv.)
 *Spenser.

GAIN-STAND, v. To stand against, to resist, to oppose, to withstand.

*Fabyan. Speed.

GAIN-STRIVE, v. To strive, struggle, or contend against; to resist.

*Spenser. Grimoald.

GAIT, s. -ED. Also written Gate, (qv.)
 Not only app. to—The way gone; but to the going, the motion in going; the manner of, the gesture in going, whether running, walking, flying or swimming,—on earth, in air or water; also, to—the state or condition for motion or action.

SK. says,—Gait, via. (i. e. the way gone), a common word in Lincolnshire; qd. iter, transitus.
 D. Gai; Ger. Gasse, from A. S. Gas, to go.

GAITER, s. v. An outer covering for the leg, or part of the leg,—to guard from cold, or dirt.

The Fr. Guetres, Cot. calls "Startups, high shoes, or gamashes for country folks;" and "Guetri, having startups on." Men. derives from Gamacha; thus,—"Gamacha, gamastra, ga-tra, paistre, guestre." His editor is conscious of the harshness of this etym. but pretends to none better. Perhaps it is from Guetter, to guard; qd. guards for the legs. The word is of no great antiquity in Eng.

GALAXY, s. The milky circle.

Gr. Γαλαξίας κύκλος, lacteus circulus; from γάλα, galaktos, milk.

GALE, v. s. App. to—The sound of a singing, howling wind; to such wind itself;
 also, to winds less violent.

In Chaucer, Wif of Bathes Prologue, ("And when the sompnoir herd the freer gale,") and The Frere's Tale, ("Now telleth forth, and let the sompnoir gale,") Gale,
 v. seems (says Tyrw.) to be used met.; in The Court of Love, ("But Domine labia, gan he cry and gale,") it is used lit.

Probably from A. S. Gyllan, gellian, galan, to yell; fromere, stridere, canere. And see NIGHT-INGALE.

GALL, v. s. The Eng. v. To gall, Fr.
 -LESS. Galler, is—to heat, to irritate,

-INGNESS. to exasperate, to chafe, to fret, to vex, to corrode, eat or wear into; to harass. Gally ire, (Chaucer,) bitter anger.

Gall, s. (from its taste,) met.—bitterness, angriness, rancour, malignity, ill will.

A. S. Galla; D. & Ger. Gall-e; Dan. -de; Sw.
Galla, which (Jun.) are not far removed from Gr.
Χολη, bilis. Becon (he adds) considers Galle so called as if Gale or gale, on account of its yellow colour. The A. S. Ge-galan, accendere, to kindle, is given by Tooke as the origin of the Eng. Yellow;
 and it is not improbable that A. S. Galla, the gall, may have sprung from this same v.; being, as Gower expresses it, the proper seat "of the drie color with his heale;" and Pliny, "Of all those things which are power to be found in every living creature, the gall is that which is of greatest efficacy in operation: for power it hath naturally to heat, bite, draw, discusse, and resolve."—Holland. Be- Un-

GALLANT, v. s. & ad. Gallant, ad. is,—

-LY. Splendid, brilliant, magnificent;

-NESS. and met.—magnanimous, or noble;

-RY. minded, high-minded, of lofty spirit,

GALA. high courage; daring, brave, frank.

Gallantry is app. to—The generous spirit, which protects the female sex; the courtesy and courtship, which is shown or offered to it; and further, to—such courtship carried to excess.

Fr. Gal-ant; It. & Sp. -ante. The Sp. has also Galán; It. & Sp. Gale; the latter of which has obtained very common usage in England. G.
 Douglas (as Dr. Jamieson has noted) renders juvenes (Rm. i. 631, and ix. 163), Galandis; possibly (he adds) the modern Sc. Callan or Callant.
 Sk. thinks it not wholly absurd to take the etymon of this word from the nation of the Gauls, who, both now and from all times past, affected splendid dress (splendidum vestitum) beyond other nations. Galant and Galliard have the same origin; and the latter, C. Scal. and Voss. derive—ab ardore et alacritate Gallica genti, prae aliis omnibus Europae insita. The Gr. Γαλήνη, serenitas, is resorted to by other etyms. The A. S. Gyl, splendet; Ger. Gall, splendor, brightness or brilliancy, (probably from A. S. Ge-galan, accendere, to kindle,) may supply the true origin. See GALL.

GALLATURE, s. The cock's tread.

Sp. Galladura, from Gallus, a cock.

GALLERY, s. Cot. calls Gallery,—"A long room to walk in;" it is a name also given to certain raised portions of a church or theatre, erected along the sides or end.

It. Galleria; Fr. & D. -erie. Nicot and others (see Men.) suppose it said, quasi Allerie, from Aller, to go. Men. himself from Fr. Galerie, a gallery; à cause de la ressemblance qu'a une galerie avec une galerie. Wach.—that both Aller and Gallerie are from Ger. Wallen, ire, to go. Qy. A. S.
Ge-ladan, ducere, to lead!

GALLEY, s. The City barge used on -LE-AS. Lord Mayor's day was called a -ON. galley-foist, (Whalley,) and so were -OT. other vessels of a similar description, or used for similar purposes, i. e. for galas, as some have imagined. See FOIST. Criminal slaves were condemned and employed to the toil of rowing the galleys, (in the Mediterranean.)

Fr. Gal-ée, -ère; It. & Sp. -ea, -era; D. -eye; Dan. -ele. Fr. Gal-lasse; It. -assa; Sp. -assa. Fr. Gal-lion; It. & Sp. -con, -lione. In Low L. Galas; and also Gallionism and Galliasa, a larger sort of galley.—Spel. Some (says Voss. de Vitlis, lib. l. c. 1.) think that Galas (a galley) is from L. Galas, qd. navis paleata. After quoting the two first lines of Ovid's Tristia, (l. 9.) he adds, "In puppi erat Minerva; in prora autem caecis; unde ei Galas, vel Caecidis nomen." And J. Scal. quoting the same lines, observes, that it was usual to give names to ships, avo rov wapaqnuov, from an ensign displayed, or rather painted upon them. See also Men. in Galdre.

GALLIARD, s. ad. -ISE, s. "Lusty, lively; frolick, buxom, cheerful, blithe, jocund, pleasant, gamesome; brave, gallant; valiant; also rash, or somewhat indiscreet, by too much jollity."—Cot.

Galliard is also the name of a dance. Sir J. Davies calls it "a gallant dance."

See GALLANT. Fr. Gaillard; It. Gaillard; Sp. Gaillard. Besoldus (see Gell, in Wach.) refers Fr. Gaillard to an alliance with Ger. Gel; D. Gheyl; A. S. Gel, libidinosus, luxuriosus; and this is adopted by Dr. Jamieson. Tyrw. says, Brisk, gay.

GALLICISM, s. An expression or idiom peculiar to or borrowed from the French.

L. Gallicus, French.

GALLIGASKINS, s. Galligaskins, or wide hose or slops, qd. caligæ Gallo-easconica, so called because the Vascones (i. e. Gascons) used them.—Sk.

GALLIMATIA, s. Fr. "Galimatias,—jargon de Gal, gibberish, fustian language, pedlers' French."—Cot.

GALLIMAUFREY, s. "A hash of various sorts of viands."—Men. "A confused heap of things together."—Cockeram. Pistol applies the word to Ford's wife.

Fr. Galimafrée. Men. says, that galimatias and galimafrée are coulines german; but knows nothing of their origin.

GALLINACEOUS, ad. Pertaining to, belonging to, birds of the order of Gallina, i. e. L. Gallina, a hen.

GALLIPOT, -TILE. Perhaps a clay-pot and clay-tile. Sk. derives Gallipot from D. Gleye, (also written Kleye, in Eng. Clay,)—a shining or glittering potters' earth, and pot. It has been supposed that galli is a corruption of Gala, and that thus gallipot was a fine painted pot. It is evident that gallitile was a composition, into the nature of which Bacon deemed it necessary further to inquire. But this is not any objection to the etym. suggested above.

GALLO-GLASS, s. Spenser speaks of them as foot soldiers; Camden, (Annals of Ireland,) as horse. "The which footmen they call gallo-glasses, the which name do discover them to be ancient English; for Gall-ogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman."—Spenser.

GALLON, s. A measure of four quarts or eight pints.

Mid. L. Gato is in Du Cange and Spel; Fr. Galon,—an English measure containing deux pintes.—Lacombe.

GALLOON, s. A kind of lace.

Fr. Gal-on, -onnet,—to edge or lace with galloons. Sk. thinks it may be Gallio lace, or from It. & Sp. Gale, vestis nitida, ornata et speciosa.

GALLOP, v. To move by leaps; to move -ER. to run, fast, with speed, with swift -ING. ness.

Dan. Galop-er; Fr. -er; It. -pare. Probably no other than Ge-hleapan, ge-hlopan, salto, salire, to leap or jump.

GALLOW, s. To affright, to terrify. **Shak*.

Warburton says it is a West Country word, and Mr. Grose has "Galliment, a great fright. Am Gallied, frightened. Exm." It is A. S. A-gale-on to astonish, abash, greatly affright. And see Gall in Jun.

GALLOWAY, s. A kind of horse.

Dr. Jamieson thinks this word may be Sw. L. Ger. Wallach, which Wach. refers to -gall, sterilis castratus; and Ihre to the Wallachians; others because first known in the country of that name (Galloway.)

GALLOWES, s. It is gen. formed like the Gr. πλ. The word is also app. to one deserving the gallows; deserving to be hanged.

Go. & A. S. Gaige; Dan. Gaige; D. Gaige, which latter, Voss. thinks, approaches very near to L. Gabalus, a cross. Gallows is manifestly written Gaiwe, and, probably, from A. S. A-gale-on, to affright; being raised in public view to inspire terror. "As yf a man dyd caste a pyrcoken stone upon the galows."—Bible, 1551. Proverbs "As he that bindeth a stone in a sling."—Mt. Ver. See GALLOW.

GALOCHE, s. GALLOSHOES. Cot.—"A wooden shooe, or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet or tie of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter."

Sk. says, Galloshoes, crepidæ lignæ, wooden shoes, from Fr. Gal-loches, -oches; Sp. -ochas; It. -onze, calceus silior rusticus. Galliche, a kind of shoes, a word noticed by Aulus Gellius, as introduced not long before the age of Cicero, who uses it Phil. II. 30; and hence Fr. & It. are by him derived. See also Spel. in v.

GALVERLY, s. ad. q. Go-Heerly; equivalent to Deliverly, (qv.)—cleverly, actively. "A light gennet that is young and trotted galverly."—Wriethesley. 1537.

GAMBAULD, s. "Fr. Gambiller, to wag -AUDING. the legs in sitting, as children -ADOES. use to do. Gambader,—to turn -OL, v. s. heels over head, make many gambols, fetch many friaks, show tumbling tricks."—Cot. So, in Eng. To gambel, is—To fetch many friaks or frolics; to skip to caper, to play wantonly with the legs, to ranabout, jump about, playfully and nimbly; to jump or start aside.

Fr. Gamb-ader, -iller; It. Spambettiere, which Men derives from It. Gamba; Fr. Jambe; Low L. Gampe, a leg, and this from Gr. Kamēn, a joint. Est. the Gambes capri, is rendered by Fuller, Gamb's like a goat, (Cornwall.)

GAMBONE, * s. i. e. Gammon, (qv.)
*Shelton. It. Gambone.

GAMBREL, v. s. To bind up the legs; to tie or bind by the legs.

From It. Gamba, a leg. See GAMBAULD.

GAME, v. s. To play, subaud. for money

-SOME. staked or pledged, or betted.

-STER. To make game or sport of, is cons.

-ING. to laugh at or deride, to mock.

-BLE. Game, the s. is any sport or amuse--MENT. ment, active or sedentary, among different persons, (usually) as a match for trial of skill or luck.

Game is also app. to the object played for or pursued; esp. "to those species of wild animals which the arbitrary constitutions of positive law have distinguished from the rest by the well-known appellation of Game." — Blackstone, ii. 1.

Gamester, in Shak. (Taming of Shrew,) "does not signify a man viciously addicted to games of chance, but a frolicsome person," (Steevens.) i. e. a gamesome person.

A. S. Gamies, Indere, Illudere, to sport, to play, to make a sport of.

GAMMER, s. A. S. Ge-meder, commater, suscepatrix, a god-mother, whence happily our Gammer.—Som. Others, from Good-mother. See GAFFER.

GAMMON, s. "The leg or shank, (extending from the knee to the ankle)." — Cot.

Fr. Jambone; Sp. -on; It. Gambone; and these (Sk.) from Fr. Jambe; It. Gamba. (See GAMBAULD.) Sk. thinks, all from A. S. Hæm.

GAMUT, s. The scale of music.

Gamut, i. e. Gemma-ut; the Gr. F. In Fr. Game; It. & Sp. Gemma, scale musica.

GAN, i. e. Began. Sometimes written Can, (qv.); and see GIN.

GANCH, v. -ING. "To let fall (as in a strappado) on sharp stakes pointed with iron, (sc. hooks,) and thereon languishing until he die." — Cot.

Fr. Ganché; Sp. -cho; It. -cio, a hook; Sk. thinks from L. Uncus, a hook.

GANDER, s. A bird,—the male of the Goose.

A. S. Gandra; D. Gans; Ger. Gansard, gans; Sp. Ganso; L. Gansus,anser, qd. ganser—manisshy, says Sk., from L. Anser. See GOOSE.

GANG, v. s. A gang, or gang-way,—the road or way by which we go. Gang is also a number going, or who go together, who go to or from work together, and thus, who work together.

A. S. Gan-gan, formed from gan, to go; D. Gaan, gan-gen, to go; A. S. & Dan. Gang, a going, a way. See GIGO.

GANGRENE, v. s. To eat, to consume, -ATED. to corrode; to eat or consume the -OUS. vital powers; and thus, cons. to mortify or become mortified.

Fr. Gangrène; It. -crena; L. Gangrana; Gr. Γαγγραινα, from γαγειν, signifying acervus, to eat. — Voss.

GANTLET, or GANTELOPE, s. To run the gantlet, is to run through ranks of men, supplied with weapons to inflict punishment.

"Gantlope, a military punishment," says Sk.; who adds, "The author of the English Dictionary thinks it so called from Gant, (now written Ghent), in Flanders, and D. Loopen, currere, to run; because that punishment was first invented at Ghent."

GANZA, s. A kind of flying goose or gander. See GANDER.

GAOL, s. Also written Jail, and by Jun. -ER. Yail.

-ING. A prison, a place of imprisonment or confinement.

Low L. Gaiola; Fr. Gélie, gaiole, gayole; D. Ghiocle. All, says Sk., from L. Caveola. Men. says, Gélie, from gabliola, dim. of gabia, (a cage, qv.) which he derives from cavea. Cot.—"Gélie, a gaiol or prison; also, a cage or coop for birds." — En.

GAP, s. An opening, an aperture, a hole, a vacancy, a vacant space.

From A. S. Ge-gappan, to open.—Tooke.

GAPE, v. To open, (subaud. the mouth.)

-ER. to open, sc. with eagerness, as young

-ING. birds do for their food; and thus, to crave, to desire or covet eagerly, to long for or after, to seek or look anxiously after.

D. Gaeppen; Dan. Gaber; Ger. Gaffen; A. S. Ge-gappan, to open.

GAP-TOOTHED. See GAT-TOOTHED.

GAR,* v. To prepare or make ready; to cause to do, to make; and thus, cons. to force.—Chaucer. Spenser.

A. S. Gar-wian, gyrwan; D. Gærwen, gerwen; Ger. Gar-en; Sw. Goera, parare, præstare, facere, facere. Ihre observes, that the more general signification (facere) prevails among the Nor.-Eng. and the Sc. See GARE, GARNISH, and ARROW.

GARB, s. The dress, the clothing or vesture; the habit, fashion, mode or manner.

Fr. Garbe; It. & Sp. -e; which Sk. thinks are from A. S. Ge-arwian, præparare, instruere, to prepare, to adorn. Men. confesses his difficulty.

GARBAGE, s. That which is purged or cleansed away; the offal.

Jun. thinks it strongly allied to Sp. Garbear, diripere, to tear away, sc. a costis avium pisciumque. Sk.—A. S. Ge-arwian, præparare, apparare; garbage being the whole apparatus or furniture of the abdomen. Mina. says,—To garbage or gerbish, to take out the entrails of any thing; from garble, to purify, to cleanse.

GARBLE, v. -ER. As usually app.—To pick out, sift out, what may serve a particular purpose; and thus, destroy or mutilate the fair character of the whole.

Fr. Grabeller; It. Garbellare. Cot. says,—"Grabeller, to garbell spices, &c. (and hence) also, to examine precisely, sift nearly, look narrowly, search curiously, into." The statute 1 Rich. III.

GAR

e. 11, was made "for the remedie of the excessive price and badness of bowstaues, which partly is growen, because the merchants will not suffer any garbelling or sorting of them to be made." And, after certain enactments, such bowstaues are forbidden to be sold ungarbelled.

GARBOIL, v. s. To throw into confusion, to involve in confusion or disorder, to cause a turmoil, ("a hurly-burly, great stir.")—Cot.

D. Grabocile; Fr. Garb-ouil; It. uglio. Men. deduces it from the L. Turba; thus, Turba, turbula, turbulium, ciurbulium, ciurbuglium, carbulium, garbuglio. Mina.—Garbaglio, q. granboglio, magna obulitio. En.

GARD, v. To garnish, or to gird; or otherwise, to guard.

Perhaps from A. S. Ge-arwien, gyrwan, gyrian, preparare, instruere, ornare, to prepare, deck, adorn: (to gar, to gare, qv.) or otherwise, from A. S. Gyrd-en, to gird, to surround, sc. with a binding. Mina. says,—a gard, welt or border of a garment, from Fr. Garder, conservare, because it preserves the garment.

GARDEN, v. s. A place girded, surrounded, or inclosed, sc. for the growth of plants of various kinds. —AGE. To garden,—to work in, till or cultivate a garden; to plan or lay out a garden.—Holland.

Fr. Jardin; It. Giardino; Sp. Gardin; D. Garte; Ger. Garten; (L. Hortus, hortus, from Gr. Εκτρον.—Juv.) Wach. derives Ger. Garten, from Garten; A. S. Gyrðian, cingere. And Tooke, the Eng. Garden, (i. e. Geard, with the pt. term. en.), from A. S. v. Gyrdan, cingere, to gird, to surround, to enclose.

GARE, or GAURE, v. Garish may be —ISH. exp.—Gaudy, showy, ostentatious; ostentatiously, staringly, —NESS. fine or gay; staring.

"Clothed magnificently, splendidly, and for state," says Sk.; who adds, "I know not whether from A. S. Gærwien, to prepare, to ornament" (See GARNISH, GARRISON.) Gerish (says Mr. Steevens) is gaudy, showy; also sometimes, wild, flighty. The v. To gaura, (Chaucer—"Now gaurish all the peple on hire,") or Gare, (Phaer—"A monstrous dragon with fifty garing heades,") which Speight and Tyrw. exp.—To stare, is no doubt the origin of the ad. Gerish, ostentatiously, staringly, fine or gay; and thus, Gaudy, &c.

GARGARIZE, v. s. —ISM. "Gargarismes are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, and used commonly after a purge." —Burton.

Fr. Gargarizer, to gargle; It. Gargariz-zare; Sp. -ar; L. Gargarizo; Gr. Γαργαρίζω, from γαργαρεύω, gurgulio, the wind-pipe: a name formed from the sound.—Foss. And see GARGLE.

GARGET, s. "Fr. Gargate, the throat-pipe."—Cot.

GARGLE, v. s. Anciently—Gargoyle, Gargyle. To cleanse or wash the throat by regurgitating, or throwing back, the liquid, by the action of the wind-pipe. In Waller and Fenton, to throw back sounds or notes of music in a similar manner. "And gargle in their throats a song."—Waller. "To doat on nonsense, gargled in an eunuch's throat."—Fenton.

It is app. by Holland to a disease in the throat: "Good for the heale of the squinancie or gargle in swine." Also, as in Lidgate and Hall, to "A gutter that receives and voids the rain falling on divers roofs or houses;" frequently terminated with the heads of animals.—Cot. "Every house covered was with many gargoyles."—Lidgate. "Gargyles of gold with spoutes runnyng."—Hall.

Dan. Gargle; Ger. -gel, -gela; D. Gargel, -elen; Fr. Gargouille, the weapon of the throat. (See GARGARIZE.) Garg-ouiller; It. -ogliare; &c. says Sk. from L. Gargus.

GARLAND, s. v. Com. app. to—A collection of flowers or boughs, sc. to gird, incircle or surround, the head; a wreath, a crown.

A collection or selection of the flowers of poetry; of little pieces of prose or poetry.

Fr. Garlande, ghirlande, guirlande; It. Ghirlanda, corona, sertum. "I believe," says Sk. "a gyrlando, i. e. from its surrounding the head, or from corolla." Men., from Gyrus. We have in A. S. the s. Gyrd-el, a girdle, (a diminutive from A. S. v. Gyrd-en, to gird.) And hence Tooke supposes the v. Gyrdel-an, whose s. p. would be gyrdeland, encircling, surrounding; and that Gyrdeland, gyrdland, gyrland, has become our modern Garland. Dis-

GARLICK, s. A plant so called—from the leaves rising like lances or javelins. A. S. Gærlisc, garlic, allium. Sk. thinks, from A. S. Gar, as app. to a lance or javelin, and A. S. Leac, a leek, qd. porrum jaculiforme vel lanceforme.

GARMENT, v. s. Any thing prepared or provided, sc. for the clothing or vestures, and thus, cons.—clothing, dress or vesture.

Piers Plouhman, Gower, and Wiclif.—A garment, (qd. garnishment.—Sk.) Fr. Garnement, from Garnir, to prepare, to garnish, (qv.)

GARNER, v. s. A place where grain is deposited or stored. To garner,—to lay up, to deposit, as in a granary or storehouse, or treasury; to store or treasure up.

Fr. Grenier; It. Gran-ajo; Sp. -ero; L. Granarium, a granary. See GRAIN.

GARNET, s. A precious stone, so called from its resemblance in colour and form to the grains or seeds of pomegranate, (grana made.)—Men.

Garnet or granat stone, Fr. Grenat; Sp. Granate; It. -ata; Low L. Granatus.

GARNISH, v. s. "Fr. Garnir,—to provide, vide, store, supply, furnish." —MENT. accommodate; fill with; deck. —NISON. adorn, trim, beautify, set forth. —NITURE. with."—Cot.

Garnison,—see GARRISON.

Dan. Garn-er; Fr. -er; It. Garn-are; Sp. -cor. Men. Casen and Wach.—from Low L. Wern-ire, or -ius, and this from Ger. Wern, to warnen, to fortify, to provide with arms, (of which A. S. Wærnan, gewærnian, ge-wærnan, to take heed, to beware, is the root.) Sk. from A. S. Gærn-paratus, gearwien, prepare, to prepare. Fr. GARN, GNAE. Dis-Un-

GARRET, s. In common Eng. it is mis--EERS. app. to what Sk. calls Supreme deted. mis contignatio, i. e. The highest story of the house. "He sawe men go up and downe on the garrettes of the gate and walles."—Berners. "A square structure with a round turret at each end, garretted on the top."—Fuller.

Fr. Garde, which, among other usages, (see Cut) is app. "To a little lodge for a sentinel, built on high." (s. garriolos.) G. Douglas renders the sile garriolos, upon which Misanus, and the maler upon which Calvus stood, "The his garrit, the his garrit."

GARRISON, v. s. App. to—The force, provided or furnished for the defence of a place prepared or fortified against attack; the place itself.

Don. & Fr. Garrison; It. Guarnigione; Sp. cion. (See GARNISH.) Written by Chaucer and others as the Fr. Garrison. Presidium ab apparatu bello, sile dictum; a fortress, guard or defence against the preparations of war, so called.—St. See Bernesean, in Jamieson. En-Un-

GARRON, s. Jamieson calls it a small horse, a galloway: a Highland or Irish garron.

Ger. Garr, gorr, equus. Gorre, equus; cabellus; dictur, says Kilian, plerumque equus annuus et strigosus.

GARRULITY, s. -LOUS. A prating or prattling, babbling, talkativeness, loquaciousness.

Fr. Garruli-té; It. -tà; L. Garrulitas, from Garrus, to prate.

GARTER, v. s. -ING. That which girds, surrounds, incloses. To garter,—To put on, bind on, a garter; and thus, gartered, is, cons.—invested with the order of the garter.

Fr. Jar-tier; Sp. -retera; It. Giartiera. A garter (Tooke) is a girder; from A.S. Gyrdan, to gird, to surround, to inclose. Un-

GARTH. See GIRD.

GARUM, s. -OUS. "An exquisit and stinking liquor in manner of a dripping, called garum, proceeds from the garbage of fishes, and such other offal as commonly the cooke useth to cast away, as it lieth soaking in salt."—Holland. Plinie. "Brown. Lennep says, that the reason of the name is not very clear.

GAS, s. -Eous. A general name, app. orig. by Van Helmont, to elastic fluids. Now to—any kind of air differing from that of the atmosphere.

GASCONADE, v. From Gascon, a native of Gascony; to whom the vice of idle boasting was attributed.

GASH, v. s. To cut; to cut, sc. deeply, widely.

Probably from A.S. Gashcan, contracted into gash, and the ce softened into ch or sh; conclina, dissecare, secundo comminere, to cut, to cut in pieces. See HACK, and HASH.

GASKINS. See GALLIGASKINS.

GASP, v. s. -ING. To open; to open, suband with a struggle for, a convulsive emission of breath: to pant; to pant after, and thus, met. to seek or desire eagerly.

For epenthesis of the letter s, from the v. To gasp, (qv.)—St.

GAST, or GHAFT, v. To make aghast,—

-LY. to terrify, to frighten. Gastful,

-LINESS. —frightful. Gastly, —like one

-FUL. agazed, terrified; hideous with

-NESS.† affright, terrific.

**Spenser*. †Chaucer. Shak.

Sk. thinks that Gastly is, qd. ghostly or ghost-like. "Aghast or agast may be the past p. Agazed, Agazed may mean, made to gaze; a v. built on the v. To gaze. Gasted, i. e. made aghast; which is again a v. built on the pt. Aghast. Gastered (Beau. & F.) may be supposed an ignorantly coined or fantastical cant word, or corruptly used for gasted." Tooke considers that it may be an objection to this derivation, that the word agast always denotes a considerable degree of terror; which To gaze does not; for we may gaze with delight, with wonder or admiration; he, therefore, inclines to the Go. Agide, territus, the past p. of Agyas, timere; which Agide might become agidist or agidst, agist, agast. But see AGAST.

GASTRIC, ad. "The gastric juice, is the liquor which digests the food in the stomachs of animals."—Foley.

From Gr. Gastron, the belly.

GATE, s. The way gone; a way, a road,

-ED. path or passage. To take the -HOUSE. gate, take the way or road; go away, depart. It is also app. to—a large door, as the gate of the city; to a door into fields.

Gatehouse was the name of a prison over the gate at the north entrance of Dean's-yard, Westminster.

Go. Gagg; A. S. Gata, gat, from Go. Gaggan; A. S. Gangan: gan, ire, to go: the way gaged, gane or gone; that through which or along which, (figur.) It is gaged, gade, gate. Dan. Gade, a street. In-Out

GATHER, v. s. To bring or draw into

-ABLE. one place; to collect, to assemble,

-ER. to congregate; also, to select or

-ING. pick out; to contract, to accumulate; to get, to acquire.

A. S. Gaderian, colligere, congregate; D. Gaderem. In-Re-Un-Up-

GATTOOTHED, ad. Whether we read Gat-toothed with the generality of the MSS., or Cat-toothed with one MS., or Gap-toothed with Urry, Mr. Tyrw. confesses himself equally unable to explain what is meant by this circumstance of description. Gat-toothed, says Mr. Todd, (in his Glossary to the Illustrations of Gower and Chaucer,) is Goat-toothed. Goat is written by our old writers Gat or Gate. Sk. had suggested this etym.; but of what Chaucer meant by the word, he professes his ignorance. Mr. Todd thinks the meaning clear and pointed, when we consider the (goatish) disposition of the person to whom the word is app. Dryden follows Urry.

GAUD, s. Cons.—A pleasing trifle, a

-ED. toy, a bawble, a piece of finery;

-ERY. any trumpery.

-Y. Gaudy, ad. is—fine, showy; osten-

-ISH. tationally, gorgeously fine, showy

-ILY. or gay.

-INESS. Dr. Jamieson, following the Glossarist, explains the word in G. Douglas,—a trick. Tooke produces the same passage in support of his etym. and explanation. Geu-gaw, he says, is in A. S. Ge-gaf, the past p. of the v. Gegifan; and means, any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one. Gaud (he adds) has the same meaning, and is the same word, with the omission of the prefix ge, gi, or gew, and is the past p. of Gif-an; gaved, gaw'd, gaud. May not the D. Gad-en, gaggen, to please, to gratify, (formed perhaps from an A. S. v. Ge-gadian, comp. of ge, and cad-ian, cad-igan, which latter Lye interprets, beatificare,) be the true etym. ?—See the 8vo. ed. of Tooke, and see also GAV. G. Douglas might intend, "By sic ane gaude," by such trumpery; i. e. such trumpery pretences as the command of a deity. There is nothing corresponding in Virgil.

"Quhat God amovit him with sic ane gaude
In his dedis to use sic alicht and fraude."

Steevens has remarked (Note on Anthony and Cleopatra) that gaudy "is still an epithet bestowed on feast-days in the colleges of either University."

GAVELKIND, s. An ancient custom (Spel.) of the Anglo-Saxons, brought from Germany, by which all the sons, or, if no sons, all the daughters, take the inheritance of their father; and, if no children, all the brothers; if no brothers, all the sisters. "Gavelkind is a custom anciently observed in Kent, whereby the land of the father is equally divided among his brethren, if he have no issue of his own."—Spel.

Spel.; so called, q. debitum, seu tributum (A. S. Gafol, or gafol); soboli, pueris, generi; (A. S. Cyn, or kind;) or, (as Lambard says) gif cal cyn; i. e. omnibus cognatione proximis datum: given to all the next of kin. Som. from same Gaf-ol, and kind, genus; qd. a tributary kind of land or farm, prædium vectigale. And of this Sk. approves.

GAUGE, v. s. —ER. To measure a cask or other vessel; to ascertain the quantity it may contain; met. to measure.

See in Men. the opinions of Rigault, Le Duchat, and Casen. Fr. Jauge, gauge; the instrument (says Cot.) wherewith a cask is measured. Janger, to measure a piece of cask. Jaugeur, or gager, or, as Rastall writes, gaugeur. Low L. Gagga. The A. S. Ge-wag-an, to weigh—and thence, generally, to mete, to measure—may be the root. Un-

GAUNT, ad. Waned, fallen away, meagre.

Sk.—I believe, qd. Gewant, from A. S. Ge-wan-tan, wastan; and Tooke, Gaunt, is gewanod, gewand, gewant, g'want, gaunt; the past p. of Ge-wan-tan, to wane, to decrease, to fall away.

GAUNTLET, s. A glove or covering for the protection of the hand; and (from the custom of throwing one of these by way of challenge) any thing thrown or proffered in challenge.

Fr. Gantelet, which Cot. calls "an arming glove." The Fr. Gant; It. Gaan-to; Sp. te; D. Ger. & Sw. Wante, Sk. thinks from A. S. Wind-an, to wind, to infold, to wrap up; (which, with the usual A. S. prefix ge, would be ge-wind-an;) because in the cold northern regions they were accustomed to infold or wrap up the hands in the skins of animals.

GAUZE, s. "A fine thin sort of web," and so called perhaps because first introduced from Gaza, a city of Palestine.

Fr. Gaze; Sp. Gaza. Du Cange, in v. Gazzasum, says—Linum vel sericum subtilissimum, commonly gaxze.

GAWBY. See GARY.

GAWKY, ad. "Awkward; gen. used to signify a tall awkward person."—Gross.

Gawk, (Sk. says,) from A. S. Gace, gace, see, a cuckoo; all from the sound.—See Jamieson, in v. Gawk, a fool, and Gowk, the cuckoo.

GAY, ad. Gaudy, fine, showy; osten-

-I-ET. tationally fine or showy; met.

-LY. lively, cheerful, merry, jovial.

-NESS. **Mir. for Mag.*

-SOME. * Fr. Gay; It. Gaio. Mins. says, perhaps from Gaudeo; Sk. from D. Gaden, gaggen, placere, convenire; and this, perhaps, from Gaudere, to rejoice. Men. writes largely, but to little purpose. L'Estrange uses Gays, s. exactly as our elder writers use Gaude, or Gee-gaude, (qv.); and it is not at all improbable that it may have the same origin gaw, gay. See GAUD.

GAZE, v. s. To see, to look, to view.

-ER, s. subaud. with attention, eager-

-ING. ness, admiration, or other strong

-HOUD. feeling.

-FUL. * Gaze-hound,—so called, because

-MENT. it hunts by the eye.—**Sprayer*.

Sk. :—Contentis oculis aspiciere, to look with stretched eyes; from the A. S. Ge-ecan, to see, to look. A- Up-

GAZELLE, s. An animal partaking of the nature of deer and goat, remarkable for the beauty of its eyes.

Fr. Gazel-le; It. la; Sp. Gazel.

GAZETTE, s. —ER. "A certain Venetian coin, scarce worth a farthing; also, a kind of news; or a short relation of the general occurrences of the time, forged most commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed every month, into most parts of Christendom."—Cot. So called because sold for gazetta.—See Men. It. Gazet-ta; Fr. Gazette.

GE. (See letters C and G.) The G. A. S. Ge, (much used as a prefix to old words.) Lye and Wach. affirm that Ge for the most part, otiosa: the former add that it sometimes has the force of the Cum; and the latter, that it serves sometimes (aug-ere, to eke,) to increase, augment signification; and this augmentation it appears to effect, by denoting prolongation or continuity of sensation, motion, or action. Or this prefix may have been assumed more immediately from the A. S. v. Gan, to go; and then, as a general term, expressing motion (without which it can have no ideas of time or action), it has been intended to give force to the words which it was so pref. "I must go and do, and see," are common phrases; and in the north of England, "I must go see, go go weed," &c. is the vulgar form of see-ge, Ge, (g hard) and its cognate Ce, (c hard) before the liquids l and r not unfrequently drop the e, and unite in haasty pronunciation with the liquid:—Ge-l, gl; ge-r, gr; GLoom, GRIST;) Ce-l, cl; ce-r, cr; CLINCH, CRINGE.) See BE.

GEALOUS. See JEALOUS.

GEAR, or GZER, s. Any thing prepared or provided, (for any purpose;) preparation, apparatus, furniture; means of subsistence or support; harness or portions of harness. And, as Mr. Tyrw. says, "All sorts of instruments, of cookery, of war, of apparel, of chemistry. 'In her quaint geres,'—all sorts of strange fashions:"—he refers to instances of all these usages in Chaucer.

From A. S. gearwe, paratus, gearwian, pręparare, to prepare.

GEAZON,* ad. Ray says,—Scarce, hard to come by, (Essex.)

*Not uncommon in our old poets.

GECK,* s. Any one derided or mocked; and thus, a fool; a jest, mockery or derision.—*Shak.

Ger. Geck, guschi; D. Gheck; Sw. Geck; D. Ghecken; Sw. Gekkas, ludificare, deridere, to make sport of to deride.

GEHENNA,* s. "Not far from Hierusalem, is a valley shadowed with wood, called Gehinnon, or Tophet, from whence is the word Gehenna used for hell."

*Hakewill.

GELD, s. To yield or cause to yield or give up; and thus, to deprive, (sc. of an essential part or portion,) to mutilate.

"Gelding, signifieth a subduing of our passions, and taming the foul lust of pleasure, unto the will of reason."—Wilson.

"In our old writers an eunuch is called a gelding." "There ben geldyngis that han made himself for the rewme of hevenea."—Wyclif, Matt.

"A geldyng had the empire in his handes."—Brende, Q. Curt.

Den. Gilder; D. Gelt-en; Ger. Goldten; Sw. Gelde; A. S. Gylle, castratus, not improbably from Gelt-en, to yield or give up.

GILD, ad. Cool or cold; cold to excess. Gildus, from Gel-are, to keel or cool. Ad-

GELLY, s. That which thickens or stiffens, concretes or coagulates. Gelatinous, in cooling; and Gelatinous, is—sticky, adhesive; viscous.

See JELLY. Fr. Gelde, (Cot.) is frozen, congealed, thickened or stiffened with extreme cold. Gelle, a frost, also gelly. And Sk. Gelly, & gelle; succus frigoris concretus.

GILT,* i. e. The gilt or the gold.—*King.

GEM, v. s. To gem,—to bud forth; to put forth, to cover with buds; to

GEM,* stud, to decorate or adorn, as adorned with gems.—*Brown. †Pennant.

A. S. Gym, gym-stan; Jun. from Gym-ar, to guard or guard carefully; as gym usually are so preserved. Fr. Gem-me; It. & L. Gemma. Mar. Id quod in arboribus tumescit, cum parere incipit, a geno, id est, gigno; hence, he adds, the seed and stones of that form or shape, on account of their roundness (instar oculi) are called gems.

GEMEL, s. Sk. says, Annulus Gemellus, because it consists of two or more circles. It is also written Gemmow.

Sk., Gemelles, a word of Heraldry, manifestly from L. Gemelli. Barrs gemelles, i. e. piga seu par barrarum seu vectum, two or a pair of bars. In Brewer's Lingua, (Act ii. sc. 4,) a character is described, in a grave satin suit, purple buskins, a garland of bays and rosemary, a gimmal ring with one link hanging.

GEMINATE, v. App. emph., when two -ATION. are brought forth at the same -OUS.* parturition; and thus, to geminate is, cons.—to double; to repeat a second time, to reduplicate.—*Brown.

Fr. Géminer; Sp. Geminar; It. & L. Geminare, to double; from Geminus, quasi geminus, from the ancient Gemo, (as the Gr. Γέμω, from γεν-ειν), to bring forth or produce. In-

GEMONIES,* s. L. Gemonie, (sub. scale,) certain stairs at Rome, (so called a gemitu), upon which the bodies of criminals were exposed, and from which they were afterwards thrown.—*Massinger. B. Jonson.

GENDARMES,* s. -MORY.† Cot.—"A man of arms; an horseman armed at all points, one that serves in compleat armour, and on a great horse."—*Burnet. †Styrpe.

Sk. says,—Gendarme, a word which I have met with only in the English Dictionary, & Gens d'Armes, men of arms or armed men.

GENDER, v. s. To beget, to procreate, to breed, (to kin.)

In Shak. the s. is app. to—kind of people, sort of people, (Hamlet, Act iv.)

Fr. Genre, from ablative generis, from gignere; Gr. Γενειν, to beget, (to kin.) En- or In-

GENEA-LOGY, s. A discourse on kinds -IC. or families, on their descent or suc- -ICAL. cession; a pedigree.

GENERIC, ad. App. logically to the -AL. word or term, which denotes all
-AL-LY. of the same kind.
-NESS. From L. Genus, generic. See GENUS and GENERAL.

GENEROUS, ad. Noble or illustrious,
-LY. (by birth or descent;) nobly
-NESS. minded; liberal or munificent;
-OSITY. magnanimous, courageous.

Fr. Généreux; It. & Sp. Generoso; L. Generosus; from genus, kind. Generous (Voss.) is opposed to degenerate, (à genere recedere,) to depart from the kind or nature—emph., the noble or illustrious kind or race. Un-

GENET, or JENNET, s. A horseman, equipped with armour of a peculiar description, was first called in Sp. Ginete, and afterwards the word was transferred to the horses themselves.

Mins. derives the word (genet, a kind of horse) from the L.—optimus generationis caballus, a horse of the best breed or blood. Jun. says,—Fr. Genêt d'Espagne; It. Ginetto di Spagna.

GENET, or JENNET, s. "Fr. Genêt,—a kind of weasel, black spotted, and bred in Spaine."—Cot. Sk. thinks it may be so called from Guinea, because first noticed there by Europeans.

GENETHLIACAL, ad. -ATIC, s. The s.—one who forms predictions from the natal day, or day of birth.

Fr. Généthliacus; L. Genethliacus; Gr. Γενεθλιακος, from γενεθλην, and this from γεννέω, gignere, to bear or bring forth.

GENICULATE, v. -ION. Mins. says,—To geniculate or joint. And knotted or jointed plants, like the sugar cane, are called geniculated.

Hall applies Geniculation to the bending of the joint; to kneeling; genuflexion.

L. Geniculare, from genu, the knee.

GENIUS, s. Genius is app. to—A sup-

Courteousness or urbanity of manner; disposition; affability, mildness; freedom from roughness or rudeness, coarseness, grossness or vulgarity; thus, is equivalent to—

Courteous, affable, mild, meek.

Gent is a common word in our writers, gen. expressing the softer quality of the female sex,—Meek, kind, tender, and, as opposed to gross, vulgar, Chaucer, (Tyrrw.) neat and pretty. words in our old writers are very variously written.—Chaucer. † Ascham.

Fr. Gent, -il; It. -ile; Sp. -il, from L. and this from genus. (See GENERAL.) In his Topics, (c. 6.) enumerates as particular divisions necessary for the complete definition of gentilis; 1. Qui inter se eodem nomine sunt. Qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt. 3. Quorum nemo nemo servitutem servit. 4. Qui cum sunt deminuti. And it is from a just pride in rank, the honour, the nobility of family, the modern applications of gentile, gentel, &c. to their origin. "Genus in Latine betokeneth race and surname, so the Romans had Geni Sergios, Appios, Fabios, Emillios, Pios, Brutos, Valerios, of which who were gentes therefore kept the name, were also gentes remaining the memorie of the glory of their gentitor's fame, were gentlemen of that of race."—*Str T. Gr. Γεωπονικος, from γεωπονειν, terram colere, to till the earth; from γη, the earth, and πονειν, labour, to work.

GEORGE, s. The insignia of St. George.

GEORGE, s. The local or temporary mean for the application of this word to each of a particular kind, is mere matter of conjecture. So used by Dryden.

GEORGIC, s. ad. App. to—Books concerning the tillage or cultivation of the earth or ground.

Fr. Géorgique; It. -iche; Sp. -icas; L. Georgici; Gr. Γεωργικος, from γεωργη, (γη, the earth, and εργον, work,) a labourer, a tiller of the earth.

GER-FALCON, GERE- or GEIRE-, s. A bird.

Fr. Gerfaul, grefaut; It. Gerfalcone; Sp. Gier-falco; D. Gier-falk; Ger. Ger-falck; Mid. L. Gier-falco. "Perhaps," says Sk. "a gyrando quia gyrans nunc ducit," because it forms circles in the air. He, however, prefers the etym. of Mins. Gier, a culture, and valek, a falcon; because it is a species of falcon, and resembles the vulpine in voracity. Holland renders L. Fuller,—gier.

GERFUL, ad. GERY.† In Chaucer, gyrry.—Changeable. In Skelton it seems to be giddy, sc. with turning round. See GERFAULCON.—†Chaucer. Skelton.

Probably from Gier, to turn round.—Tyrw. Ger—from A. B. Carren, ge-cerran, vertere, to turn.

Festus and (after him) Voss decide for the former; Var. and Isidorus, for the latter. Voss contends that those descended from the same father, not those from the same mother (genitrix) were called Germani.

GERUND, s. -INE.* In Grammar,—A part of speech.—"Beau. & F."

GET, v. To gain, to acquire, to reach, to -T-ER. attain, to obtain, to procure, to produce, to generate.

To get has various cons. usages:—To produce, to educate, to draw out.

To, or to cause to, obtain or attain; and thus,—to possess, to be or put in possession.

To get over,—gain, sc. the mastery or victory, to overcome.

To get his part, (Churchill),—to gain or acquire a knowledge of it; and thus,—to learn.

It is app. to—any motion, by which the gaining or reaching another specific place or position is effected; as to get to land, i. e. to gain it, reach it. Get thee away; get thee gone; get up.

To reach, attain, arrive at, &c. some other place or position.

Tyrw. says, "Fr. Gette,—fashion, behaviour. 'With that false get,'—with that cheating contrivance."

GEWGAW, s. ad. A pleasing toy or trifle; a pretty, showy, plaything.

Gewgawes, nugæ speciosæ, infantum delicias — Sk. A. S. Ge-gaf, nugæ, toys, trifles, gugawes or gugawds.—Som. "Gegaf, (Tooke) is the pt. of the v. Ge-gif-an; and means any such trifling thing as is given away, or presented to any one. Gew-gawes is sometimes written Gi-gawes, and Gewgawds." But see GAUDE.

GHESS, v. s. i. e. Guess, (qv.)

*Spenser. Holinshed.

GHOST, v. s. -LY. Ghost, s. may have orig. meant—Any thing seen, a vision or spectre, a spirit or spiritual spectre: gen.—spirit, a soul.

A. S. Gast; Ger. Geist; D. Gheest. Sk. thinks that this word, as Gr. Πνεύμα, and L. Spiritus, meant breath, air; and that by the Germans and A. S., upon their conversion to Christianity, it was app. ad animas et angelos. An angel or spiritual messenger is in A. S. emph. described as Godes ærende-gast; God's errand-ghost. Som. says, Gast, spiritus, pncuna, a spirit, a ghost; item, anima, the soul, the spirit or ghost of a man; and he suggests A. S. Gest, hospes, a guest; the soul being the body's guest. It may be remarked that Gasted in Leaz, (see GAZ),—

"Gasted by the noise I made Full suddenly he fled;"

and Ghosted in Antony & Cleopatra, ("Julius Cæsar, who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,") notwithstanding the particular allusion; and also Ghost in Burton, ("Aske not what madness ghosts this old man, but what madness ghosts us all,") appear to have a very similar signification;—that Ghostly and Ghostly are not in writers very clearly distinguishable;—that Gasted, (see AGHAST), is nearly equivalent to L. Spectrum, visum, visio. GIAMBEUX, s. Boots or armour for the legs.—*Spenser.

Fr. Jambeux. Jambeux is used by Chaucer in Sir Topas.

GIANT, s. ad. An earth-born monster;

-ESS. app. to one, exceeding man in size, -LY. or in evil qualities.

-SHIP. *Fielding: Tom Thumb.

-ISM. Gr. Géant; It. & Sp. Gigante; L. Gigas; Gr. Γίγας, (perhaps) from γίγασθαι, to be or cause to be, and γα, Dor. for γα, the earth, qd. γίγαντες, earth-born, terrigena; an epithet app. to them by Lucan, and adopted in Eng. by Milton. See GIANTIC.

GIB, v. s. To gib is—to play the cat; act -ING. like one.

-CAT. "The cut of his gib," is a vulgar

-SHIP. expression which may have taken its rise from the proverbially melancholy visage of a cat; and app. to any singularity of countenance.

G I D

A horse is said to gib, when he refuses to press against his collar; but this may be properly To gibe, (qv.) from A. S. Gabban, to delude or elude, and thus, evade; to shrink from.

Gib is also the name of a sail.

The commentators on Shak. (1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 2) have written very largely upon this word as app. to a cat, and have produced numerous instances of its usage, but have thrown no light upon the origin of the term. Mins. says, "A Gib-cat is an expression exactly analogous to that of a Jack-ass, the one being formerly called Gibb or Gilbert, as com. as the other Jack. Tom-cat is now the usual term. Tiberius is to be old Fr. for Gilbert, and appears as the name of the Cat in the old story-book of Reynard the Fox. Chaucer, in the Rom. of the Rose, gives 'Gibbe our cat,' as the translation of 'Tiberius cas.'"

GIBBER, v. -ISH, v. s. ad. See JABBER and also GIBE and GAB.

*Holinshed. *Milton.

Under A. S. v. Gab-ban, (see GAB) Som. says "Hence Fr. Gabber; D. Gabberen, and our v. Gab, gabber; and hence also, I take it, our berish; a kind of canting language used by a set of rogues we vulgarly call Gypsies; a gibberish understood only among themselves." And Lep. Gabban; unde forsan, Gabbie, Gibberish.

GIBBET, v. s. App. to—A cross, which persons are hanged or their heads affixed.

To gibbet,—to fix to, to raise or elevate upon, a gibbet or cross.

Fr. Gibet; which Sk. and Men. think may be from L. Gabalus, denoting a cross; and v. Voea. has no doubt is borrowed from the Matthew Paris calls it (gibbet) horrible patibulum.

GIBBOUS, or GIBBOSE, ad. Standing -OSITY.* rising out, projecting, -OUSNESS.† minent.—*Wilkins. †Bentley. Fr. Gibbeus; It. -soo; Sp. -oso; L. Gibbus Of uncertain etym.

GIBE, v. s. To jest at, to mock, to sneer -ER. to sneer at, to deride; to thrust -INGLY. out sneers, scoffs, or taunts.

A. S. Gabban, deridare, bludere, to mock, to deride, to sport to jibe or jest. Som. adds, perhaps Fr. Gab-er; D. -boren. To GAB; and also JAYE.

GIBLET, s. App. to—Certain small parts (or gobbets, according to Mins.) of a goose, duck, &c.; as the feet, pinions, head, &c. gizzard.

Mins. says, forte q. gobbets. Jun.; perhaps, the change of r into b, from Fr. Giblet; and (according to Cot.) of any kind that's hunted or hawked at. Roquesfort writes, "Giblets, gibbet, gimbellet, giolet, guimbellet, guinlet; giblet, gibbarium.—See Giblet, in Men.

GIDDY, v. ad. The ad.—high, elevated.

-ILY. lifted up; and therefore, -INESS. unsteady, head-less.

-ISH.* The v.—to dizzy; to make giddy, dizzy or unsteady; to move dizzily or unsteadily; to turn or whirl unsteadily round.

*Drant.

Som. has, A. S. Gidig, stultus, vertiginosus, foolish, giddy; but Lye acknowledges no such word. Sk. says, it is perhaps from Giddian, &c.

slag; or from Gled-on, to glide, to slip. In A. S. Ge-head is elevated,—from ge-heaf-an, heafan, to heave, to lift up: past p. heafed, heaf'd, head, (whence heady.) Ge-head, contracted into Geed, with the term ig or y, might become geedy, giddy, i. e. high, (qv.) elevated, raised or lifted up; and, conso., having heafod-wines, a swimming of the head, a dizziness or giddiness: and wine or other fermented liquor is still said to be heady, when it quickly produces a swimming or dizziness in the head.

GIE,* s. Tytw. says, Sax. To guide, (qv.) *Chaucer.

GIG, s. Gig is app. to a plaything; as a -SKE. whirly or whirling gig; to an -GLE, s. instrument to play upon; to a
-GLE, s. dance; to a playful or wanton
-LOT, ad. s. person; to playfulness itself; to
-LOTLIKE. a light two-wheeled carriage; to a boat (going with, or) attending upon a ship; to a dart or spear; to a certain description of mill, called a gig-mill.

Gig or Giglot,—to an active, playful, lively, or wanton person.

Gig-gle, a dim. of Gig; to laugh playfully, wantonly; and thus—continually, with little or no reason.

Tytw. interprets Giggles, in Chaucer, "irregular sounds produced by the wind, &c."

Gig or Jig,—Ger. Geige; D. Ghiepke; Fr. Gigue; It. Giga,—a musical instrument (idea) is derived by Wach. from Geg-en or Juck-en, ficare, to rub or scrape. A gig or top, by Jun., from Geige, the musical instrument. Giggle, cachinnari, effusus ridere; D. Gechen, gickelen, Jun. derives from Sk. Kxh-ge-en, lacivis atque effusus ridere. Giglot, by Jun. from A. S. Gangle; D. Gheyligh, lascivus. It may admit of plausible conjecture, that the root of all these words is A. S. Gang-an, to go.

GIGANTIC, ad. Of great size or stature, large dimensions: giant-like.
-ALLY. I. Gigantius, from gigas. (See GIANT.)
Fr. Gigant-in; It. ino; Sp. eo.

GIGOT, s. Cot. calls a gigot de mouton, a leg of mutton cut large with the whole bone at it, and so roasted; some, likewise, so call a loin from which the chine is taken. "I believe," says Sk., "from L. Jugum, qd. jugum seu confugatio osium tibiae et femoris." Gigot de mouton; Gigot, Mén. says, is a dim. of Gigue, qd. signifie cuisse: and gigue, he derives from L. Cosa. Chapman translates Μισογύλον, (i. e. cut into small pieces,) by the words,—In giggots cut.

GILD, v. As now com. used, To gild is—
-ED. To cover or overlay with gold;
-ING. with any thing bright or glaring,
-ED. brilliant or splendid; and thus—
GILT, v. s. to brighten, to adorn, to have or give a golden colour; met. a brilliant or specious colouring or appearance.

The gilt, emph.—the gold. See GELT. *Chaucer.

A. S. Gild-an; D. Guld-en; Ger. Gulden, perhaps from A. S. Ge-el-an, accendere, to kindle, to kindle, past p. Ge-ald, galed, gald, geld or gild; and the v. formed (as is common) upon the past p.; and thus, gild-an will mean,—to have or cause to have the colour of a flame, a flame colour, yellow colour. See YELLOW. Be- En- Over- Un-

GILL, s. Organs, through which fish inhale and exhale water, and (thence) air. In birds,—the flap below the beak.
Sk. from L. Gula, the throat. In Sp. Agalla.

GILL, s. A very small measure. Etym. uncertain. In Eng. Wine Measure, 4 gills = 1 pint.

GILL, s. Every Jack must have his Gill. It ought (says Ray) to be written Jyll, for it seems to be a nick-name for Julia, or Juliana. It is perhaps a corruption of Giggle or Giglot, (qv.)

GILL, s. Ray, in his South and East Country Words, calls Gill, a rivulet, a beck. In a catalogue of north country words received from a Mr. Tomlinson, it is said to be a place hemm'd in with two steep brows or banks, flourishing with brush wood, a rivulet running between them. It is perhaps the same word as Gull, Gully, (qv.)

GILLI-FLOWER, s. A flowering plant.

Either so called (Sk.) because it flowers in July, or rather, by metathesis, from Fr. Girafée; Sp. & Port. Geroffe; It. Garo-folo, -fio, -fano, all (I believe) corrupted from Gr. & L. Καρου φυλλον, (nucis folium), because this flower resembles in its scent the Indian aromatic Caryophyllon, (or Nux Indica.—Mina.)

GILT-HEAD, s. "This fish takes its name from its predominant colour; that of the fore-head and sides being as if gill, but the last is marked lengthways with numbers of bright lines."—Pennant.

GIM-CRACK, s. App. to—A mere spruce and pert pretender; any slight, unsubstantial or trifling thing.

Sk. says, contracted from Engin. Gym or Gimp is probably from A. S. Gym-an, curare, to care or be careful, or attentive, sc. to person or dress, (and thus, neat, spruce, dapper,) and crack, (qv.) a noisy boaster, a pert, forward pretender.

GIMLET, or GIMBLET, s. A tool, to bore with.

From Fr. Giblet, giblet, gimbelet. As wimble is from D. Wemelen; so Gimblet, qd. guimblet, gewimblet, is probably from ghe-wemelen, to bore, to perforate.

GIMMEL, s. GIMMER. "A gimmer-lamb, an ewe lamb; fort. q. a gammer-lamb."—Ray. May it not rather be a twin-lamb? Gimmer,—one of two, sc. pieces of machinery, mechanical contrivances, strings or rings, &c. See GEMEL.

GIMP, GIM. Also Yemp. See Lye in Jun.

GIN, v. -NING. To make the first motion, to take the first step, to enter upon, to commence.

From Gan-g-an, to go. Gin, and the pret. Gan, are in common use with our old writers without the prefix be. Ihre observes, L. Initium, beginning, is formed from inire, initum:—app. to the first motion towards any act, purpose or design.

GIN, v. s. To take or catch in a gin or en-gine, (i. e. a machine, tool, or instrument ingeniously wrought or contrived;) a snare, a trap.

GIR

GIN, s. Fr. Genièvre, juniper. A spirit so named, because flavoured by the berries of the juniper; and formerly called Genœva.

GING, s. i. e. Gang, (qv.) a manner of writing the word not uncommon in our old writers.—See the commentators on Shak. (Merry Wives.)

GINGER, s. -BREAD. "Many have taken ginger (which some call zimberi, and others zingiberi), for the root of that tree; but it is not so, although in taste it somewhat resembleth pepper. For ginger groweth in Arabia and Trogodytica, in meadows about the villages; and it is a white root of a certain little hearb."—Holland. Plinie.

It. Genero; Sp. Gin-gibre; Fr. gembre; L. Zinziber; Gr. Ζιγγί-βερσις.

GINGERLY, av. Gingerly, (ghongerly), youngerly, and, therefore—Tenderly, delicately, (as if afraid of doing harm.)

A. S. Ging, geonge, young; gingre, geongre, Old Eng. Ghonghere, i. e. younger.

GINGLE, v. s. -ER. Also written Jingle.

The s. is app. to—The noise of small pieces of metal shaken together, of thin metal struck; (met.) to an affectation of musical sound. To gingle,—To make or cause such or similar sound, or affectation of sound.

L. Tinnire, a word without doubt formed from the sound.—Sk. Perhaps from Ger. Kling-en; D. ker. See CLARE.

GIPE, s. Cot.—Fr. Gippon, a short cassiere. sock. Sk.—"Gippo is with us a -ON." short outer tunic or garment."

GYPEL. Tyrw.—"Gipe is an upper frock or cassock; Gipon, a short cassock; and Gipciere, a panch or purse."—Chaucer.

Fr. Juppe, juppon, gippon; It. Giubbona, giubba; Sp. Jabon, juba. Of uncertain etym.

GIRD, v. s. -ER. To nip, to pinch, to twinge or twitch; as, to have or make a gird, to have or make a twitch or twinge, to make a hit; and, consa.—

To aim a blow or stroke; to hit, to strike, to smite.

Met. to have or make a hit or stroke, sc. of wit or raillery, or sarcasm, is—To jeer, joke or jibe, to scoff at, to mock, to flout, to sneer at; to throw out sneers, scoffs, or taunts.

To gird,—to smite, to strike, as Tyrw. interprets it.

In Sc. writers, Dr. Jamieson observes, it is much used with the pr. Through. And so in Chaucer, thugh-girt; and hence, to pierce. See GRIDE.

It is probably no more than a cons. usage of gird-an, to surround, to bind round, tie round, bind tight round; and thus,—as above explained.

GIRL, s. Girl is now used only to denote—-ISH. A female, a young female, (of the -ED. human species).—Corbet.

This word is not found in any of the northern dialects. Sk. suspects, that as Coeri in A. S. signified male, so Coeria signified female, though as such word is now found in existence. Lye observes, that Girt in our old writers is app. to a male, (as well as a female), and he therefore decides for Coeri. Hickee, (Gram. A. S. p. 167), perhaps from Coertina, femina, apud Ciceros; though he notices the application of the word to male, and quotes from P. Plouhman: "Gramme for gurlen." Tyrw. repeats the observation of Lye. A. S. Coeri, Ger. Keri, D. Kaeri, Sw. Kari, do not appear to have been ever app. to the female. See Bor.

From L. Cithara; Gr. Kithara.

GIVE, v. To give, in its most ordinary

-ER. usages, is equivalent to—

-ING. To confer or transfer, to commit.

GIFT, s. v. or transmit, to bestow, to endow,

-LESS. to grant, to concede, to yield, to consign or resign.

It admits of the substitution of various words, according to the context.

To give, with a subaud. of power or ability; and thus, to empower, to enable, to authorize.

With a subaud. of utterance or speech; and thus, to speak or utter, pronounce or declare, publish or proclaim.

As a result, inference, or conclusion; and thus, to show, to exhibit, to infer, to conclude.

To give the mind, thoughts, or inclinations; and thus, to incline, to addict, to devote.

When used with pra., the phrase may be interpreted in similar manner.

In D. (see Kilian) Glacrende ooghen is, oculi cæci, glaci; glac oogigh, cædus sive glaucus oculis. And this Sk. derives from Fr. Escalier, to glitter, to shine; and Fr. from L. Clarare, i. e. claritatem evibrare, to dart forth brightness; for grey (or blue) eyes are (lucidiores) more lucid, and on that account reflect a fuller light.

GLAVE, GLAIVE, or GLEAVE, s. A gleave

A glavering fellow,—a parasite, a flatterer. A S. Glivo-are is a parasite—from Glivo-an, scurrum agere, to act the buffoon.—Lye. To act the buffoon can only be a consequential application, not the meaning. See GLER.

GLEAM, v. s. To gleam, is—to irradiate, -ING. or dart or throw a ray of light; to -Y. glitter, to shine, to enlighten; to emit or issue a slightly perceptible degree of light.

SK. says, from Leoma, light, from leoman, to shine; and this from L. Luena. Tooke, that the s. Gleam is "the past part. of A. S. Leoman, loman, ge-leoman, ge-loman, radiare, coruscare, lucere;" to irradiate, to glitter, to enlighten. He derives Gloom from the same past p.—but the two words are opposed in their application. Gleam is app. to the light, which penetrates the darkness; gloom to the darkness gleamed upon, through which the light penetrates, or by which it is overshadowed. "It [laughter] breaks the gloom which is apt to depress the mind and damp our spirits with transient unexpected gleams of joy."—Spectator. See GLOOM.

GLEAN, v. s. To pick or gather the ears -ER. of corn after the reapers; and then, -ING. gen., to glean is—to pick up, gather or collect.

"Fr. Glaner, to pick up ears of corn after the reapers."—Cot. Nicol (see in Ménage) thinks it is so called, quasi glander, or glande; because acorns (glandes) were the first fruits gleaned or picked up. Casen. derives it from a barbarous L. word Gelima, which, says Martin., is formed from the beginnings of the three words, gens ligare manus: (because sheaves of corn are bound by the hand upon the knee.) See Martin. and Du Cange. Men. considers this etym. of M. Casen. equally learned, ingenious, and true. Spel. derives this gelima, or gelina, from Fr. Gleina. The true etym. seems to be A. S. Ge-leanian, corrupted into gleanian, glean: ge-leanian is compounded of the usual prefix ge, and leanian, (to lend.) to grant or bestow a benefit or advantage. The Sw. Lean, (Ger. Lean), is properly (says Ihre) a concession, any thing given or granted to another; in a more special sense it appears to have denoted a grant from a lord to a vassal: and hence the application also seems manifest to—The leave or permission granted—to pick, &c.

GLEBE, s. -Y. App. to—The unbroken mass, the closely pressed surface, of the soil or ground;—gen. the soil, the ground. And, as Fr. Glèbe,—land belonging to a parsonage.

Fr. Glèbe; L. Glèbe, by metathesis from Gr. Βυλος, g inserted!—Foss. Βυλος, contracted from Βαυλος, has its application, ad glebam, a condensing, from condensing, (i. e.) pressing or treading close.—Lennepe.

GLEE, s. Glee appears to mean,—sound; -FUL. then app. to musical sound, to -SOME. music, to song; to cheerful, -MAN. mirthful song or music; and then, cons., to—the mirth itself, to joy, gaiety, jollity.

A. S. Gleow-ian, (ge-hlow-an) gliow-ian, gliw-ian, canere, to sound, to sing. Gleo, glie, glig, musica, and cons. gaudium; glig-craft, musica; glig-man, musicus; and further, (as Warton says,) jocular. See LAR.

GLEED, s. GLODE. Anything heated or hot; as, hot coal or wood.

A. S. Gled, from Glow-an, gleow-an, (ge-hlow-an) to glow; gleow-an, past p. gleow-ed, glew-ed, gleed. Also glowed, glowde, glode.

GLEEK, v. s. Met. a catch, a trap, a trick, deception or deceit; and the v. To gleek, to catch, entrap or trick, to deceive, to delude or illude, to play upon, to scoff at.

SK. says, either from Ger. Gluck, fortune, or A. S. Ge-lie; Ger. Gleich, similis;—he only speaks of the word as app. to a game of cards. Dr. Jamieson says, that Sc. Gleik is a deception, a trick. To play the gleiks with one, to gull, to cheat; to get the gleik, to be gulled or cheated, and he seems inclined to suspect that it is radically the same (and indeed it appears to be really the same with a little difference in pronunciation) with the Northern Eng. Gleek, to deceive, to beguile; and that it may be from A. S. Glig, (see GLEX.) ludibrium, or Moes. G. Laik-as, to play or sport, or merely Ger. Glick-en, to shine.—The Ger. Gluck, (i. e. Ge-luck.) suggested by SK. is a modern Eng. Luck, any thing caught, a good or bad catch, from A. S. Lacc-an, ge-laccas, to catch. And Eng. Gleek, Sc. Gleik, is from the same Ge-laccas (glaccas), and means,—a catch.

GLEEN,* v. To glow, to kindle.

**Prior*.

Sc. Gleuin, formed from Glow-en, past p. of s. To glow, (qv.)

GLEET,* s. -Y. A thin, slimy, matter proceeding from the nervous parts—dis-eased.

Fr. Gleite, gleiteus, slimy, frothy, slegmy, filthy. —Cot. Ger. Gleite, fœx, spuma; gleiten, labi. SK. writes gliit, and calls it ichor, seu sanies tenuis et nervosis partibus lævis extillans; perhaps from D. Glyden, labi, to glide. These words are, for the most part, confined to medical writings; but Dr. Cheyne uses the v. gen.: "Condensed vapors gleet down the caverns of these mountains."—Philosophical Principles.

GLEIRE,* GLARE, or GLAYER,* s. A name now app. to a liquid employed by bookbinders previous to polishing.

**Chaucer. Mir. for Mag.*

SK. says, from Fr. Clair, clear; because white is—omnium colorum clarissimus. See GLARE.

GLEN, s. A declivity, a descent; and app. either to that descended from, or that descended to.

A. S. Glen, vallis, is given in Lye, but without any authority. The word is not in Jun., Min., or Barrett; neither is it used by Shak. or Milton. The Glossarist to G. Douglas remarks, that many countries to the south of Scotland terminate in dale, whereas to the north they have pref before the word Glen; Hib. Gleann, vallis; as Glen Rik, Glen Prossin, Glen Isla, &c. And this Irish etym. is repeated by Pinkerton and Chalmers. And Sk. forms Glenworth from the A. S. Glen, glana (Welsh, Glyn) a valley, and worth: Glin, Irish and Welsh, he adds, is—vallis arboribus cœta. Holland however renders glinaus: "The Gauls from the Albans Glinæus [Albanus montibus];" and the word may be from Ge-lin-ian, decumbere, to lean: and thus mean,—as above.

GLENT, v. i. e. To glance, (qv.)

GLEW. See GLUE.

GLIB, s. "Iren. They have another custom from the Scythians, that is, the wearing of mantles, and long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of hair, hanging down over their eyes and monstrously disguising them."—Spenser.

GLIB,* v. To geld.—**Shak.*

D. Lubben, castrare. (See LIA.) Kilian has also Ghe-lubi, castratus, past p. of Ghe-luben, which, contracted into glubb-en, would furnish the Eng. Glib.

GLIB, v. ad. The ad.—nimble, voluble ;
-LY. and, cons.—slippery, smooth ;
-NESS. and the v.—to smoothen.

-BERRY, ad. "Milton. "B. Jonson.

The L. Gliber, smooth, seems to present a word of signification nearly equivalent ; but the Fr. and It. have nothing from it which will enable us to trace any connexion. Sk. derives from the L. Lewis ; Gr. Aelior ; by prefixing g, changing e into i, and v into b. It may be a cognate of the A. S. 8-lipp-an, (lad-i;) or not improbably from A. S. Ge-leap-an, (contracted into gleap-an, gleep, or gleeb, giit;) to gallop ; to move fast, speedily, swiftly. And thus the ad. Glib,—as above explained.

GLICKES, s. a. Ogling or leering looks.

GLIDDER, v. To glidder, is—"to glaze over with some tenacious lacker."—Gifford.

GLIDE, v. s. To glide implies, in its application to living bodies,—continuity of motion without repeated action of the limbs ; to move or pass evenly, smoothly, and steadily. See SLIDE.

A. S. Glid-an, (Ge-lith-an, ge-lid-an,—see LITHE;) D. Gliden ; Dan. Glider ; Ger. Gleiten, glitschen, lidi, to slip, slide or glide.—Som. Over-

GLIMMER, v. s. -ING. To enlighten or illuminate, to irradiate, to shine upon, faintly, in a slight degree, unsteadily. Met.—to cause a faint or slight perception of light.

Dan. Glimmer. A dim. of Gleam, (qv.) From A. S. Ge-lloman, to lighten.

GLIMPSE, s. v. -ING. The s.—A short, quick, light or sight, or look into the gloom ; a short, slight view or perception.

The v.—To have or take a glimpse, or short, slight view or perception.

Either (Sk.) from Glimmering, or Ger. Gleissen, to shine. It appears to be, as Glimmer is, from Gleam.

GLISTEN, v. -ING. To shine, to glitter or glister, (qv.)

A. S. Glit-an, glis-nian ; Ger. Gleissen, to shine, to be bright. (See GLASS.) Hammond writes Glissen, and so it is not uncommonly pronounced.

GLISTER, v. s. -ING. To glisten,—to shine, sc. with sparks of light ; to emit or throw forth, sparks of light ; to glister or glitter.

D. Glisteren ; Ger. Glitzern, fulgere, scintillare ; from A. S. Glisnian ; Ger. Gleissen, to shine, to be bright.

GLISTER, s. i. e. Clyster, (qv.)

GLITTER, v. s. Glitter, Glister, and -ING. Glisten, (see the two latter,) are -INGLY. the same word variously written and pronounced ; and with very little difference in their application.

To shine ; to emit or throw forth, light ; to exhibit or display a bright, shining or showy appearance.

Spenser and H. More retain in this word the old A. S. participial term. and : Glitter-and, -muddy ; and some modern poets have used Glitterance.

GLOAT, GLOTE, or GLOUT, v. To warm, to kindle, to heat—with or while gazing ; to gaze eagerly, or with any warm or burning passion or sensation, with anger or ill-will, with eagerness or desire.

To gloat or glout,—D. Gloeyen ; Sw. -a ; Ger. Gluen ; A. S. Glowan, ignescere, candescere ; qd. incensis et præ ira flammantibus oculis consueri ; to heat, to kindle, to look with eyes heated and inflamed, with anger.—Sk. The word is formed upon the past *p. To speak or write fairly and speciously, to use fair or specious terms or language; and thus, —to soothe, to caress, to flatter, to delude; to have or give a specious, polished, or bright appearance.

GLOSS, v. s.

-ER. A gloss or glossary,—an explanation, an interpretation, a comment.

-IST.

-OGRAPHER. From A. S. Gles-an, adulari, (says Sk.) and this from Ger. Gleissen. A. S. Glitennan, micare, nitere; qd. nitidē, et speciosē loqui. Gloss, —the gloss of colours, he also believes to be from the same Ger. Gleissen, fulgere. The A. S. Gles-an, glitennan, glitennan, and Ger. Gleissen mean, —to be or cause to be clear or bright, plain or manifest; and thus, —to clear, explain, interpret; and further, as Sk. expresses it,—nitidē et speciosē loqui; to speak fairly and speciously; and hence, further,—adulari, to flatter. Fr. Gloss; It. & Sp. s; Eng. Gloss, or gloss, is derived by Men. from L. Glossa; Gr. Γλωσσα, as app. by the Greeks to the interpretation lingua secretoria, (Quinct. lib. l. c. 1.) The Gr. Γλωσσα is deduced by Lennep from γλω-ειν, polire; the obsolete theme of γλαιο, lubriscus; and thus the word may have travelled through the Gr. and L. from our northern languages, and returned upon us in some of the applications now in most common use.

GLOVE, v. s. -ER. Clothing for the hand, —cloven, to cover each finger separately.

A. S. Glof, which Hickee (Gram. A. S. p. 214.) says, is so called, à fasuris vel intercapedine digitorum, and which will then be derived from A. S. Glof-an, to cleave, (Serren. from Sw. Kluf-wa, findere.) Lye observes, that in Dan., Manica are called Haand-klofwer, a word comp. of hand, and klofwe, findere, to cleave. The Sw. Klof-wa denotes gen. every kind of clef or fissure.—Ihre. Un-

GNARR, v. Gnarr is app. to the snering GNARL-ED. noise of a dog; gen. to chiding —Y.* or complaints; and may be app. to knots of the oak, from their greater crash or creak in breaking or riving.

Chaucer also writes Knarry, (qv.)—full of gnarres or knots.—**Antonio's Revenge*, 1602. A. It was sometimes written Knarry. Gnarr (Tyrrw.) is a hard knot in a tree, and knarry full of gnarres or knots. It is sp. by Chaucer to the head; in modern vulgar Eng. the Knob.

GNASH, v. -ING. As com. app.—To rub, strike or dash the teeth together. Written by Wiclif, Gnast.

Dan. Knaask-er; D. Knaessen; Ger. Kneischen, dentibus frendere; which latter Wach. calls a frequentative from Kneissen, stridere, to creak.

A. S. Gnat; Gr. Κνίψ, cules.—Cassianus. But A. S. Nat-an, premere,—and thus, perhaps, gnagere, to prick,—with the usual prefix Ge, would form Ge-nat-an, gnat-an; and the reason of the application to this insect, from the prick or sting, would be plain.

GNAW, v. s. -ING. To press and tear asunder, sc. by the teeth; to fret or eat into by continued biting or action of the teeth; to corrode, to eat into, to prey upon.

The Dutch call gloves "handsken" Ven-Loek or Guetien 86.

this is derived from the Gr. Γνωμον, knowing, provident. See GNOMON.

Gr. Γνωμον, sententia. "Sententia—quas Græci γνωμον appellant: ntrumque autem nomen ex eo acceptum, quod similes sunt consiliis aut decretis."—Quintil. lib. viii. c. 5. They (sententia and γνωμον) have received their name from this—that they are like counsels and decrees.—See Men.

GO, s. Go (see COME) is a term expressing -EA, a particular species of motion. We -ISA. see a thing in motion, the distance from us lessens,—the thing approaches, and (we say) it comes; but if the distance increases,—the thing departs, and (we say) it goes. See WEND, and GE.

To go is usually interpreted in union with pro, or even with other words connected with it; and thus, improperly, the meaning of the whole phrase is ascribed to the single word.

To go aside, (sub. from the right way,)—to deviate, to err.

To go between, (sub. as mediator, intercessor,)—to mediate, to intercede, to interpose.

To go by, (sub. as a rule,)—to act by, or in obedience to, to obey.

To go over, (sub. from one party to another,)—to revolt.

To go, (with pro, or by inference) is equivalent to the words—To advance, to return, to proceed, to recede; to succeed; to pass.

To go, is—to move voluntarily or involuntarily; by the action of our own limbs, or by conveyance. Go is opposed by Chaucer to—ride; to ride or go, sc. on foot; to walk.

T. H. (in Sk.) from Fr. Gaule, a pole, a stake; because a pole, stuck or fixed in the ground, was used pro meta. The Fr. Gaule, Lye thinks, is manifestly from A. S. Ge-gæ, which denotes the same thing. Men. from L. Fallus.

GOAR, s. -ISH. A correspondent suggested to Mr. Tyrw. that Gore is a common name for a slip of cloth or linen, (q. alit or rent from the whole breadth,) which is inserted in order to widen a garment in any particular place. This sense, he adds, will suit very well with the context of (Chaucer) verse 3237, ("A barne-cloth, ful of many a gore,") but hardly with v. 13,719, ("An elf-queene shall slepe under my gore.") Gore-coat, (Grose, Supplement,)—a gown or petticoat gored, or so cut as to be broad at the bottom, and narrower at the upper end, such as may be seen in some ancient pictures, particularly of Queen Elizabeth. GOAT, s. An animal.

-ISH. Go. Gaitel; A. S. Got, get; D. Geyt; Ger. -HEERD. Geis; Sw. Get; Dan. Geed, which Jun. thinks may be from Gr. Χαίρη, coma, jubæ; the animal receiving its name in the northern languages from a Gr. word which expresses a quality peculiar to it, viz. its length of hair. Wach. thinks that Gitis, geiz, animal avidum, might be formed from A. S. Gyi-sean, cupere, concupiscere; and the animal be so called quia appetit non appetenda, sc. leaves, the bark, shoots of trees, especially of vines; (more probably so called from its lascivious propensity.) See GAT-ROOTE.

GOB, s. In the Glossary to Horns MO-BET. menta Cravenæ, Gob is said to be -BLE. "The mouth; also, a copious expectoration: lumps, as gobs of suet."—See also Brocket and Moor.

"A gob,—an open or wide mouth. Hence, To gobble,—to swallow greedily or with open mouth. Gob, in the South, signifies a large morsel or bit: so we say a good gob, i. e. a good segment or part. The dim. whereof is Gobbet, cut into gob-bets; perhaps from the Gr. word Κομμα, κομμα."—Catalogue of North Country Words, by Tomlinson, in Ray.

The more common word, Gob-et is app. to—A part or portion, a fragment, a piece; to a piece swallowed at one gulp.

To gobble,—to devour, to swallow large pieces; to swallow greedily; to make a noise by an action of the throat similar to that of swallowing greedily. "Gobble-cock,—turkey-cock."

"Fr. Gob, gobeau, and the v. Gober, to ravine, to devour; feed greedily; swallow great morsels, let down whole gobbets."—Cot. Sk. thinks it is not very absurd to derive the Fr. Gob from the v. Couper, to cleave. It is more probably from A. S. Ge-openian, (to gape, to open,) gop-enian, (and dropping the term.) gop, gob or gub; and app. cons. to the quantity received or ejected at one opening of the mouth.

GOBLET, s. A cup containing a large quantity for one opening of the mouth, for one draught or swallow.

Mld. L. Gobel, gobeletus; D. & Fr. Gobelet, which Jun. and others (see Mén.) think is akin to the Gr. Κυπελλον; more probably to gob, gobel,—and hence the explanation.

G O L

GOBLIN, s. App. to—An imaginary spirit, delighting in pranks of mischief; an elf.

Low L. Gobe-linus; Fr. -lin; Ger. Kobold, which Casaubon and other etymologists (on the authority of the Schollast upon Aristophanes) derive from the Gr. Κοβαλος. Mins., supported by Sk., from the Fr. Gober, to gobble, to devour; because nurses tell infants that such demons devour children whole.—See Du Cange, Mén. and Wach.

GOD, v. s. The Author of all good.

-DESS. God-father, A. S. God-fæder,
-DIZE, v. so called, because he prom-
-HEAD. ised before God that he
-HOOD. would be as a parent to that -LESS. infant, whose pater initialis
-LESSNESS. (i. e. whose father at his in-
-LY, ad. av. itiation or reception into -LILY. Christ's holy church) he was.
-LINESS. See GOSSIP, (i. e. God-sib.)
-LING. God, v. in Shak.—goddied me;
-SHIP. acted towards me as if I were
-CHILD. a god. So To be-god, (qv.)
-DAUGHTER. Goddize, v. is a coinage of -FATHER. Warner; -father-ed, of Burk.
-MOTHER. Go. Goth; A. S. God; D. Goed.
-SON. Ger. Gott; Sw. & Dan. Gud. This -WARD. word (says Jun.) is very clearly derived from Go. Goth; A. S. God, good; in D. Goed, in Ger. Gut; and Mina. God,
q. good, because God is only goodness. The A. S.
God, from v. Godian, juvare, meliorare; to aid or assist, to improve or better. Be- Un-

GOD-WIT, s. A bird.

Sk.—from God, i. e. good, and witla, an animal;
qd. avis bona, sapore grata. Serenius, from Is.
God, good, and vidde, preda venatione capta; vel, si mavis, vides, victus.

GOETY, s. The black art, devilish magic or witchcraft.—Cot.

Fr. Goétie; Gr. Tontra, from ton, præstigiator.

GOFFISH, ad. Fr. Goffe, dull, sottish, lumphish, doltish, blockish. Mr. Grose says, Goff, a foolish clown, (North.) Oaf, a foolish fellow, (North and South.) Goff appears to be Oaf, with the common A. S. pref. Ge. See OAF.

GOG, s. See AGOG, and GIG.—**Beau. & F.* From the A. S. Gan-gan, to go.

GOGGLE, v. s. -EYED. To move, to strain or stretch, the eye, (sc. a prominent, restless eye,) from one object to another.

Wiclif renders luseum, i. e. unoculum, goggle-eyed; but it seems very probable that Goggle is the diminutive of Gog, agog, and means moving, a moving eye; app. to a prominent, restless eye; or it may be from Oophel-en, the dim. of D. Oophen, with the prefix Ghe. (See OGLE.) Jun. thinks that the initial s being rejected, Goggle-eyed may be A. S. Scegl-eyede; but Scegl, or sceol, is Eng. Scowl; and sceol-eyes are separated eyes, or eyes looking different ways.

GOLD, s. Golden,—made of gold; having -EN. the qualities of gold. App. to colour,
-ENLY. having the colour of flame; a flame colour; a yellow colour. And further, bright or glaring; brilliant or splendid; having the value of gold; valuable, precious, highly to be prized or valued.

Sw. & Dan. Guld; Ger. Gold; D. Gout. See GILD.

G O O

GOLL, s. The hands.

**Massinger*. Beau. & F.

Sk. thluks, from A. S. Wieldan, (ge-wieldan,) to rule, to direct, (whence the Eng. Wield;) because we rule and direct all things by our hands; and he thinks it a truly elegant word.

GOME, s. App. gen. to—A man: corrupted into groom, (qv.)

**Piers Plouhman*. Lybeaus Disconus.

A. S. Guma, one who has the care of; from Gym-en, to take care of, guard, attend to.

GONDELAY, s. A small boat.

-DOLA. It. Gondola, -iera. Men. from Gee-DOLIER. dua, formed from Gr. Konda, which Hesychius interprets πορπιον βαρβαρον, κρηνην, a barbaric cup, a boat.

GONFANON, s. "A little square flag, or pennon at the end of a lance; or (more part.) an old fashioned banner, or square standard born on the top of a lance; such as, even at this day, is used in the wars made by the Pope."—Cot. It is app. gen. to—a standard, banner or ensign.

Gouffaucon, (Chaucer,) is (Sk. believes) incorrectly written for Gon-fanon or -fennon.

It. Gonfalon. Casen. says, "A word, the origin of which it is difficult to determine." Sk. from A. S. Gum-a, a man, and fano, a sign or ensign.

GONG, s. A. S. Gang, latrina, a privy, a jakes. Som.—from A. S. Gaggan, (pron. Gan-gan), to go; because (Sk.) all go thither for themselves, and not by deputy; more probably because all that entereth into the belly goeth thither.

**Chaucer*. Fabyan.

GONG, s. A musical instrument, struck as the drum, (in the East.)

GOOD, ad. s. av. Good is very extensively

-LY, ad. av. and very variously app.—

-LYHEAD. Serving, conducting or convenient, gen. to any end or purpose; serviceable, beneficial,

-NESS. profitable; useful, able; suitable, fit.

-YSHIP. Serving, or conducting to, health

-LESS.* or happiness; salutary, salubrious, wholesome; cheering or cheerful, kindly, benevolent or beneficent; prosperous, happy.

Conducting to, or causing, any pleasing or agreeable sensations; pleasing or gratifying or agreeable to the taste.

Serving, aiding or assisting, the completion or fulfilment, the validity or force, the virtue, the value; complete or full, valid, forceful, valuable; virtuous; worthy of credit or consideration, esteem or honour; creditable, considerable, estimable, honest or honourable.

Goody,—i. e. good-wife.

Good is much used pref.

**Chaucer*. †Gower.

Go. Gode; A. S. God; Dan. & D. God; Ger. Gott; Sw. God. Jun. remarks, that (in the Index Argenteus), guth passim est bonum, whence he infers that guth is taken e medio Gr. Agathos. It. prefers L. Gaudes. It is from A. S. God-ian, juvare, prodesse, meliorare, facere, meliorescere, bono cedere, conducere, ditare; to serve or assist; to aid, to benefit, to profit, to prosper; to advance or confer an advantage; to promote, to forward the welfare or wellbeing. Tooke (see Svo. ed. vol. II.) suggests, "Goosed; perhaps Gowed, written and pronounced Good, which the Sc. pronounce and write Gude." See OWL. Un-

GOOSE, s. A bird. App. met. from the -ERY. bird, to—Any thing silly.

GOZZARD, A. S. Goe; D. Goez, gans; Ger. Gans; Dan. Gæs. See GANDER.

GOOSEBERRY, s. A tree; a fruit. Perhaps goose-berry; so named from the prickliness of the wood. See GORSE.

Sk. thinks so called, because the juice of these berries, when half ripe, are the best sauce to a goose. Jun. suspects that the name was orig. Grosberrie, corrupted from Fr. Groiselle, (groselle), and that by a further corruption, our gooseberry was formed. Our Eng. gardeners say, so called from its gross or thick skin. The Fr. from the resemblance of the berries to those of the grossus or unripe fig.

GOR-BELLY, -IED. See GORE.

GOR-CROW. See GORE.

GORDIAN, ad. Gordian knots, so called from Gordius, a ploughman, and afterwards king of Phrygia, who "folded and knitt a rope with many knots, one so wrethed within another, that no mā could perceive the manner of it, neither where the knottes began, nor where they ended." And as there was a prophecy, "that he should be lord of all Asia that could undo the endles knott," Alexander, fearful of the consequences of failing to undo it, "out of hande cutt with his sworde the cordes asunder, thereby either illuding or els fulfilling the effect of the prophceye."—Brende's Q. Curtius, fol. 20.

GORE, s. -Y. To gore,—to cause gore, to expel or emit, to discharge, to shed gore; and gen.—to stick or stab, to pierce or penetrate. And hence probably, a goar or gore,—a slit. See GOAR.

Gore-bellied, (says Sk.) either from Gore, sanguis, tabum, or Gor, cernum;—Gor and Gore are the same word diff. app. Som. has Ge-horwigend, scoldish, unclean, corrupt, vile, sordid, growing hoary or sinewy; and this is from A. S. v. Harian, (with the usual pref. Ge.) Ge-harian, by contraction, Ger (pronounced broad gawr) -ian, canescere, mutescere; to wax gray or hoary, to grow musty, mouldy, or hoary. The ad. Ge-hor (by contraction, gore or gor), might be first extended in its application to the filth arising from mouldiness, and thence to any filth, corruption, or pollution, and more part to that occasioned by the slaughter of animals; as gory blood, gore-blood, a mixture of blood and filth. Hence, Ger, without the affix,—blood, carnage; and Gorebelly,—a belly filled with or greedy of meat: Gor-crow,—a crow feeding on flesh or carrion. To gore, Sk. thinks may be contracted from A. S. Geborian, to bore, to perforate. Jun. observes,—"Anglis quoque is dicitur gored, cujus illa perforata graveolentia excrementorum spurcitiam egerunt." Be-Ea-

GORGE, v. s. To swallow or pass down the throat, to feed gluttonously, to cram the stomach, to glut.

Fr. Gorgier, engorgier; It. In-gorgiare, -gurgiare, from L. Gurgies; which, as Sk. observes, was used even in the purer ages of the L. tongue, for helluo, a glutton. The shrill-gorged lark, in Shak. is "the shrill-throated." Dis-En-In-Over-Re-Un-

GORGEOUS, ad. Luxuriously, richly, -LY. sumptuously, adorned; gay or -NESS. showy; splendid or magnificent. Fr. Gorgias. Probably from Gorge, and transferred from the palate to the eye.

GORGET, s. A collar, (Sk.) so called, because it covers the gorge, or gullet; the throat. Fr. Gorg-erin; It. -ietta.

GORGON, s. ad. -IAN. Poetically extended in its application to—Any thing terrible, dreadful, frightful.

Gorgon, in Spenser, ("Great Gorgon, prince of darknesse and dead night," ) is demogorgon, (qv.)

Gr. Γοργών, Gorgo; from γοργος, vividus, acer, terribilis; and hence app. to Medusa.

GORMAND. See GOURMAND.

GORSE, s. A plant.

A. S. Georst, gors. Gorse,—furz, furbush.—Som. Goss,—furze.—Grose, (Kent.) Probably past p. Georsod of Ge-gryrian, irasci; and the plant so called from its painful prickliness. See FURZE, and GOOSEBERRY.

GOS-HAWK, s. A hawk so called because flown at geese.—Sk. And Pennant tells us, "The goshawk was in high esteem among falconers, and flown at cranes, geese, pheasants, and partridges." Gross-hawk, or great-hawk, (Mins.); "but," adds Sk., "I far prefer the former."

GOSLING, s. A dim. of Goose, (qv.)

GOSPEL, s. "The original word, (Ewery-L-ED. γελιον,) which is expressed in our -ER. English Bibles by the word Go-ING. spel, signifies good news, a joyful -IZE,* v. message, or glad tidings; and our English word Gospel, traced to its original in the Teutonic language, is found to carry precisely the same import, being a compound of two words,—an ad. signifying good,—and a s. which signifies a tale, message, or declaration."—Horsley.

Gospelled, in Shak.—obedient to the precepts of the Gospel.—Milton.

A. S. God-spell, derived by some from God, Deus, and spell, sermo, historia; by others, from God, bonus, and spell, nuntium, q. bonum nuntium, good tidings; and thus agreeing with Gr. Εὐαγγέλιον, (of which it is probably a translation.) Som. knows not which to prefer. Jun. adopts the latter. Camden says, "The gladsome tidings of our salvation, which the Greeks call euanpelion; and other nations, in the same word, they called God-spell, that is God's speech." Jun. remarks, that the Eng. language retains this word, but in the German it has been suffered to perish. Dis-Un-

GOSSAMER, s. Not only app. to—The morning dew that like a spider's web covers whole fields; but to—

Webs or filmy substances floating in the air. Also met.

The Author of the English Dictionary (says Sk.) so calls that morning dew (diurno sole exsiccatum) which, like a spider's web, covers whole fields, more especially after a length of fine weather. He derives it from Fr. Gossampine; L. Gossipium, the plant that bears cotton. The Author of Horn's Momenta Cravenæ tells us that the true etymon of this word is obvious to many illiterate peasants in Craven: this down or exhalation being well known by the name of summer goose or summer gauze; hence "Gauze o' th' summer," Gossamer, alias Gossamer. But he should consider whether a word, thus so apparently indigenous, must not have been familiar in the language before the introduction of the word gauze, (qv.) In the King of Fairs (cited by Jamieson) it is written Gar-summer. In Chaucer, Gos-somer. The Germans (as Dr. J. also remarks) call it Sommer-weber and Weber-sommer, i. e. the webs of summer; which may seem to countenance the presumed discovery of the Cravenist,—but it has already been shown that gar or gor, means hoar; and hence, probably, Gar or Gor-summer is summer's hoar, in opposition to winter's hoar, or hoar frost.

GOSSIP, v. s. A sponsor for an infant -ING. in baptism; a talking, tattling, or -RY. tipping companion.

Sponsors for an infant in baptism, from A. S. God, and sib or syb, (qv.) cognatio, affinitas, kindred, affinity; qd. cognatus in Deo, of kin in God. And this affinity (says Sk.) was considered of so much consequence, that by the Canon Law an intermarriage was forbidden between god-sibs to the same child, as if the nearest of kin. And as (says Jun.) female gossips frequently, under cloak of this spiritual relationship, used to meet to tell stories and tittle over them, hence the Eng. derived the expressions, to go a gossiping; also, a gadding and drunken gossip.

GOTH, s. Gothic, ad. is sometimes used as -IC, s. equivalent to—barbarous, uncivilized.

"Gothi, olim Getae; a vernaculo suo jai, id est, gipas, denominati."—Spel. Sk. enumerates three other etyms. —1, from Ger. Got, Deus, and ithenen, servire; 2, from A. S. God, Ger. Gott, Deus, qd. divinus populus; or 3, from God, good, from their great virtues. But the Get-æ, and S-cyt-hæ, were the same people; and the name, with the mere difference of the initial S, is the same. (See letter S.) And Go. Skivla, A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot, is a supposed origin. — See Jamieson, Hermes Seythicus, Diss. p. 6.

GOVE,* v. Gove,—is Ge-hove, i. e. hove or heaved, raised or thrown up.—**Tusser*.

Ray says, a goff is a mow of hay or corn. (Essex.) and Moor, in his Suffolk Words, writes it Goof, or Goaf. Tusser speaks of the Gofe-ladder, or ladder to mount the Goaf, or mow.

GOVERN, v. To rule or regulate, guide -ABLE or direct, the motions or actions; -ANCE. gen.—to rule, guide, or direct; -ESS. have or exercise power or authority over; to have the mastery, to -ING. restrain.—**Spenser*. †Chaucer.

-OUR. Fr. Gouverner; It. Governare; Sp. Gobernar; L. Gubernare; Gr. κυβερναειν.

-AL.* A common derivation is κυβη εβαιν-αυ, κλυκτυμ scrutari, (see Martin); but according to Lennep, compounded of κυβος, caput, the head, and an unused v. επι-ειν, frequentier

movens, to move frequently; κυβερναω, igitur (he adds) est caput agito, quod est gubernare. Scheidius observes, that the Æolians wrote κυβερνητης, which makes him suspect that the word is compounded of κυβη, a wave, and ειν-ειν, to move; and that κυβερνητης was, qui fluctus movens, motor fluctuum, one who moves, or a mover of, the waves. Co-Mis-Sub-Un-

GOUGE, v. Fr. Gouge. A joiner's tool, says Men.; from Guvia, mot Gaulois. "I will saue in cork in my mere stop'ing: by gouging of 'hem out just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing."—B. Jonson.

The word is used by the North Americans, who in their savage quarrels not unfrequently gouge out eyes.

GOUGEERS, s. A disease.

The Goujeres, i. e. morbus gallicus. Gouge, R. signifies one of the common women attending a camp; and thus, Goujeers, gougeries, the disease incident to and derived from the gouges. In the first folio Shak. written good yeares. Sir Thomas Hanmer has the credit of making the correction and explaining the word.

GOURD, s. A plant. Chaucer writes, "I have here in my gourd a draught of win;" and Cook tells us, that of gourd shells are made vessels that serve as bottles to hold water, and baskets for their victuals, &c.

Fr. Gohourde, from L. Cucurbita.—Mém.

GOURMAND, v. s. To eat greedily or -ER. gluttonously, to devour ravenously, v. s. ously.

Fr. Gourmander. Of unsettled origin. Perhaps corrupted from Gouat and masquer; and thus signifying, to eat with taste or relish, with appetite, with greediness.

GOUT, s. -Y. A disease.

Fr. Goutte; It. Got-ta; Sp. -a; Bar. L. Goutte; from L. Gutta, a drop. (say Sk. and Jun.) i. e. (the former, who was a physician, adds,) "distillatio vel catarrhus in articulis." In Gr. Podagra; and Pliny observes, that "if it had been known to the Italians in old time, I doubt not but it would have found a Latin name to be called by."

GOUT,* s. A drop. Farmer says, that gouts for drops is frequent in old Eng.

**Shak.* Fr. Goutte; L. Gutta.

GOWK,* v. -Y.† See GAWK.

**B. Jonson*. †P. Ploughman.

GOWN, s. App. to—A long open garment; as a lawyer's gown, a mourning gown for men. It is also now app. to—garments not open; as a round gown.

Fr. Gon-ne, nalle; It. -na; Low L. Gown; and Bar. Gr. Gouva, which Spel. thinks may be from γούνα pro γούνατα, i. e. genna, q. vestis que genua tegit, ut humeralis que humeros, potera que pedes: but this does not seem to be the proper use of the word. Is not a gown an open garment, open in the front? and may it not be from A. R. Gin-an, hiare, to gawn?

GRABBLE, v. To feel, ac. as if to find something; as if to find the way we should go.

"And so [Cato] went forward at adventure, taking extream and incredible pains, and in much danger of his life, grabbling all night in the dark without moonlight, through wild olive trees, and high rocks."—North, Plutarch.

A. S. Græpian, to feel, to handle, to grab or grasp.—Som. Of this obsolete Græb, Græble has dim.

GRACE, s. v. App. to.—An open (countenance); a serene, calm, benignant, (countenance); free good-will or kindness; favour, favourable or kind appearance, (gen.) pleasing appearance: also to—the effect of favour, of beneficence, of God's favour. And the v.—

Grace, the s. is app. as a title of honour; also, to the thanks (gratias) offered before or after meals. The Gloss. to Wiclif refers to Mark xiv. for graces (thanks), but the word is not there: the constant expression of Wiclif is "to do thankings."

Grateful (in Winter's Tale.)—full of grace. Gracious, sometimes, as we now use grateful.—*Holland.

Fr. a. Gracia; It. -zia; Sp. -cia; L. Gratia, grat-ia; grates, from Gr. Xapivres, by metathesis for grates; and this from xap-iv, gaudere; which Lennep and Scheidius derive from xo-iv, gaudere; and the latter adds, that the v. xo-iv, seems to be equivalent to L.—Episcopat, expositio, frons case, opposed ad frontem in rugas convulsas, tristern, ansteram; and that hence is deduced the notion—animi liberalis et bene conditi: and thus it may be considered as having been primarily app. Ag-Be-Dis- (En-) In-Re- (Is-) Un-

Gradely,—orderly, decently,—still in use in the North.—Brockett.

Grade, s. has crept into frequent use; it is not wanted, and is a harsh monosyllable.

GRANIVOROUS. Granivorous,—devouring, eating, feeding, upon grain.

Grain, three words, though com. classed together, and the two latter, sometimes, not very clearly distinguished in their use.—1. From L.
Grassum, a grain of corn. 2. From A. S. Gren-ian, virescere, to grow. 3. From A. S. Geregn-an, in- dicere, to dye or dip, to stain or colour.

Grain,—Fr. Grain; It. & Sp. Grano; Dan. Gran;
 L. Grassum, which Var. thinks is—a Gerendo.
 May it not rather be from the A. S. v. Gren-ian,
virescere?

GRAIN, v. s. -ING. Grain,—the growth, or line, or direction of growth; sc. of fibres in wood, or other matter. Met.—the direction, tendency, or inclination of the mind, the disposition or humour.

Grained, cons.—rugged, harsh; marked with lines, incisions or indentations.

From A. S. Gren-ian, virescere, to grow; and thus confirming Sk.'s notion of the meaning of the word, when used—pro fibrarum in ligno recti- tudine, for the direction of the fibres in wood, sc. the growing of wood, (i. e.) modus quo materia
crecendo extenditur.

GRAIN, s. -ED. The dye, stain, or colour.

Fr. Graine; It. & Sp. Grana. From A. S. Ge- regn-an, (Greg-n, -an, grey-n-an), indicere, to dye or dip, to stain or colour; to have or give a grey- en or grey colour. En- In-

GRAITH, s. v. s. To make ready, to fit, to prepare; to prepare the way or means;
 to put in motion.

In Chaucer and older writers,—Greyth or Greith.—**P. Ploukman*. Chaucer.

Sk. and the Gloss. to G. Douglas, Ge-red-an, to make ready, fit, prepara. (See also Jamieson.)
 Brockett gives Grath and Grathing, as still in use

Grampus. (a fish) from the French Grand poisson. see Curious Rept. An. Cetac.

GRA

in the north of England, though somewhat limited in the application.

GRAM, v. s. Sk. says, it is explained,—sorrow, punishment; also,—to vex. And Tyrwhitt,—grief, anger. See also Jamieson. Chaucer and Gower,—Grame.

GRAM-MERCY, int. Grand-mercis,—great thanks.—Tyrw. In the fol. 1598 of Chaucer, it is written Graunt-mercy.

Fr. Grammercy; qd. grandem mercedem tibi det Deus.—Sk.

GRAMINEOUS, ad. -NIVOROUS. Gramineous,—grassy.

Graminivorous,—devouring, eating, feeding upon grass.

L. Gramineus, from Gramen, grass.

GRAMMAR, s. "Grammar is the art of -ARIAN. true and well speaking a language; the writing is but an -AT-IC. accident"—B. Jonson.

-ICAL. Grammatician,—one skilled in grammar.

-ICALLY. Grammarian,—one skilled in grammar.

-ICASTER. grammar.

-ICISE, v. Grammat-ist, -icaster,—one superficially skilled, pretending to a skill in grammar.

Grammar is not unusually app. to—the rudiments, the elements of any art or science; to a book teaching them.

Fr. Grammaire; It. Sp. & L. Grammatica; Gr. Γραμματικὴ,—αὐτὴ τῶν γραμμάτων, hoc est, à litteris dicta ars Grammaticæ quia veteribus eo nomine censebatur γραμματικὴ, hoc est, ars legendi, scribendique.—Voss. Un-

GRANADO, s. -DIER. A hollow ball of iron. More com. now Grenadier.

Sp. Granada; Fr. Granade; globus pyrobolus, which Sk. says, is named either from its likeness to a pome-granate, or because it is filled with grains of powder.

GRANATE, or GRANITE, s. Granate, or Garnet, app. to—a precious stone. See GARNET.

Granate or Granite, app. to—a kind of stone or marble, so called from the distinctness and minuteness of its grains; or, as Sk. says, because the spots, like grains of corn, are small and round.

GRAND, ad. Grand is app. to any thing—

-LY. Great or large, by heaping up or

-NESS. accumulating; great or large,

-EUR. gen.; great in height; eminent,

-EE. lofty; great in extent; extended,

-EESHIP. expanded. Met.—eminent, chief,

-EVITY. elevated, lofty; magnificent.

-ITY.† Grand is also app. to denote—

-LING.† great in years, as grand-father,—the father's father; and its correlative,—grand-son.

**Glanvill*. †Camden. ‡B. Jonson.

Fr. Grand; It. & Sp. Grande; L. Grandis, which some, (Voss.) think is from Gerendis, quia multa aggerantur; he himself thinks it is from

GRA

Grassum; for these things are called Grassia in its first signification, quæ habent Grass; and be instances the application of the word to fraps, framenta; but Grassum itself is, according to Var. a Gerendo. See GRAIN.

GRANGE, v. s. -EE. A granary; a house with a granary attached; a farm house.

Grange, v. as used in a letter quoted by Birch, "To grange and truck causes,"—to farm, to deal or traffic in.

Fr. Grange; Low L. Grangia, (of which Spel Du Cange, and Voss. have written to the same effect.) Sk. says, Granarium, horreum, qd. Granium vel granicum, from L. Grassum; and in Lincolnshire it denotes a house or farm, afar from other houses or villages; and so called, perhaps, because such houses were provided or furnished with granaries. See the Commentators on Stat. Othello, (Act I. sc. 1.)—Measure for Measure, (Act III. sc. 1.)

GRANITE. See GRANATE.

GRANNAM, s. i. e. Grandum. See GRAND.

GRANT, v. s. As now used, To grant is, -ABLE. in its most ordinary usages, equivalent to—

-OR. To give, to bestow, to concede, to yield, to allow.

Sk. and Jun. from the Fr. Garantir; i. e. sup. the latter, patrocinium summi allen aditor, et its reddere securum. He notices that in the middle ages Garantire was used for Warranzare, of Teut. origin. And Men. derives from Ger. Waren, which itself is from A. S. Varian, ge-warian, cavere, providere, custodire, defendere, to provide or foresee, to keep or guard, to defend; and thus, To grant will mean,—to confirm or secure, sc. the possession of a thing to another, to guarantee it. The grant (concession,) and the warrant (warrantia), were, however, at one period of our law, very distinct things, whatever they may have been at an earlier age. Re- Un-

GRANULATE, s. To reduce to grains; -ULATION. to form into minute particles.

-ULARY. Fr. Granular. See GRAIN.

-ULE.

GRAPE, s. A tree; the fruit of the tree.

Sk., perhaps from D. Gripen, (A. S. Gripan), prehendere, clauso pugno tenere, qd. manipulus; to catch in the hand, to hold in closed hand, qd. a handful. And see PELUS.

GRAPHIC, ad. Able to, that can or -AL. may, describe or delineate; and

-ALLY. thus, cons.—ably, skilfully, effectively described, delineated, portrayed or expressed.

Gr. Γραφικος, from γραφειν, to grave, to describe or delineate.

GRAPNEL, s. An anchor with (two) hooks. Fr. Grapp-pin, -pill. See GRAPPLE.

GRAPPLE, v. s. To seize, to hold in

-ING. the hand, in the grape or grasp of

-MENT. the hand; to fix or hold fast; to struggle with any thing griped, or grasped, or held fast.—"Spenser.

Grapple - from gripe, grasp or grasp.

D. Grabbales; Ger. Kaappeln, rapere, prehendere, to seize, to take or hold in the hand, (Sk.); from the v. To gripe, (qv.) A. S. Gripan; Go. Gripas, prehendere, apprehendere, comprehendere. En-In-

GRASP, v. s. To hold or embrace in the hand; gen.—to hold or embrace, -EL, s. s. to compress, to press together, to -LER, s. seize.—**Brende*.

-Y. Grass-hopper,—an insect so called from its motion in the grass.

Go. Gras; A. S. Gras, gars; D. Grass, gars; Ger. Gras; Dan. & Sw. Gras. Jun. refers to Gr. Krasen, or sparsen, gramen; Sk.—to A. S. Gras-en, to grow, crescere, (quod in agris ubique avolat.) Ilus and Wach are to the same effect as Sk. Tonke, the past p. of Gras-ian, to graze. (See Grass.) Sw. Grasshoppa, cicada; sic dicta, quia per herbas subitum ludit.—Ilus. Over-

GRASSATION,* s. A progress, or procession.—**Fellham*.

L. Grassatio, from grassari, and this from grabi. See GRADE.

GRATE, s. That which holds, incloses, -ING, or confines; app. to the bars by -EN, which persons or things are confined; as the grate of a prison, of a stove, or fire-place.

Grating, s. is common in speech. See CRATE.

L. Grata; L. Crates, crato τὸν κρατίν, tenera, continere, quia lignum unum alterum tenet; (Voss.); quod sit, oves, porcos, atque alia animalia includamus continemusque; because we enclose and confine in them sheep, swine, and other animals.—Jun.

GRATE, v. To rub; so as to cause a -EN, harsh, discordant sound; to rub -ING, two bodies together, so as to reduce one or both to small particles; met.—to rub harshly upon the thoughts or feelings.

Fr. Grater; It. terre; Low L. Gratiare. Sk.—from Gratere. Men.—from Rader; rado, rad, rauo, ratum, ratere, gratere, grater. In Ger. it is Kratzen.

GRATE, ad. Grateful,—Full of joy, causing joy, or pleasure, or delight;

-FULLY, pleasing, delightful, agreeable;

-FULNESS, bearing good-will or kindness;

-IFY, s. and thus app. to the return or

-IFICATION, reciprocation of good-will or

-IVER, kindness, of services performed, of

-ITUD, of benefits bestowed; thankful, grateful, or desirous, to return a service or benefit.

"Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like, as the occasion of the doer of it shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to."—South.

"Gratitude is a pleasant affection, excited by a lively sense of benefits received or intended, or even by the desire of being beneficial. It is the lively and powerful reaction of a well-disposed mind, upon whom benevolence has conferred some important good."—Cogan.

To gratify, (in Hall,) as we now use To congratulate: "Philip sent to him diuers notable personages, to gratify and welcome him into those partes."

Gratification, (in Hackluyt,)—congratulation: "She sent an upper gown of cloth of gold very rich, &c. with a letter of gratification."

Fr. Grat-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Gratus; Grates, from Gr. Kapites, from χαίρειν, gaudere, (see GRACE,) to rejoice. In-Un-

GRATUITY, s. App. to—Any thing -OUS, given from mere kindness or good-

-OUSLY, will; a voluntary or free gift, not

GRATIS, stipulated or bargained for, for which no return is expected.

Fr. Gratuit; Sp. & It. ad. -uito; L. Gratuitus. See GRATEFUL.

GRATULATE, v. To express good-will

-ATION, or kindness, joy or pleasure; to

-ATORY, express or declare joy or plea-

-ING, ad. sure at the good fortune or happiness of another; to welcome.

GRAVEL, v. s. -LY. To gravel,—to cover or overlay with gravel; to stick or be set fast in the gravel; met.—to stick or set fast, to embarrass, to perplex.

Fr. Grav-el, -ter, -ois; It. -ella; D. -sel. Sk. thinks, either from L. Glarcola, (i in r, and r in e mutatis,) or—à gravando; because ships are loaded with gravel as ballast. Seren refers it to grave, to dig out; not without some appearance of probability.

GRAVY, s. The juice that flows from flesh when dressed, or while dressing.

This word, though as old as Chapman, is not found in any of our old Dictionaries. Jun. has

Graves, which he explains, the juice of boiled or roast meat, remaining in the dish after the meat is cut into pieces. And in Sw. Gref-war is sordes; whence probably Graves, (qv.)

GRAY. See GREY.

GRAY, s. A Badger, or Brock.

It. Graso; Fr. Grisarde; so called, ni fallor, (Sk.) from the colour.

GRAYLING, s. A fish of the salmon tribe. Perhaps (Sk.) so called, à colore cinereo.

GRAYNARDS,* s. i. e. Granaries.

**Sir T. Elyot.*

GRAZE, v. To feed upon, to eat, to bite,

-ER. to bite close, without destroying the

-IER. root.

-ING. To graze, sc. the skin,—to tear up the surface, to rub or touch lightly, gently, in passing over.

A. S. Græ-tan, pascere, depascere, to feed upon; (perhaps ge-rai-tan, to raise, and græ-tan, lit. to raise, pull or pluck up.) and graze, that which is fed upon, sc. by cattle.

GREASE, v. s. To rub over, to cover with

-Y. grease, with a fat, unctuous, or oily

-ILY. substance; met. (as any thing

-INESS. greased is more easily moved or dragged) to grease is,—to use, employ, or apply some influence or inducement, to pay well, to hire, to bribe.

Fr. s. Grasse; It. Grasso, from L. Crassus, because crasso, that is (pinguis) fat bodies abound in grasso (adipis).—Sk. See Grass.

GREAT, s. ad. To greaten is,—to increase,

-EN, v. grow, or augment in size; to en-

-LY. large, to magnify, to aggrandize.

-NESS. And Great, the ad.—Increased,

-NING. grown or augmented in size, quantity, or number; enlarged, magnified, extended, filled. Great in power or wealth,—powerful, wealthy, opulent; in rank, consequence or authority,—eminent, illustrious, authoritative, important; pre-eminent, grand.

To be great with any one,—i. e. to be on terms of great intimacy or friendship. In the North of England, they say, such a person is thick with another; i. e. keeps close company, is on terms of close intimacy. Dr. Jamieson (needlessly) gives a different etym. for great so used.
